LAW AND LIBERTY.*

Law is the condition of Liberty. Where Law is not, Will prevails, whether it be the Will of the One or of the Few or of the Many. Law is not the foundation of the State but the norm and regulation of the Force or Power that founds and maintains the State. Law makes it possible for the State and the people of a State to live a life of Liberty. Law is not a restriction on Liberty, it makes an arena, a canal for Liberty and thus energises it so that it may not overflow its banks. Whether, as in early times, in the form of Custom or later, in more political times, in the form of written Law, made by the deliberate and conscious action of man, Law has prevented the arbitrary will of man or any body of men from governing and regulating the life of the State. For, the properties of law, as Burke pointed out, are, firstly, that it should be known; secondly, that it should be fixed and not occasional, and, if we may add a third characteristic from Aristotle, that it is observed, for, to enforce obedience to the law, which it makes, is a proof of a good constitution of a State. While Law can be without Liberty—there can be systems of law made and developed by despotic governments like those of the ancient East and the later Roman empire—Liberty cannot exist without Law. The history of Liberty is in a large measure the history of the influence of Law in the government of man. At first whether primitive society was, as I believe, largely patriarchal and only exceptionally matriarchal, or not, Custom was the law of society.

*Lecture delivered on 13th February, 1939, by Mr. M. Ruthnaswami, M.A., C.I.E., of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, Member, Public Services Commission, Madras, under the auspices of the Madras Advocates' Association in connection with its Golden Jubilee celebrations under the Presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar.

The Leges Barbarorum of the German tribes, the Torah of the Jews, the Dooms of early English peoples, the Customs of Indian castes and tribes gave these peoples regularity, restraint and routine.

The rulers of custom-bound peoples were hardly despotic. They were as much bound as the peoples whom they governed. And then, when as a result of war and conquest, the authority of the chief increased, Custom gradually was transformed into Law. It came to be written, and codified. The Code of Hammurabi, the Twelve tables of Rome, the Brehon Laws of ancient Ireland, and the Code of Manu were still further steps in the growth of the influence of Law in human society. And this growing influence was in the direction of Liberty. For, however much restraint these ancient systems of Law may have placed on the activities of individuals or groups, they left still considerable areas of human activity to the freedom of individual initiative and movement. Even when they ruled a large part of man's life, as in the Code of Manu, yet they served the cause of Liberty, for, being written, known for certain and of general application, they freed man and society from the tyranny of the arbitrary will of individuals or groups.

No further step forward in the promotion of Liberty by Law could be taken as long as Law, as a result of this codification, was itself unfree. The principle of freedom had to be introduced into Law itself before Law could serve the cause of freedom. This work had been done for Europe in the later history of Roman Law. The Prætor's Edict, the Responsa Prudentium, and the Emperor's Rescript applied Reason to the development of the Law. But the Reason was that of a despot who legislated according to the maxim Quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem. The will of the Prince had the force of law. Progress, but not freedom, could be served that way. It was with the coming of new peoples and of a new way and philosophy of life that Freedom was to enter into the history of Law. It was with the coming of the German tribes and of Christianity into Europe that the history of the relations between Law and Liberty begins. The primitive republicanism of the German tribes, their corporate life and self-government, their attachment to custom, and their ignorance of the State, would not tolerate the centralized despotism of the later Roman empire. And Christianity which came to meet the Roman empire as a corporate Church, and with claims to the freedom of religious life was fundamentally opposed to absolutism in Law or Politics. These two influences combined soon began to operate on the Law of Europe in the direction of Liberty. The German tribes brought with them the idea and the practice of the people having a part in the making of law and the administration of justice. And the seeds of parliamentary government and the jury-system, these two props of English Liberty, were sown, though through royal Norman drills. Christianity, with the novel institution of the Church, unknown to pre-Christian times, and its own law, Canon Law, cut away large slices from the jurisdiction of the State and secular law. As you know, till late in English history Marriage and Will were under the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts. The principles of Equality, Liberty and Justice came gradually to be introduced in the tribal law and customs of the Saxons, the English and the Danes and slowly humanized and rationalized the administration of criminal justice. The rules of equity and good conscience influenced the decisions of the Court of Chancery. That, according to Maitland, saved Liberty against Roman jurisprudence and despotism. The Will, that instrument of liberty and progress, came to modify the rule of the dead hand of the customary disposal of property by Primogeniture or Borough English.

The Roman Imperial polity did not fail to influence the constitution of the early mediæval monarchies. It was especially in the field of judicial administration that this was felt. The Normans in England, Southern Italy and Sicily, the Capets in France took their idea of a royal, centralized administration of justice from the traditions of Roman imperial rule. To confine ourselves to England from whom we derive our modern system of administration of Justice, it was in the first place good for the development of Liberty that the court of justice was the first form of administration to shoot itself out of the royal court and household. The Judiciary thus acquired prestige and power which was to stand it in good stead and serve the cause of Liberty. The centralisation of the royal courts, which also went on eyre or circuit all over the country, the staffing of the judicial bench by professional justices, the building up of a common law out of the laws of the English as well as of ideas from Canon Law, French capitaluries and from the Roman law books, and the superiority of this royal justice in speed and satisfaction to the old courts of the hundred and the shire, and to the new manorial courts of the feudal barons, brought about the legal unity of England.

The jury which was in its origin "French rather than English, rather royal than popular, rather the livery of conquest, than a body of freedom," brought popular representation into the administration of justice. Not only the Bench, but the Bar was early organized in England. The Bar in England also began its existence under royal auspices under Edward I, a process the details of which are still very obscure, and was instituted by the king. This brought the professional pleaders and the professional attorneys under the control of the judges and began to secure a monopoly of practice to those that had been formally ordained to the ministry of the law. The Inns of Court consisting of practising lawyers combined themselves into a guild of lawyers and had a monopoly of legal education. About that time members of the Bar began climbing to the Bench and the judges were ceasing to be ecclesiastics. About that time, the old Curia of the Norman kings was dividing itself into the King's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas or the Common Bench, the Court of Exchequer, and the great Court of Chancery. Another cause that contributed to the development of the Judiciary as a free and powerful institution was that the development of the law was largely in its hands. Parliament was not in those days so fond of making laws as it is to-day. Although the Parliament of the 13th and 14th centuries did legislate in general, they left the ordinary law of the land and the development of the common law to the lawyers. Even in the time of the Tudors and the Stuarts the Star Chamber and the Chancery, although they were dangerous for Liberty, served to preserve Common Law for, but for these institutions, as Maitland has shown, the old-fashioned national law unable out of its own resources to meet the requirements of the new age of commerce, maritime development and colonization and international intercourse, would have utterly broken down and the "ungodly jumble," as Cromwell called, it of English common law would have made way for Roman jurisprudence and for despotism.

It was these traditions of a centralized, free and independent Judiciary that came to India when the foundations of the British administration of justice were laid in the country. As in Meetings Acts, Defence of India Acts and by the use of old Regulations like that of 1818 to be explained by peculiar and temporary conditions and circumstances. Yet the core of Liberty stands. In India, as in England, whatever restrictions on fundamental liberties exist, are to be found in the civil and especially in the criminal law and not in administrative powers or discretion. The separation of powers is not provided for, but is recognised by the Government of India Act, though the independence of the Judiciary is assured by the provisions in regard to the tenure and salaries of Judges of the High Courts and the Federal Court. The separation of powers is not absolute and rigid in British India. Nor is it in England and in the U.S.A. Montesquieu's doctrine which was based upon a misunderstanding of the facts of the English constitution, has to be interpreted in the sense of Madison, one of the makers of the constitution of the U.S.A., namely, "that the whole power of one department should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of another department." Otherwise the Ministry could not be part of the Legislature as in England and the Senate could not take part in the executive act of appointment of judges and other high officials in the U.S.A. And on the vexata quaestio of the separation of the Executive from the Judiciary in India, this argument I have not found used by the supporters of the small admixture of judicial and executive functions, which obtains in the case of English justices of the Peace as in that of Indian Collectors and Magistrates. But the strongest shield of Liberty, the independence of the Judiciary is secured. It would be still more secure if, except in regard to appointments which, everywhere is the function of the Executive, administrative functions in regard to postings, transfers and promotions lay in the hands of the Head of the Judiciary; but since the Head of the Judiciary is not part of the Executive as in England in the person of the Lord Chancellor, executive influence in these matters could be secured by regular consultation between the Head of the Judiciary and the Head of the Executive.

Following the traditions of the English Courts, Courts of Law in India have acted as defenders of individual Liberty. In the great line of English judicial decisions that have secured the rights and liberties of the subject may be added cases decided in the Indian Courts. The decision in Secretary of *State for India v. Momenti*¹, secured to the subject the right to sue the Secretary of State in Council in any case in which he could have similarly sued the East India Company. In Ameer Khan, In re², although the judges allowed that common law rights and liberties could be suspended by statutory enactment they granted that the Liberty of the subject was the unwritten law of the constitution. The case of the Inhabitants of Mahalingapore v. Anderson, like *Phillips v. Eyre*³, established the principle that a Governor is liable to an action in England for a wrong done by him during his government. Arnold v. The King-Emperors, affirmed the principles of the freedom of the Press for, "the freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject and to whatever length the subject generally may go, so also may the journalist, but apart from statute law his privilege is no other and no higher." These are illustrations of the way in which in India, as in England, the Courts of Law have come to the defence of the Liberty of the subject.

It is not merely against the Executive that the Judiciary acts as the shield of Liberty. As a consequence of the modern democratic theory, the Legislature which is the representative of the people is considered to be the supreme power in the State. And, as the modern State, according to the same theory, is omnipotent and omniscient, so the Legislature also is said to possess omnipotence and omniscience. It is against such a powerful legislature that defences have to be thrown up in the interests of Liberty. This was realized not the other day but at the time the constitution of the United States of America was established. There, for the first time in the history of the world, the people of a large modern State had charged themselves with the right and duty of government. And jealousy of executive power which their relations with the English monarchy had taught them, directed that they should make their legislature powerful. Some of the makers of their constitution already realized the risks of a powerful legislature dependent on democratic election. One of them, George Cabot, said, "There will be neither justice nor stability in any system if some material parts of it are not independent of popular control." Alexander

Hamilton said while the constitution was in the making in the Convention, "the members most tenacious of republicanism are as loud as any in declaiming against the evils of democracy. Give all the power to the many and they will oppress the few." One of the most powerful means by which the framers of the constitution of the United States of America hoped to check democratic tyranny was the establishment of an independent, impartial, and stable Judiciary. The Judiciary was made independent of the Executive and of the Legislature. "It was their duty", said Mason of Massachusetts, "to expound not only the laws but the constitution also; in which is involved the power of checking the Legislature in case it should pass any laws in violation of the constitution." That constitution made the Judiciary its defender for, in Art. 6 it was laid down that "this constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all Treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." Thus the Judiciary was made defender of the constitution; it was given the right to pronounce judgment on the constitutionality and legality of any law passed by any legislature or by any executive order or direction. Although the people were the ultimate makers and amenders of the constitution, the Judiciary was made the guardian of the constitution as it exists. Thus the Judiciary became the balance wheel of the constitution. And from the beginning the Judiciary fulfilled this duty of defending Liberty against the invasions of the Executive or of the Legislature. Chief Justice Marshall stands out as the defender of the constitution and of Liberty during his long tenure of 34 years of the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. From the case of *Marbury v. Madison*¹, when the writ of mandamus was awarded against the administration for the performance of executive acts which they refused to perform, although they were required by the constitution to perform them, through the case of *Aaron Burr*², when he destroyed the attempt to set up a law of "constructive treason," and *Fletcher v. Peck*³, when the Court declared a state law impairing the obligation of contracts invalid, down to *Worcester v. Georgia*¹, when he declared that the Cherokee nation "is a distinct community occupying its own territory in which the laws of Georgia can have no force and which the citizens of Georgia have no right to enter but with the consent of the Cherokees themselves or in conformity with treaties and with the acts of Congress." Marshall defended individual Liberty against the onslaughts of the Executive, the States; and the Legislature. And the tradition set up by Marshall has been followed by the Judiciary of the United States of America ever since—to the detriment of progress perhaps, but in the interests of Liberty.

Like the United States of America, India also has a written and a federal constitution. Although the federal constitution set up by the Government of India Act of 1935 is sui generis, extraordinary, peculiar and unique, like nothing on earth in the history of federation, yet it has some of the fundamental principles of federal constitutions. It is a written, rigid constitution, with an efficient but not absolute separation of powers, with checks and balances, no power being sovereign, Indian States and British Indian Provinces brought under one umbrella and the whole system of government being placed under the protection of a constitution which is the supreme law of the land. And the defender of this constitution and therefore of Liberty against the interference of Executive or Legislature is the Judiciary. The High Courts and Subordinate Courts have always had the right and the power to pronounce on the validity of laws passed by the not sovereign legislatures of India. But the Government of India Act of 1935 has placed the constitution under the special protection of a new Court for all India—the Federal Court. It is a Court of record like the High Courts; it is to have, to the exclusion of any other Court, an original jurisdiction in any dispute between the Federation or any of the Provinces or any of the Federated States and in so far as the dispute involves any question (whether of law or government) on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends, although the extent to which the Court has jurisdiction over disputes to which a State is a party, is limited by the terms of the Instrument of Accession by which the State agrees to enter the Federation. As from High Courts in Federated States appeals are to lie to the Federal Court on questions of law concerning the interpretation of the Constitution Act or of an order in Council made thereunder or the extent of the legislative or executive authority vested in the Federation by the Instrument of Accession of the State or which arise under an agreement made in relation to the administration in that State of a law of the Federal Legislature. In spite of the serious limitations on the jurisdiction of the Federal Court in the Indian States that federate, it is a great step forward that disputes between individuals and individuals and States and States and Provinces and Provinces and all of them and the Federation in regard to matters provided for in the Act should become justiciable in a Court of law common to all India. It is not only the first step towards the legal unity of India but a long step forward in the protection of Liberty in India. Although Treaties are not ipso facto the law of the land in the British Empire as in the United States of America, yet the consideration that they may become evidence in cases before the Federal Court in which the States are interested may bring them up for judicial interpretation. One provision in the Act may detract from the repute of the Federal Court as a Court of law. It is S. 213 which empowers the Governor-General to consult the Federal Court on questions of law of public importance. This, although allowed by the analogy of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and Dominion practice, infringes the principle of the separation of powers and the salutary principle that Courts of law should adjudicate only on specific issues raised as a matter of fact before them. It is no part of the business of a Judiciary to act as the adviser of the Executive. The Executive must take responsibility for its acts; enough legal advice is available to it, and it must not be allowed to justify its action in shelter behind the Judiciary and the Judiciary must not in any way or to any extent mix itself with executive action.

The inconveniences of this consultation have been pointed out in the Dominions but the danger to Liberty was sensed by Chief Justice Marshall who, when asked by President Washington to give an advisory opinion as to the validity of certain treaties with France, held, "that the Supreme Court was merely a legal tribunal for the decision of controversies brought before them in legal form." The Missouri Compromise delimiting the regional legality of slavery declared unconstitutional by the famous Dred Scott case 37 years later which precipitated the greatest civil war in history, is an illustration of the danger to which a country may be subjected by the resort to consultation by the Executive of the Judiciary in justiciable matters. The controversy over the Missouri Compromise and the Dred Scott case would have been still more disastrous if the action of the Government had been supported by judicial opinion.

The place of the Judiciary in a federal constitution as in a State where the Rule of Law obtains makes for eminently a "government of laws and not of men." A government of laws is a free Government because it is above the caprice and will of one man or a body of men. The "law of the land" was the battle cry of those that won the Magna Charta in England and the "due process of law" is the American guarantee of Liberty. "Liberty to be enjoyed must be limited by law," said Burke, "for law ends where tyranny begins and the tyranny is the same, be it the tyranny of a monarch or of a multitude—nay the tyranny of the multitude may be greater as it is a multiplied tyranny." It is only "Where Sovereign law, the State's collected will,

Over Throne's and globes elate, Sits empress, increasing good, suppressing ill," that Liberty is secure.

Perhaps an apology is needed for placing these elementary truths and facts connected with the administration of Law and Justice before a body of lawyers. I find an excuse for this exploitation of the obvious, as some of you may be tempted to characterise my observations, in developments in Law that have taken place in certain countries in our generation. We have lived into times when the old notions of the supremacy of Law over government, of the guarantee of individual Liberty by Law, of the State being under the Law have been questioned and treated with scorn. The characteristic note of the judicial life of the State of the Dictators is that Law is not so much the guardian and defender as the faithful and obedient servant of the State. Here, in regard to Law under the National Socialist State of Germany, is the authoritative statement of Dr. Franz Gurtner, Reich Minister of Justice who contributed an article to a collection of essays by leading members of Party and State called "Germany speaks" recently published in England. "The doctrine," he says, "that demands that the interests of the individual must be regarded as the principal subject-matter of all legislation and that a comprehensive system of controls must be established to protect the individual against an excess of interference by the State," is no longer upheld in Germany. National Socialism, we are told, "looks upon the community and the nation as an organism which has its own rights and duties and whose interests come before those of the individual". The lawyer under the Nazi regime is to espouse not the interests of the individual but those of the whole nation. But the climax of this dangerous development of Law was reached on 28th July, 1935, when a law was passed which abolished the maxim according to which no offence can be punished unless it is specially mentioned in the existing Code. This law entitles the judge to inflict punishment for acts which, although not specifically mentioned, are yet "of such a nature as to demand punishment in pursuance of the general terms of the law and in accordance with healthy, national sentiment." This doctrine of 'constructive crime' is the ne plus ultra of a lawless system.

May I end with an appeal from one who is a citizen rather than a lawyer, to this eminent body of lawyers? According to the English system, the Bar is an integral part of the judicial administration. Judicial enquiry into a dispute consists, for the main part, in a debate between learned counsel representing the two parties to the dispute. In the United States of America they have an expressive phrase to describe this process. The lawyers are said to be engaged in "trying the case". The integral and efficient part played by the Bar in the administration of Justice in England and in the United States of America has been made possible by the learning, the high tone, and the independence of the Bar. The independence of the Judiciary, so necessary in a free State, is dependant on the independence of the Bar. And independence of the Bar can be attained only if members of the Bar keep to the highest standards of professional conduct and character. All these qualities of the Bar in England and the United States of America are to be traced to the unity and corporate life and status they have enjoyed from the earliest times. That the Bar in Madras may grow in that incorporated unity, freedom and independence so necessary to the free and progressive administration of Justice must be the wish of every one that believes in the vital connection between Law and Liberty.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

CAXTON PUBLISHING COMPANY, LIMITED v. SUTHERLAND PUBLISHING COMPANY, (1939) A.C. 178 (H.L.).

Copyright Act (1911), Ss: 6, 7 and 10—Infringement—Damages for infringement under S. 6 and damages for conversion under S. 7—Remedies whether cumulative or alternative—Limitation under S. 10 for commencement of proceedings—Act of conversion—What constitutes—Measure of damages.

The plaintiffs are the owners of the copyright in a book "Heating and Ventilating" and defendants, the publishers of a book "The Modern Practical Plumber". The defendants admitted that portions of four sheets of their book are infringements of the plaintiff's copyright. The plaintiffs by their writ claimed (1) an injunction restraining infringement, (2) an inquiry as to damages, and (3) delivery of all infringing books and materials. The defendants admitting the infringement contended (1) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to both damages for infringement of copyright under S. 6, sub-S. 1 and at the same time damages for conversion under S. 7; (2) that the limitation of 3 years under S. 10 applied to the claims under S. 6 as well as S. 7; (3) that the conversion was the printing or binding and not the sale; and (4) that the damages were not to be calculated by finding the price of their complete work and then attributing to the plaintiff's copyright some portion of that price but was the value of the plaintiff's work to the plaintiffs as contained in the four sheets. (At the hearing before the House of Lords they were content to take the binding as the act of conversion and both sides accepted that if damages for conversion were to be calculated by reference to the value of the whole volume the proportion was to be one-twentieth.)

Held, (1) that the remedy of damages for infringement provided by S. 6 and the remedy of damages for conversion provided by S. 7 are not in law mutually exclusive and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover under both heads.

(2) that the three years' limitation provided in S. 10 applies to a claim of damages for conversion under S. 7.

(3) that the act of conversion was the binding of the infringing sheets with the innocent ones.

(4) that the plaintiffs being fictional owners of the infringing copies, where the infringing copies are found in a setting created by the defendants, the Court in assessing the damages, is entitled and bound to take that setting into account and that will be fairly done in taking some proportion of the total value of the book after making due allowances for expenses incurred after the act of conversion.

RADCLIFFE v. RIBBLE MOTOR SERVICES, LTD., (1939) A.C. 215 (H.L.).

Master and servant—Liability of master for accident to servant caused by another servant—Defence of "common employment"—Limits.

The respondents were the owners of a number of motor coaches and omnibuses used for private hire and public transport. R and J were drivers employed by them and on a certain day three coaches were hired for one party, and two single coaches for two others by the same firm of transport agents. All three parties were bound for the same destination. After discharging the parties the coaches were returning to the garage. R who was driving one of the coaches stopped his coach and got down and J who was driving another coach while pulling out to get in front of the first coach and passing close to it inflicted injuries on R who died of it. In an action under the Fatal Accidents Act by R's widow,

Held, there are conditions in which the law will not hold a master liable for injuries caused to a workman by the negligence of his fellow workman employed by the same master and engaged in a common employment with him. But in the present case, having regard to the nature of the employment there was no common work justifying the conclusion that the deceased man's contract of employment was subject to the fictitious implied term that he assumed the risk of his fellow servant's negligence while driving his employer's coach on the highway on a separate job. The doctrine of "common employment" did not apply. History of the doctrine discussed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, (1938) 2 K.B. 345, reversed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF SPAIN v. S. S. "ARANTZAZU MENDI", (1939) A.C. 256 (H.L.).

International law—Comity of nations—De facto Government of a State—If foreign Sovereign State entitled to immunity from being impleaded in English Courts—Writ in rem for arrest of a ship which a de facto foreign government claimed to be in possession or entitled to possession—Validity.

The Republican Government of Spain requisitioned the ship in question and other vessels for public services. The ship was then on the high seas and on her arrival in London on 11th August, 1937, the owners issued a writ in rem for possession and in pursuance thereof was arrested by the Admiralty Marshal in the Surrey Commercial Docks. To that writ the Republican Government entered a conditional appearance. On 28th March, 1938, General Franco issued a decree requisitioning the ship for public services. On 11th April, 1938, the owner's action was discontinued but the vessel still remained under arrest and on 13th April, the managing director of the owners made a notarial declaration that he consented to the order of requisition and held the vessel at the disposal of the Nationalist Government and the master made a similar declaration. On the same date the Republican Government issued the present writ in rem against the vessel and its late master for an adjudication of possession of the ship to them. The Nationalist Government sought to set aside the writ on the ground that it impleaded a foreign Sovereign State which was unwilling to submit to jurisdiction of the Court.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the Nationalist Government of Spain represented a foreign Sovereign State which could not be impleaded and that was established by the Foreign office letter to the Court that "the Nationalist Government now exercises effective administrative control over all the Basque Provinces of Spain and is not subordinate to any other Government in Spain". The right of the Marshal who merely arrested the ship is not possession but custody and the Nationalist Government was in possession of the ship at the material date. Though the writ was against the ship, the Nationalist Government was impleaded as they were in possession. So the action must be dismissed.

VITA FOOD PRODUCTS v. UNUS SHIPPING CO., LTD (IN LIQUIDATION), (1939) A.C. 277 (P.C.).

Contract—Bill of lading issued from Newfoundland providing that contract shall be governed by English Law—Bill of lading not containing statement required by Newfoundland Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1932, S3—Action for damages to goods against shipowner in Nova Scotia—Law applicable to the contract.

By some error or inadvertance, the bills of lading (for having shipped to the appellants in respondent's ship from Newfoundland) were on old forms and did not incorporate the Hague Rules which had been adopted by the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act (Newfoundland). After setting out the exceptions of sea and other perils and exemption from liability for all damage capable of being covered by insurance and exemption from damage from negligence of shipowner's servants, etc., the bills provided that the contract shall be governed by English Law. The bills did not contain an express statement that they are to have effect subject to the provisions of the rules as required by S. 3 of the Newfoundland Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1932. In an action by the appellants in Nova Scotia against the shipowners for damage caused to the goods admitted as due to the captain's negligence in navigation.

Held, the proper law of the contract is the law which the parties intended to apply and the intention expressed in the contract will be conclusive and English rules relating to the conflict of laws must be applied to determine how the bills of lading are affected by the failure to comply with S. 3 of the Newfoundland Act. On a true construction of the Statute, S. 3 is directory and not obligatory and failure to comply with its terms does not nullify the contract contained in the bills of lading.

The Torni, (1932) P. 78, not followed.

Even on the footing that the bills of lading were illegal the respondent would fail either because it was a party to an illegality avoiding the contract or alternatively because the contractual exemption could not be ignored. The respondents were not liable for the damages.

THE WESTHOUGHTON COAL AND CANNEL CO. v. WIGAN COAL CORPORATION, (1939) 1 Ch. 393.

Mining—Artificial water-course constructed in a mine—Escape of water into lower mine—Liability for damage—Principles.

If an artificial channel has been constructed in a mine, the maker of such artificial channel is not liable for all time for damage to another mine, if water should at any time escape down the artificial water-course into the neighbouring mine, by reason of the acts of the owner of the lower mine or other parties, done after the construction of the artificial water-course. The maker of an artificial channel is liable to the owner of the lower mine for damage caused by escape of water if it is due to the increased burden. If the construction has not increased the burden to any appreciable extent, there is no liability. The time when the question whether there is such an appreciable increase of the burden on the adjoining mineowner with regard to the water, falls to be considered, must be the time, when the artificial water-course is constructed and the material circumstances must be those obtaining on that date.

KNIGHTSBRIDGE ESTATES TRUST, LTD. v. BYRNE AND OTHERS, (1939) 1 Ch. 441.

Mortgage—Redemption—Postponement of—If must be for a reasonable time—Provision for redemption in eighty equal half yearly instalments—If a clog on the equity of redemption—Rule against perpetuities—If applicable to mortgages.

The respondents, the owners of a large freehold estate owed on a mortgage dated 6th May, 1927, carrying interest at $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum 3,00,000l. to a certain company. In January, 1931, the appellants agreed to grant to the respondents a loan of 3,10,000l. at $5\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. interest per annum repayable over a period of forty years by half-yearly instalments, the whole money to become payable on any default. On 6th November, 1931, a mortgage embodying the agreement was executed in favour of the appellants. On 25th February, 1937, the respondents issued a writ claiming to be entitled to redeem the mortgaged property on the usual notice notwithstanding the provision for repayment by eighty instalments spread over forty years, claiming that "the condition is illegal and void as a clog on their right to redeem and renders it irredeemable for an undue length of time and is not capable of being enforced".

Held, reversing the decision of Luxmoore, J., in (1938) Ch. 741. The proposition that a postponement of the contractual right of redemption is only permissible for a "reasonable" time is not well founded. Even assuming it must be reasonable, there is nothing unreasonable in the mere extension of the period for forty years in the circumstances of the present case.

A postponement of a contractual right of redemption for forty years cannot properly be described as a clog on the equity of redemption. Equity will grant relief only where as in (1912) A. C. 565, the contractual right of redemption is illusory or where there is something oppressive or unconscionable in the transaction.

Held, further, affirming Luxmoore J.'s decision. The rule against perpetuities has never been applied to mortgages and it would not be right now to hold that the rule was applicable to mortgages.

In re VAUX. NICHOLSON v. VAUX, (1939) 1 Ch. 465.

Wills—Trust or powers under which an interest can be created to take effect more than 21 years after a life in being at the death of the testator—If offends rule against perpetuities—Benefit under settlement after will—Rule against double portions—When applicable.

The testator died on 25th November, 1925, leaving his widow, two sons and two daughters. All the children attained 21 and one son died after attaining 21 in 1936. By the will dated 27th November, 1919, the testator after devising the estate on usual trusts to his executors and trustees, gave the widow a life interest to be cut down on her remarriage and directed the appropriation of two sums of £20,000 each for each of his daughters; and by cls. 11 and 12 of the will disposed of the residue. Cl. 11 was as follows: "As to the residue my trustees shall apply both the income and capital, in their absolute discretion for the benefit of all or any one or more of my children or the issue of any deceased child of mine. And . . . the trustees may within 21 years from decease accumulate the surplus of any income of the residuary trust fund . . . and add it to the trust fund" Cl. 12 was in the following terms, "... I authorise and empower the trustees to deal with the fund as I could have done if living save only that all such dealings shall be within the limitations prescribed by law". Subsequently on 9th September, 1924, he settled 2,000 shares in a company on each of his four children.

Held [reversing (1938) Ch. 581]: (1) The power conferred by cl. 12 of the will was valid by reason of the saving words at the end though the trusts declared in cl. 11 were void as offending the rule against perpetuities as the trust is one under which an interest can be created at a date more than twenty-one years after any life in being at the death of the testator. (2) In the circumstances of the case the settlement of 9th September, 1924, in favour of the children has no reference and cannot be treated as having any implied reference to the benefits conferred upon the settled parties by the will and was not an advancement of the gifts by the will. The rule against double portions was not applicable.

In re A DEBTOR. DEBTOR v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, (1939) 1 Ch. 489.

Bankruptcy Act (1914), Ss. 26 and 108 (1)—Jurisdiction to rehear and review—If terminated by discharge in bankruptcy—Discharged bankrupt—Jurisdiction of Bankruptcy Courts to make binding orders on.

On 30th June, 1936, the debtor applied for his discharge. At that time the receiver made an application under S. 51 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act for an order for the payment of a portion of his salary by the debtor to the trustee in bankruptcy. In the discharge application it was found (i) that the assets were insufficient to pay 10s. in the pound; (ii) that the bankrupt had brought on his bankruptcy by unjustifiable extravagance in living. On 15th December, 1936, an order was made. It suspended the discharge for six months and discharged him as from the expiration of the six months "without prejudice to any application or order under S. 51 (2)." The application by the receiver was ordered on 17th December, 1936, directing the payment by the bankrupt a sum of £312 annually during the bankruptcy to be continued monthly until the Court ordered to the contrary. Liberty was reserved to either party to apply. It was the intention of the Registrar that the payment of £312 should continue to operate even after the six months' suspension had elapsed. It was also in contemplation that after the debtor had cleared the undischarged income-tax liability towards which he was paying £20 per week an additional sum would be ordered to be paid. In fact the bankrupt continued to make the payment for nearly a year after expiry of six months. Then his solicitors took the point that under the order the obligation to make the payments came to an end when the discharge date arrived and claimed repayment of the sums which had been paid subsequent to the discharge. On 6th July, 1938, on an application the Registrar declared (i) that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it a condition, in granting the bankrupt his discharge subject to a suspension that the same be without prejudice to an order to be made under S. 51 (2) in so far as that order is intended to operate after the period of suspension runs out; (ii) that the order dated 17th December, 1936, was not made under or by virtue of the words 'without prejudice' in the order of 15th December, 1936, but under the powers conferred by S. 51 (2) which can be exercised at any time up to the discharge of the bankrupt taking effect and that such an order comes to an end on the discharge becoming effective; and (iii) "During bankruptcy" in the order of 17th December, 1936, refer to the period during which the bankrupt remained undischarged. The Registrar at the end of his judgment indicated that if the Court had jurisdiction, it can review its previous order of discharge and make an order of the kind which it had intended to make originally. The Official Receiver accordingly made an application for review under S. 108 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act and the Registrar altered the order of discharge. On appeal by the bankrupt, Held, under S. 108 (1) Courts have power to review, rescind or vary any order made by it under its bankruptcy jurisdiction and it is not terminated by a mere discharge in bankruptcy. If one reads the provisions of S. 26 together with S. 108 (1) it is impossible to say that an imposition of a condition under the power in S. 108 (1) is not a concurrent exercise within the meaning of S. 26 (8). The jurisdiction under S. 108 (1) to rehear is one that must be exercised with great caution, but the power is there and is intended to be exercised and in a proper case ought to be exercised.

In re LONDON GENERAL INSURANCE CO., (1939) 1 Ch. 505.

Company—Compulsory liquidation—Company carrying on different kinds of assurance business—Assets how to be distributed between various classes of creditors—Assurance Companies Act, 1909, S. 3—Meaning.

The company was carrying on life assurance, bond investment, motor insurance, fire insurance, and general accident businesses and on the date of the winding up it had creditors whose claims arose exclusively out of transaction with one or other of such businesses and also general creditors whose claim did not relate exclusively to any such businesses. In a summons for directions as to whether any and which of such creditors have a security upon any and which of the company's assets, Held,—All the creditors rank pari passu against all the assets of the company except in so far as the receipts of either the life assurance fund or the bond investment fund can be traced into any particular assets. The obligation under the Assurance Companies Act, S. 3 (1) to keep separate accounts of receipts in respect of the various businesses seems to be merely an obligation as to the method of keeping accounts and only if it be possible in the books of the company to trace receipts from the class of business for which a separate assurance fund has to be kept, into a particular asset any such asset would be a security for the debts of creditors arising exclusively out of that class of business.

BRADFORD THIRD EQUITABLE BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. BORDERS, (1939) 1 Ch. 520.

Building Societies Act, 1874, Ss. 13, 25—Society advancing loan on collateral security by builder in excess of normal amount which it would advance on the security of the house—Infringement of rules of society—Effect.

By S. 13 of the Building Societies Act the fund raised by subscriptions of members can be advanced only to members of the society and on the security of freehold and the leasehold estates by way of mortgage. The rules of the plaintiff society narrowed the limits imposed by S. 13 as to the amount which may be advanced out of the funds to such an amount as can be recovered out of the land taken as security.

Where it was found that the directors of the plaintiff society on the collateral security of the builder advanced a loan in excess of the normal amount which they would have advanced on the security of the house to the defendant and it was a violation of the rules of the plaintiff society.

Held, a mere violation by the directors of the plaintiffs of the rules will not invalidate the transaction. So long as the transaction is not outside the powers of the plaintiffs as defined by the Act of Parliament it is not an illegal or invalid transaction or one which the plaintiffs cannot enforce.

In re NORBURY. NORBURY v. FAHLAND, (1939) 1 Ch. 528.

Wills—Legacy "free of duty"—Foreign duties—If payable out of estate.

Where an English testator by an English will gives a pecuniary legacy "free of duty" the only duties payable out of his estate in respect of the legacy are duties imposed by English Law, unless there are words in the will making it clear that duties imposed by the law of a foreign country are to be paid out of such estate.

TRANSPORT AND GENERAL CREDIT CORPORATION, LTD. v. MORGAN, (1939) 1 Ch. 531.

Contract—Sale of goods—Vendor's lien—If available in respect of ordinary commercial goods—Equitable lien—Estoppel—Effect—Agreement to finance hire purchase transactions—If "Money-lending" transactions—Companies Act (1929), S. 266—Floating charge—Notes issued within six months under trust deed executed more than six months before winding up—Validity of charge.

A trust deed of 14th July, 1937, by which Rawire, Ltd., was incorporated recited that the whole of the issued share capital of Rawires were owned by or on behalf of Warners, Ltd., and Rawires' sole business consisted of purchase of radio sets, etc., from Warners and others and subsequently entering into hire purchase agreements in respect of those goods with customers. Borrowing powers were conferred on Rawires and due payment was guaranteed by Warners. Rawires issued notes (which gave a floating charge) and on default in payment the plaintiffs a credit corporation seeking to enforce some of those notes got a receiver appointed on 18th February, 1938, under the provisions of the trust deed. The receiver collected the instalments under the hire purchase agreements as they became due, recovered possession of some chattels on default of the terms of the hire purchase agreements and received the proceeds of sale of certain articles. Both Rawires and Warners went into voluntary liquidation by May, 1938. In an action to enforce the security it was contended that the transaction was a money-lending transaction and was invalidated by the Money-lenders Acts 1900 to 1927, and that Warners had a vendor's lien in respect of the unpaid purchase price of the goods.

Held, the transaction was not a money-lending transaction and the date of the charge is the date of the trust deed and not of the note and the notes though issued within six months of the liquidation were not invalidated by S. 266 of the Companies Act, 1929.

The equitable doctrine of a vendor's lien has never been held to apply to the sale of ordinary commercial goods. If it should apply, it has been waived by Warners and Rawires being entirely controlled by Warners, Warners are estopped from setting up such a lien. The plaintiffs and the other note holders were entitled to the security.

LEWIS v. DENYE, (1939) 1 K.B. 540.

Tort—Master and servant—Dangerous machinery—Failure to fence—Liability for injury—Contributory negligence—Effect.

The infant plaintiff who met with an accident while working on a circular saw sued for damages occasioned by a breach of statutory duty by the defendant to securely fence the saw. It was found on the evidence that the plaintiff knew that he could have avoided all risk by using the proper apparatus and that he failed to take reasonable care and his omission so to do must have been the effective cause of the accident.

Held, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff disentitles him from succeeding. The question of the legal effect of a breach of statutory regulation by a plaintiff on his right to sue, was left open.

HEPPENSTALL v. JACKSON AND BARCLAYS BANK, LTD., (1939) 1 K.B. 585.

Garnishee order—If attaches to amounts received by garnishee after service of order.

The garnishee, a bank had an order served upon them in the usual way under County Court Rules, O. 27, r. 1 attaching any debt owing by the bank on the date of service to the judgment-debtor.

On receipt of the order, the bank opened a new account for the particular customer in which the new credits, due to payments in, appeared.

Held, a garnishee order attaches no debts which do not exist at the moment the order is made and served and the applicant for a garnishee order is required both by the Rules of the Supreme Court and County Courts. Rules to swear an affidavit as to the amount of the debt alleged then to be owing to the judgment-debtor and the jurisdiction to make the order is limited to debts so proved by affidavit.

THE KING v. FINDLATER, (1939) 1 K.B. 594.

Companies Act (1929), S. 356, sub-Ss. (1) and (7)—Sale from house to house of "units" by which the holders were to receive a proportion of the profits of the Company and to whom return of capital was assured in 21 years—If offence under S. 356, sub-S. (1)—Ignorance that system was unlawful—If can excuse consequence of guilt.

A company through canvassers from house to house sold some "units" the features of which was that the subscribers were to be paid a portion of the profits of the Company and also return of capital to holders of unit was assured within 21 years.

Held, this constituted an offence under S. 356, sub-S. (1) and though the appellant, a director, did not know that the system was unlawful he was guilty of the offence.

MAYER AND SHERRATT v. CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD, (1939) 1 K.B. 621.

Workmen's Compensation Act (1925), S. 43 (2) (b)—Date of disablement in a case where workman dies without having obtained certificate of death—Date of death if date of accident.

A workman after nearly a year's illness died from lead poisoning (found only on post mortem examination) in the course of employment. Arbitrator awarded compensation to his dependants against the employer. The employers claimed that the insurance company were bound by a policy of insurance to indemnify them against their liability to the dependants of the deceased. The insurance company contended that under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, S. 43, the workman must be deemed to have contracted the disease which caused his death on the day when he died—eight months after the policy had expired and so not liable under the policy.

Held, the modification in S. 43 (1) (iii) (a) that disablement or suspension shall be treated as the happening of the accident ha no application to the case where the workman had died from a scheduled disease without having obtained a certificate of disablement and without having been suspended from his usual employment and so the employers are in law entitled to the indemnity claimed.

UNITED STEEL COMPANIES, LTD. v. CULLINGTON, (1939) 1 K.B. 644.

Income-tax—Finance Act (1926), Ss. 32 and 33—Amalgamated Company—If entitled to deductions in respect of losses and wear and tear to machinery to which the companies which were amalgamated were entitled.

Two companies A and B were amalgamated into a new company in 1930. Companies A and B continually made losses in respect of which they were unable to obtain relief under Income-tax Act, 1918, S. 34. The B company was further unable to give effect to the deductions for wear and tear to machinery which it was entitled to. In respect of the deductions thus carried forward by the two old companies relief was now claimed by the amalgamated company.

Held, the case falls to be decided upon the plain construction of r. 11 as enacted by the Finance Act, 1926, S. 32. The trade is to be treated as a new trade set up or commenced at the date of its acquisition. The company is another legal persona and cannot claim the right to deduction in respect of losses and wear and tear of the old companies.

FISHER v. WINCH, (1939) 1 K.B. 666

Boundaries—Hedges and ditch—Presumption—Rebuttal by production of title deeds.

The respective position of a hedge and ditch as affording evidence of the boundary is a mere presumption and can be rebutted by the production of title deeds.

THORNETT v. BARCLAYS BANK (FRANCE), LTD., (1939) 1 K.B. 675.

Practice—Production of documents—Banker's books—Issue whether bank did investment business for clients—Inspection of transactions other than plaintiffs—Procedure.

The plaintiff sued the defendant her bankers on the allegation that during 1935, 1936 and 1937 C, the manager of the bank (who was also plaintiff's son-in-law) had in fact dealt with her securities purporting to advise her about them as if he were acting for the bank, with the result that the whole of plaintiff's fortune was dissipated. She alleged that the defendant's manager was guilty of (1) negligence in giving her advice and (2) fraud in giving her false statements as to her investments showing her to be a rich woman with knowledge of their falsity. These were alleged to be within the scope of the manager's authority. The bank denied negligence and fraud and alleged it was not within the scope of C's authority to advise clients in such matters. The defendant bank filed affidavit of documents in due course. Plaintiff applied for a further discovery of a book containing records of commissions earned by the bank on sales of securities. This was resisted by the bank as to entries relating to other customers.

Held, if the defendant bank will answer the interrogatory as to the total of the half commissions earned by the bank on purchases and sales during the three years, then the plaintiff should not have inspection of the book. As the book is to a limited extent relevant, if the bank is not willing to answer the interrogatory liberty to inspect the whole book should be given to the plaintiff.

REX v. BOURNE, (1939) 1 K.B. 687.

Crimes—Offences against the Person Act (1861), S. 58—Procuring miscarriage—Operation performed for preserving the life of the mother—When a good defence—Bona fides—Burden of proof.

If the accused doctor is of opinion on reasonable grounds and with adequate knowledge, that the probable consequence of the continuance of the pregnancy will be to make the woman a physical or mental wreck, the jury are quite entitled to take the view that the doctor who under those circumstances and in that honest belief, operates, is operating for the purpose of preserving the life of the mother and the burden is on the Crown to prove that the doctor did not do the act in good faith for the purpose of preserving the life of the girl. The accused was acquitted.

REX v. WESTON-SUPER-MARE LICENSING JUSTICES. Ex parte POWELL, (1939) 1 K.B. 700.

Jurisdiction—Declining jurisdiction—If case heard and determined—Mandamus.

On an application for approval of alterations to licensed premises the justices declined jurisdiction in so far as the bulk of the alterations was to premises not already licensed. On appeal,

Held, the justices had jurisdiction provided the premises when altered will still be in the ambit of the licence. The justices cannot be said to have heard and determined the case when they declined jurisdiction in the case. Writ of mandamus should be issued.

DIES AND ANOTHER v. BRITISH AND INTERNATIONAL MINING AND FINANCE CORPORATION, (1939) 1 K.B. 724.

Sale of goods—Part payment of purchase price and contract to make further payments within a time—Default of buyer in making further payments—No tender nor delivery of goods by seller—Right of buyer to return of the purchase price paid—Right of the seller to damages for the breach of contract—Quantum of damages—Loss of profits which seller would have made—If to be included.

Where there is a contract for the sale of goods, and a part payment for the goods is made, but no goods are delivered or tendered by reason of the default of the buyer the seller's only remedy is to recover damages for the default, while the buyer, notwithstanding that it is by reason of his default that the contract has not been performed, is entitled to recover the purchase price that he has paid, subject to the right of the seller to set off against that claim the damages to which he can establish his title. The true measure of damages which the seller is entitled to is the loss of net profit that the seller would have made on the deal.

HALL BROTHERS STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LTD. v. YOUNG, (1939) 1 K.B. 748.

Insurance—Marine insurance—Policy—Construction—"Liable to pay by way of damages"—If includes special liability imposed by French Law—"Damages"—Meaning of.

A policy of marine insurance contained the following clause: "If the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay and shall pay by way of damages to any other person or persons any sum or sums in respect of such collision....." the underwriter's liability will arise. The insured vessel was compelled under French Law to bear a particular charge in respect of damage suffered by its French pilot vessel.

Held, the very special liability imposed by French Law is not that which upon a true construction falls under the head of a sum which the assured became liable to pay by way of damages in respect of the collision. "Damages" refers to payments the obligation to make which arises from a fault of some kind on the part of the ship insured.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Professional Terminology.—Each calling, whether professional or other, possesses its own vocabulary of which it makes constant use, not infrequently with the result that those outside the particular calling are extremely puzzled. Indeed, it may sometimes be the case that the language used is quite unintelligible to the uninitiated. The professions which we call learned have in an especial degree a large collection of words which convey little or nothing to those not within the particular circle, a circumstance which is apt at times to provoke satirical comment. But ere we mock at the terminological vagaries, as outsiders are apt to call them, of one profession or calling we should do well to bear in mind the homely old maxim, "They who dwell in glass houses should refrain from throwing stones." To particularise, we lawyers are frequently moved to merriment by the almost overpowering technicalities, with their apparent terrific implications, employed by our medical confreres. Many readers will recall the classic instance of the young house surgeon who was called to give evidence at a trial before Baron Bramwell, a judge who was a very matter-of-fact person and liked other people to be the same, and who would always insist upon a spade being called a spade and not an agricultural implement. The prosecutor had been somewhat severely handled by the prisoner, and the house surgeon, being asked to describe the nature of the injuries, said: "I discovered considerable ecchymosis under the left orbit, caused by extravasation of blood beneath the cuticle." This sounded very dreadful, but the Baron was not so impressed with this account of the diagnosis, for he turned to the witness, and said: "I suppose you mean that the prosecutor had a black eye?" "Precisely, my Lord," answered the witness. "Perhaps," continued the judge, "if you had said so the jury would have better understood you." "Precisely, my Lord," said the witness, obviously delighted to find that the judge understood his meaning and accepting the rebuke as in fact a compliment. Jestings at the professional language of the medical profession is, however, not confined to our own country. In one of the novels of Henri Bordeaux occurs this relevant passage: "Rien n'est plus long ni plus obscur qu'une deposition de medecin en justice. Ils n'ont pas leur pareil pour embrouiller ce qui est clair, par le moyen de mots techniques et savants."—L.T. 1939, p. 247.

The Mote and the Beam.—While we are all quick at observing the mote in our medical brethren's eye, we have to remember the warning of Holy Writ about the beam that may be in our own "orbit", as the witness mentioned above called it; and, indeed, we are forced to admit that in our legal terminology we have not a few words that, to say the least, are by no means easy of comprehension by what we may, without any invidious intent, call outsiders; that is, those who are not members of our Profession. Why, for example, the layman might ask, is a deed sometimes called an "assurance"? or why should some document begin with the words "Know all men by these presents" when that last word by no means necessarily denotes a gift that the grantor is making? If we continue in the territory of the conveyancer and do not, as a former member of that fraternity did, regard an abstract of title as "the finest achievement of human intelligence," we may meet with a goodly list of terms which are not such as he who runneth may read and understand. What is the ordinary man to make of a "base fee," a term which in its non-technical sense was at one time applied by disgruntled barristers' clerks to briefs on which there was nothing for themselves? Still keeping in the sphere of the conveyancer, why, it may be asked, should a house be termed a "messuage," or why should the subject of the transmission on sale of landed property, which the conveyancer calls real property, be treated under the rubric "vendor and purchaser", while the transmission of other property is dealt with under the heading "sale of goods"? It is easy to pose these questions, but, save on the explanation of deep-rooted custom, difficult to answer. Then there is that very amiable gentleman, innocent of all guile, who may be called upon to take the part of a "bare trustee"—an epithet against which he has just cause to recalcitrate. Take again an expression with which every lawyer is familiar, "fee simple," and regarding which the conveyancer might well think there was no room for dubiety, but according to Dean Beeching's Notes of an Examiner, the phrase was very far from being accounted as easy as might have been supposed. The "shots" made by the examinees included the following: "Cash down," "as easy as tipping," "simply a matter of money," "the small salary of the clergy," "quite simple," "a simple fee no bribes," "without any extra charge," but the gem of all was "a legal term for the conveying of entrails."—L. T., 1939, p. 247.

A Medical Critic.—Just as we poke fun, although quite good-naturedly, at the medical profession for their use of highly technical language not generally understood outside their own circle, so occasionally a medical man has ventured to criticise some of the terms employed in law. On one occasion a medical man sought to do this, but this time he, in the language of the old reporters, took nothing by his motion. "I never could comprehend," said the doctor to a barrister, "what you mean by docking an entail." "My dear doctor," was the answer, "I don't wonder at that; it is doing what your profession never consent to—suffering a recovery."—L.T., 1939, p. 247.

The Morality of Advocacy.—Everyone knows how Boswell contrived to irritate his mentor by discussing every kind of subject, however absurd, that came into his mind. Among those topics which seemed to worry Boswell was that which has oftentimes been debated, namely, whether an advocate is justified in appearing for a client whose cause he feels is not supportable. Boswell quotes Sir William Forbes as saying that an honest lawyer should never undertake a cause which he was satisfied was not a just one. "Sir," began Johnson, "a lawyer has no business with the justice or injustice of the cause which he undertakes, unless his client asks his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice of the cause is to be decided by the judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of courts of justice? It is, that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes.... If lawyers were to undertake no causes till they were sure they were just, a man might be precluded altogether from a trial of his claim, though, were it judicially examined, it might be found a very just claim." On another occasion Boswell reverts to the question, but Johnson again was not to be easily put out by the supposed casuistical cross-examination of his future biographer, who was not really seeking as a good disciple for instruction, but was merely trying to draw him out on a question which has often engaged the attention of moralists, but which in fact has no substance in it. It is a little remarkable, however, that Johnson who, in many matters, was extremely strict in his views, took so sensible a view of the question. As he said, "You are not to be confident in your own opinion that a cause is bad, but to say all you can for your client, and then hear the judge's decision."—L. T., 1939, p. 263.

Should Lawyers Solicit Employment?—This was another subject on which Boswell talked to Johnson with the object of ascertaining what he thought about it. In 1776, in a conversation between them, Boswell suggested a doubt of the justice of the general opinion that it was improper for a lawyer to solicit employment. A candidate for Parliament, Boswell pointed out, solicited votes, and if so why should not a member of the Bar solicit attorneys to send him briefs? Here again Johnson took up a sensible attitude by saying that it was wrong to stir law suits, although he went on to add that "when once it is certain that a law suit is to go on, there is nothing wrong in a lawyer's endeavouring that he shall have the benefit rather than another." Pressing the subject further, Boswell asked whether he, Johnson, would solicit employment if he were a lawyer, and to this the doctor gave a delightful reply: "No, sir," said he, "but not because I should think it wrong, but because I should disdain it. However, I would not have a lawyer to be wanting to himself in using fair means. I would have him to inject a little hint now and then to prevent his being overlooked". It is believed that since Johnson's day the suggestion of "injecting" a little hint now and then has not been overlooked.—L.T., 1939, p. 264.

Advice to Boswell as an Advocate.—In the year 1778 Boswell, who, it is worth remembering, had a fair practice at the Bar in Scotland, was instructed to appear on behalf of the opponents of a Scottish road bill which was before the House of Commons. As in other matters, he thought proper to take counsel with Johnson how best to address such an audience. Johnson advised him to provide himself "with a good deal of extraneous matter, which you are to produce occasionally so as to fill up the time. . . . When you catch a moment of attention press the merits of the question upon them." On the following day Boswell met Wilkes and mentioned to him the subject, and his advice was certainly amusing. "Be as impudent as you can," said he, "as merry as you can, and say whatever comes uppermost. Jack Lee is the best heard there of any counsel, and he is the most impudent dog, and always abusing us." To which of the two methods of approach on behalf of his clients Boswell was drawn we are unhappily left ignorant.—L.T., 1939, p. 264.

Johnson on Law Reports.—It might have been thought that Johnson would never trouble his head about law reports, but he appears to have been interested in them, as they were produced both in England and in Scotland. In the year 1773 he diverged from the subject of the Stuart family to the very different one of the comparative excellence of the reports of decisions in England and in Scotland. "The English reports, in general, are very poor"—readers will, of course, remember that this conversation took place nearly one hundred and fifty years ago—"only the half of what has been said is taken down; and of that half, much is mistaken. Whereas, in Scotland the arguments on each side are deliberately put in writing, to be considered by the court. I think a collection of your cases upon subjects of importance, with the opinions of the judges upon them, would be valuable." At that period the labours of the law reporters in Scotland were much lightened by the fact that the arguments were largely submitted in writing, a practice which certainly had its advantages over the system in use in England where the arguments were orally presented to the court.—L.T., 1939, p. 264.

Mr. Speaker.—The Select Committee on Parliamentary Elections specially concerned with the Speaker's seat have made a report which was fully summarised in our newspapers. There is a great deal to be said on the question whether the Speaker should be a member of the House, elected as all other members are and distinguished from them only by his high qualities of ability and tact, or whether he should be an officer appointed by the Crown on the recommendation, of course, of Ministers, and hold office for a session or a fixed term of years. After full consideration the Committee conclude that things should remain as they are. Some people are fond of criticising the English Constitution, which is far from perfect; but we think they all agree that the way in which the Speaker is elected and the way in which he controls the House are models of what we may call dignified democracy such as cannot be found elsewhere. Of course, academic critics say that the Speaker must be, in some sense, a party man. He is chosen by the majority of a House of Commons which is divided into parties: and the maintenance of order and the suppression of irrelevance or tedious repetition should not (we are told) be in the hands of a party man, however fair he may be—or try to be. On the whole, the known facts fairly answer these academic critics. The fact that Mr. Speaker's constituents may want to say something violent which he cannot say for them is regarded by some people as a disadvantage. If it is, it is one which, in view of the other advantages of the system, we may well bear.—L.J., 1939, p. 279.

The Lord Chancellor.—Members of both branches of the legal profession hope that the rumours of Lord Maugham's desire to retire from the Woolsack are unfounded. He has in their opinion shone with effulgence unusual even for the luminous occupants of that highest of judicial places; and while the candidates for a vacancy are always good and willing, there is none better than the reigning L.C.

This troubled century is little more than 38 years old; and yet we have had no less than ten Lord Chancellors and the threat or promise of yet another in the year 1939. Lord Maugham no doubt feels that he is entitled to a period of leisure and comparative repose; and he has certainly earned it after a long, arduous and successful career at the Chancery Bar, on the Bench, and now since the time when Lord Hailsham retired last year, on the reconstituted Woolsack.—L.J., 1939, p. 289.

The Derivation of L.Cs.—"It is difficult," wrote one who had studied the great subject with care, "to form any precise estimate of the surroundings which are essential for the production of a Lord Chancellor. Statistics are ever fallacious and calculations based upon averages are apt to deceive"; but he came to the conclusion that "a minister of religion is more likely to become the proud and happy father of the noblest of all officials than any other type of professional man."

This conclusion was based on the facts of the nineteenth century. During that time two rectors of the Church of England, a Scottish minister and a Dissenting preacher had severally seen their sons seated upon the Woolsack. Four legal parents—but of a mixed kind and not assignable to one species—had a similar joy. These were a Scottish advocate, a Master in Chancery, a solicitor and a barrister-at-law. One peer, one barber, one doctor and one soldier had been similarly blessed. The list of distinguished progenitors consisted of 17 names, from which it was "incidentally deducible that the average career of a Lord Chancellor is of some five years' duration."—L.J., 1939, p. 289.

In the Nineteenth Century.—In the first year of the nineteenth century Alexander Wedderburn, Baron Loughborough and Earl of Rosslyn, reigned as Chancellor. His father was Peter Wedderburn, advocate, of Edinburgh. To him succeeded John Scott, Earl of Eldon, whose father was successively a coal-fitter, proprietor of a public-house, and a shipowner in a small way. Thomas Erskine, who followed, was the son of Henry David, tenth Earl of Buchan—a Scottish Peer. John Singleton Copley, Lord Lyndhurst, was the son of an American portrait painter. The father of Henry Brougham, Lord Brougham and Vaux, was a small North-country landowner.

Charles Christopher Pepys, Earl of Cottenham, was the son of Sir William Weller Pepys, Bart., a Master in Chancery; Thomas Wilde, Lord Truro, of an attorney-at-law, and Edward Burtenshaw Sugden, Lord St. Leonards, of a hair-dresser and barber. The father of Robert Monsey Rolfe, Lord Cranworth, was a Norfolk rector: Charles Thesiger, collector of Customs in the island of St. Vincent, was the father of the first Lord Chelmsford. Lord Campbell was the son of the Rev. Dr. George Campbell, minister of Cupar in the county of Fife; Richard Bethell, Lord Westbury, of a Bristol doctor; Hugh McCalmont Cairns, Earl Cairns, of a

—And in this.—Roundell Palmer, Lord Selborne, was the son the rector of Mixbury and Fimmere, in the county of Oxford; Farrer, Lord Herschell, of the Rev. Haim Herschell, a Dissenting minister, who first saw light in Prussian Poland; and Hardinge Stanley Giffard, Earl of Halsbury, was the third son of Mr. Stanley Lees Giffard, LL.D., barrister-at-law and journalist.

Lord Halsbury saw our country and its laws safely into the twentieth century; his final retirement was in 1905. Robert Threshie Reid, Lord Loreburn, who succeeded him, was the son of a barrister, sometime C.J. of the Protectorate of the Ionian Isles. Lord Haldane's father was a Writer to the Signet; Lord Buckmaster's, a schoolmaster; Viscount Finlay was eldest of a doctor's large family of eleven; a barrister was the father of the Earl of Birkenhead; a city merchant of Lord Cave; Viscount Sankey of Moreton, is son of the late Mr. Thomas Sankey of that place; Quintin Hogg, philanthropist and father of Lord Hailsham, was a sugar merchant in a large and successful way; while Lord Maugham's father was legal adviser to the British Embassy in Paris.

On twentieth century statistics it would appear, therefore, that a lawyer is now more likely than a clergyman to become the parent of the holder of the Law's most glittering prize.—L.J., 1939, p. 289.

Lawyers and the Table.—If the biographers and critics of the old judges and practitioners speak truly, these worthies seem to have kept well in mind that verse from Ecclesiasticus which runs thus: "A cheerful and good heart will have a care of his meat and drink," a saying which in the mouth of our friend Dr. Johnson became somewhat coarsely translated into: "I look upon it that he who does not mind his belly will hardly mind anything else." How, then, does the matter stand with our great men of the past in the law? We read that Chief Justice Lee, who died in 1754, gained immense credit for an adequate knowledge of law by the sumptuousness and the frequency of the dinners with which he regaled his judicial brethren and those others whom he invited to his house. Of Thurlow it is said that he entertained "a somewhat too limited circle of friends with English fare and a superabundance of choice port." It is added that he was very particular about his fruit, few things angering him more than to find inferior grapes or peaches placed before him. So irritated was he if this should happen that we are told that on one occasion when at Brighton, to the astonishment of the other guests, he threw the whole of a very fine dessert out of the window upon the Marine Parade. Of Baron Graham, who was appointed to the Bench of the Court of Exchequer in 1800, and whose universal urbanity and politeness were so marked that, as Jekyll humorously put it, "No one but his sempstress could ruffle him," we read, apropos the subject under consideration, that his particular weakness was for oysters, eaten as a preparatory whet to the appetite for dinner. It is said that on one occasion when he had been indulging in this pre-prandial exercise, he observed in his genial way that "oysters taken before dinner are said to sharpen the appetite, but I have just consumed half-a-barrel of fine natives, and, speaking honestly, I am bound to say that I don't feel quite so hungry as when I began"—a phenomenon not altogether unfamiliar even to the ordinary person.—L.T., 1939, p. 291.

Lord Ellenborough and Lord Eldon.—Just as quite ordinary mortals have their culinary preferences, so, too, it seems had our former Chief Justices and Lord Chancellors. Of Lord Ellenborough we read that his particular "wanity," as Sam Weller would have expressed it, was lobster sauce, and we are further told that on one occasion he was enabled to show from the judgment seat his regard for this delicacy. This was when he decided that those engaged in the lobster fishery were exempt from legal liability to impressment. "Is not," he asked, in the course of giving judgment, "the lobster fishery a fishery, and a most important fishery, of this kingdom, though carried on in shallow waters? The framers of the law well knew that the produce of the deep sea, without the produce of the shallow water, would be of comparatively small value, and intended that turbot, when placed upon our tables, should be flanked by good lobster sauce." Lord Eldon was equally fond of the table, but in his case there was a difference in taste very marked and, as some thought, somewhat derogatory to the exalted position which he occupied. His passion was liver and bacon. Being invited to dinner by Sir John Leach, Master of the Rolls, Lord Eldon replied as follows: "It will give me great pleasure to dine with you, and since you are good enough to ask me to order a dish that shall test your new chef's powers—I wish you'd tell your Frenchman to fry some liver and bacon for me." Sir John did not like this, and said: "Are you laughing at me or my cook?" thinking that the Chancellor was bent on ridiculing his luxurious mode of living. "At neither," answered the Chancellor, with equal simplicity and truth; "I was only ordering the dish which I enjoy beyond all others."—L.T., 1939, p. 291.

Lord Stowell.—Lord Stowell, the brother of Lord Eldon, we associate chiefly with the exalted place he attained in admiralty and prize law, but he has other claims to remembrance. For example, to him we owe two classic phrases—one, "The elegant simplicity of the three per cents.," and the other, more germane to the subject now before us, "A dinner lubricates business." Like Eldon, he loved port, and in this connection the story has come down to us of the practice of the two brothers to dine together on the first day of term at a tavern in the neighbourhood of the Temple. In his old age Stowell was recalling these dinners to his son-in-law, Lord Sidmouth, when the latter observed, "You drank some wine together, I daresay." Stowell admitted that they did. Following up his previous question the son-in-law inquired, "Two bottles?" "More than that," was the reply. "What! three bottles?" again asked Lord Sidmouth, to which the answer was again, "More than that." This made the son-in-law open his eyes with astonishment. "By Jove, sir, you don't mean to say that you took four bottles?" By this time the old man was beginning to feel somewhat shamefaced, but he only said, "More; I mean to say we had more. Now don't ask any more questions!" It will not be forgotten by those who know their Boswell that Stowell got into trouble with Blackstone's family for telling Boswell that Blackstone, "a sober man, composed his Commentaries with a bottle of port before him, and found his mind invigorated and supported in the fatigue of his great work, by a temperate use of it." We are told that Stowell felt compelled to write to Blackstone's family to apologise for Boswell's anecdote, which, however, remains to this day in the great biography.—L.T., 1939, p. 292.

Thackeray's Testimony.—Every lawyer who has read Thackeray's classic, Pendennis, will recall the chapter entitled "The Knights of the Temple," wherein the hero is introduced to that part of the Bar student's curriculum which he enjoys much more than the subsequent interrogatories as to his professional knowledge, namely, the ancient practice of dining together. In the first evening when Pen dined in the hall of what is termed "the ancient and liberal Inn of the Upper Temple," he is seated next Lowton, a student of older standing by whom he is informed of the names of those seated at the high table. "There's Boosey, the bencher, the bald one sitting under the picture and 'aving soup; I wonder whether its turtle? They often 'ave turtle. Next is Balls, the King's Counsel . . . That's old Grump, the seni or of the Bar; they say he's dined here forty years. They often send 'em down their fish from the benchers to the senior table," and so on in that delectable style of which the author was a past-master. Thackeray himself liked a good dinner, and he knew how to set forth its attractions in his own inimitable fashion. At one time it is understood the dining in hall during term was the only essential for call to the English Bar. Those halcyon days are gone, but, happily, the dining is still insisted upon by the Benchers, and few there are who would recalcitrate against its maintenance. Long may it continue to form one of the necessary steps to the acquisition of the honourable status of a barrister.—L.T., 1939, p. 292.

Died at His Post.—Mr. Justice Stephen, of the New South Wales Supreme Court, who died suddenly at Sydney at the close of his summing-up in a libel action, has just added one more to the number of judges who have been struck down by death at their posts. It was while presiding in the House of Lords in place of Lord Eldon that Lord Alvanley, C.J., was seized with a malady which carried him off in three days. Lord Tenterden, C.J., was overtaken by his last illness while presiding at the great trial of the Mayor of Bristol. From his deathbed he continued to follow the course of the proceedings and in his last moments he seemed to fancy himself addressing a jury. Mr. Justice Hayes was stricken suddenly while unrobing after sitting in court at Westminster. Old Mr. Justice Manisty, another Victorian judge, worked on till he collapsed in court. The handwriting in his notebook up till the very last stroke was as delicate and distinct as if there remained to him years instead of hours of life. The death of Mr. Justice Talfourd while charging the grand jury at Stafford has been stamped on the memory of the legal profession by Lord Darling's descriptive poem. Only four years later a similar scene was enacted at Welshpool when Mr. Baron Watson was seized with apoplexy, dying on the morrow.—S.J., 1939, p. 354.

Fire Engines and Speed Limits.—Three classes of vehicles are exempt from the statutory speed limits which apply to so many others. They are the vehicles of fire brigades, police officers and ambulances. The exemption is not absolute, but only operates if, in the opinion of the magistrates, observance of the limit would be likely to hinder the use of the vehicle for its essential purpose on the occasion on which contravention of the law is alleged. This is, however, the only, or almost the only, concession given to these vehicles. For instance, they must respect traffic signs and may be held negligent if they disregard the red light's prohibition (Ward

v. L.C.C., 1938, 1 All. E. R. 341). And, we suggest, the fact that these vehicles are free of speed limit when out on service is by no means conclusive if the charge be one of reckless or of careless driving. The point came up in the Sheriff's Court at Edinburgh this week (Times, May 16). The Sheriff was trying charges of reckless and, alternatively, of careless driving by a fireman which followed a fatal accident in the streets of Edinburgh. The learned Sheriff looked at the Act, observed the privilege, and found that the speed was not excessive. This may well be so: but we should doubt whether that fact is a good defence to a charge of reckless driving. Speed is only an ingredient in manner. There was, however, other evidence in answer to the charge made. All we wish to submit is that though a person is free of limits he may drive recklessly.—L.J., 1939, p. 352.

Children in the Streets.—The question of the rights and wrongs of children playing in the streets has always been important: and the recent rules about damages for the dead have added to its importance. Mr. Justice Hallett remarked on the matter during a case on circuit lately (Times, April 27), when he awarded a considerable sum to a bereaved father. His little son, who was killed by a local authority's vehicle, was four years old. Was he old enough to be capable of contributory negligence? The learned Judge said, according to the report, that the law did not recognise contributory negligence by children. If the report is correct, this was (if we may say so) giving too great a liberty to youth. A little child of three and a half years cannot be guilty of contributory negligence (Gardner v. Grace, 1 F. & F. 359), but a child of six may be so (Fraser v. Edinburgh Tramways, 20 Sch. R. 192). As a child grows older the Courts impute to him or her such a duty to know, see and take care as may reasonably be expected of a boy or girl of his or her age. Though always generous to children, the Courts have not gone so far as the learned Judge's observation suggests. However, he was dealing with a child of four; and what he said was correct for the case in hand. The law is well stated and the cases collected in Halsbury, Hailsham edn., vol. 23, pp. 688-9. —L.J., 1939, p. 353.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT IN INDIA, by Harish Chandra Mital, B.A. (Hons.), LL.B., Punjab Civil Service (Judl.) and Bhagwan Das Jain, M.A., LL.B., Vakil, Delhi. Published by Eastern Law House, Calcutta. Price Rs. 10.

We have great pleasure in welcoming this book which so far as we are aware is the first Indian book on the subject of Copyright. There are leading text books on the subject in England and as the Imperial Copyright Act of 1911 applies to the whole of the British Dominions, the English treatises on the subject are of valuable authority in this country as well. There is however the Indian Copyright Act of 1914 which in some respects modifies and adds to the provisions of the Imperial Copyright Act. The learned authors have commented on both the enactments and have largely drawn from the English text books and decisions which will be found to be of great use. The subject being one with which the general practitioner may not be very familiar, this book of the authors will be greatly appreciated as a guide to the subject. There is a recent important decision of the House of Lords in Caxton Publishing Company, Limited v. Sutherland Publishing Company, (1939) A. C. 178, under Ss. 6, 7, 10 and 35 of the Imperial Copyright Act dealing with questions whether an action for conversion under S. 7 is an alternative or a cumulative remedy to an action for refringement under S. 6 of the Act. The decision also deals with the question whether S. 10 of the Act which prescribes a period of three years for an action for infringement of copyright applies also to an action for conversion under S. 7. The learned authors have expressed the opinion that it is doubtful whether the three years rule of limitation applies to an action under S. 7. The House of Lords in the above case have held that the rule of limitation applies equally to actions for conversions under S. 7. Their Lordships have also discussed the measure of damages for conversion in cases where a portion of the work has been incorporated in another work. This decision was given as early as November, 1938 and reported in (1938) W.N. 367 and 108 L.J. Ch. 5, though it is reported in the English Law Reports only in (1939) A.C. 178. As there is no index of cases in the book under review, we are not in a position to say whether this decision was available to the learned authors at the time when the book went to print.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION ACT (1908), by V. V. Chitaley, B.A., LL.B., Senior Advocate, Federal Court and Editor, All India Reporter, and K. N. Annaji Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. (Volume 3). Published by All India Reporter, Ltd., Nagpur. Rs. 30 per set.

We had occasion to review the first two volumes of this work which brought the commentaries on the Act down to the end of article 140 of the first schedule of the Limitation Act. The present volume completes the work and contains a copious general index of the subjects dealt with in all the volumes. There is an appendix which gives the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act I of 1920. There is however no index of cases referred to which we hoped would be at least introduced in this work of the authors. A general index of cases would have enhanced the value of the work where hundreds of cases have been cited and referred to in the body of the book. We hope that the work will meet with the popularity it deserves.

HIRE-PURCHASE, by Vidya Sagar, M.A., LL.B., Pleader, Delhi and C. L. Varma, B.A., LL.B. Published by Lawyer Brothers, Delhi. Price Rs. 4.

We are not aware of any Indian text book on the special branch of the law relating to hire-purchase agreements and we are glad that the learned authors have brought out a book on the subject which has become one of increasing interest in commercial transactions in this country, of late. The incidents of hire-purchase agreements and outright sales have to be distinctly kept in view. The learned authors have in the various chapters dealt with the subject in all its aspects and also the points arising out of the topics allied to the subject such as Bankruptcy, Insurance, Motor Vehicles Act and Rules. The appendix giving the forms of hire-purchase agreements will be found of practical utility. The statutory provisions having a bearing upon the subject are given in another appendix. We have every hope that the book will be found useful by lawyers and businessmen.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX ACT (XI OF 1922) (as amended up to date), by N. S. Raghavan, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. Published by V. S. N. Chari & Co., Madras. Price Rs. 3.

The Income-tax Act which was complicated even as it stood before, has been made more difficult to understand by the laymen and businessmen, if not also by lawyers, by the recent amendments. A handy commentary of the Act with explanatory notes, like the book under review, will therefore be found useful to the assesses and lawyers and judges. The introduction which gives a connected view of the Income-tax Law in a short compass will make the subject intelligible to a lay-reader. We welcome the book under review which will be found useful for a clear understanding of the enactment.

CAN A MAINTENANCE ORDER UNDER S. 488, CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, BE CANCELLED WHEN REUNION OF THE PARTIES TAKES PLACE?

The Criminal Procedure Code, as it now stands, does not provide for the cancellation of a maintenance order in many of the possible contingencies that may crop up during the life of a quarrelling couple. Whether such an order could be cancelled at all and what exactly the Court's powers are under S. 489, cl. 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code when the wife returns and lives with the husband, have come up for judicial determination in several cases and there is a remarkable conflict of opinion on the matter. Though the problem appears to be simple in its form, yet, Courts have entertained two sets of views on the matter. In view of the wording of S. 489, cl. (1) itself, one has to come to the conclusion that the legislature did not contemplate such possibilities on the part of the married couples, when once they quarrelled. After the passing of a maintenance order in favour of a wife, the same can be cancelled under two sets of circumstances:

(1) if the wife lives in adultery, etc., as in S. 488, cl. 5 and

(2) if a decree of a competent Civil Court comes into existence as in S. 489, cl. 2.

But courts not content with these provisions have tried to extend their jurisdiction in this direction by seeking to apply S. 489, cl. 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code to cases of reunion and hence the question regarding the Court's powers to cancel such a maintenance order under S. 489, cl. 1 arises.

2. The provision of the statute as embodied in S. 489, cl. 1 is as follows:—

"On proof of a change in the circumstance of any person receiving under S. 488 a monthly allowance, or ordered under the same section to pay a monthly allowance to his wife or child, the Magistrate may make such alteration in the allowance as he thinks fit:

Provided that if he increases the allowance the monthly rate of 100 rupees in the whole be not exceeded."

In this connection we must note that the dictionary meaning as found in Webster (Ed. 1916,) p. 64 of the word "alter" is as follows:—

(1) To change in one or more respects but without destruction of the identity of the thing changed.

(2) To make a thing different without changing it to something else. It also appears therefore that the change mentioned in S. 489, cl. 1 relates to the change in the pecuniary circumstances of the parties and not to the change in their status. Further, this section preceded by the word wife or child and followed by the limitation as to the amount of maintenance that can be awarded, is clearly indicative of the above view. (See In the matter of Din Muhammad and Shah Abu Ilyas v. Ulfat Bibi.)

3. If the above deduction is correct, it is submitted that the decision in Meenatchi Ammal v. Karuppuana Pillai alias Muthuswami Pillai, where it has been held that the word 'alteration' in cl. (1) of S. 489, Criminal Procedure Code, includes cancellation as well and therefore the maintenance order can be reduced to nothing also under this clause of S. 489, requires reconsideration. There the question arose whether a female child who had got a maintenance order in her favour was to lose the same when she got married and His Lordship held that she lost the same if her husband was found to be able to maintain her.

4. In this connection the case reported in U Po Shein v. Ma Sein Mya, may also be noted where it is held in a case of reunion after a maintenance order, that the Court has got jurisdiction to cancel the same. But the reasoning is different from that in Meenatchi Ammal v. Karuppuana Pillai alias Muthuswami Pillai. His Lordship in the Rangoon case observes in p. 462 thus:

"The provisions of S. 489 (1) would appear not to apply to a case like the present. At the same time it would appear unreasonable that a wife, once she has succeeded in obtaining an order under S. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, should be able permanently to hold this order in terrorem over her husband after a bona fide reunion. I would venture to say that the continuance of such a state of affairs would not assist the happiness of such a reunion. Since the original order of the Magistrate is conditional on neglect or refusal by the husband to maintain the wife a bona fide reunion must be interpreted as removing the basis on which the order of the Magistrate rests and as therefore vacating the order. . . . If there was subsequent desertion by the husband it was open to the wife to make a fresh application under S. 488, Cr. P. Code."

2. (1896) I.L.R. 19 All. 50 (F.B.).

4. (1930) I.L.R. 8 Rang. 460.

Hence His Lordship is of the opinion that the Court should cancel the order of maintenance if there is a bona fide reunion.

5. The contrary view taken in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹, *Parul Bala Debi v. Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee*², *Narayanaswami Mudali v. Mangayarkarasiammal*³, *Mt. Zauhra Bi v. Muhammad Yusaf*⁴ and *John P.E. Coelho v. Mrs. Blanche Coelhos Pearey Lal v. Mt. Narain*⁵ is based on what appears to be, with respect, the more logical and common sense view of S. 489, cl. (1), namely, that the maintenance order cannot be cancelled under this section—S. 489, cl. (1). His Lordship Curgenven, J., observes in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹ that the mere fact that a wife has returned to live with her husband will not have the effect of cancelling the previous order and the Code makes no provision for the cancellation of the order upon such an event occurring, and hence held that a temporary reunion between the husband and his wife had no effect of bringing the old order to an end automatically and the wife is still entitled to claim maintenance in spite of the temporary reunion. The said Judge has affirmed his own view in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹ in a later case in *Narayanaswami Mudaliar v. Mangayarkarasiammal*³. It is not clear whether the decision in Meenatchi Ammal v. Karuppana Pillai alias *Muthuswami Pillai*⁶ was brought to the notice of the learned Judge in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹.

6. There is yet another view taken in *Parul Bala Debi v. Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee*². This decision is very instructive and is relied on by His Lordship Mr. Justice Curgenvin in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹. In that case their Lordships Sanderson and Panton, J], of the Calcutta High Court, observe that a mere temporary stay of this kind though it may have the effect of suspending the operation of the maintenance order, yet had not the effect of cancelling it in the way in which it could be cancelled under S. 488, cl. 5.

7. The above cases deal with a wife who temporarily returns to her husband, lives with him and then wants to enforce the old order for maintenance. In one case she bore a child to the husband and then went away. (See *Narayanaswami Mudali v. Mangayarkarasiammal*²) But where a wife permanently returns to the husband, what is to become of the previous maintenance order? Looked at from that point of view, the sections of the Criminal Procedure are not wide enough to provide for such a possibility. If at all the defect is to be remedied it can be done only by the legislature. The observation of Curgenvin, J., in *Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar*¹ is pertinent and covers this possibility also to a certain limited extent. The learned Judge observes that if a wife returns to live with her husband, it would be open to the Court to decline to enforce the order, under S. 490, whether or not it would have the power in the absence of any statutory provision to cancel it.

8. It is high time that the legislature seeks to settle this matter once for all by enacting a provision giving legislative sanction for the suspension of the maintenance order so long as the parties remain reunited and the revival, as pointed out by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in *Parul Bala Debi v. Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee*³, of the order as soon as they fall out once again. Therefore it is suggested that the language in S. 489, cl. 1 should be so altered as to cover the above cases.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

NOBLE LOWNDES AND PARTNERS v. HADFIELD, LTD., (1939)
1 Ch. 569.

Practice—Action commenced in the name of a firm—Objection that firm not registered and so not entitled to sue—Application by the person who entered into contract to amend the plaint and to be substituted as the plaintiff—When to be allowed.

An action was commenced by L in the name of a firm of five persons, in the honest belief that he was entitled to sue in the firm name. Defendants in the course of the proceedings discovered that the firm was not registered and not entitled to sue. L then sought by a summons to be substituted as sole plaintiff and the defendants took out a summons to strike out the statement of claim.

Held, an action by or against a firm notwithstanding R.S.C. O 43-A, remains an action by or against the individual members of the firm and what is asked for not being substitution of a living person for a non-existent entity but merely for striking out the names of all the plaintiffs except one and to leave that one as sole plaintiff, the amendment must be allowed, but as the mistake was plaintiffs the costs of the action up to date and of the summons must be paid by him.

In re: FARMER: NIGHTINGALE v. WHYBROW, (1939) 1 Ch. 573.

Will—Legacies and annuities—Abatement—How to be effected—Rights of annuitants and residuary legatee.

Where an estate was insufficient to pay the legacies and annuity in full and there had to be an abatement the question arose as to how the abatement was to be effected in relation to the annuity having regard to the direction to set aside a sum, the income of which should be sufficient to meet it, with a gift over of the sum so set aside.

Held, the annuitant is entitled to have paid over to her the capital value of her annuity, when abated, if necessary. If after payment of the legacies and the actuarial value of the annuity in full any surplus remained, that surplus was payable to the beneficiaries who were to take the annuity found on the death of the annuitant. The surplus was not payable to the residuary legatee.

In re COLIN COOPER: LE NEVEFOSTER v. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, (1939) 1 Ch. 580.

Wills—Legacy to trustees on secret trusts—Whether trust or testamentary disposition—Essentials of valid trust.

The testator made a will on 13th July, 1931. On 10th February, 1938, he made another will revoking the earlier one and by a clause bequeathed to his executors £5,000, upon trusts which he had already communicated to them. Shortly after, the testator, while in Africa on a shooting expedition, was taken ill and brought down to a hospital in Kenya where on 27th March, 1938, he made a will cancelling the will of 10th February, 1938, and reviving the will of 13th July, 1931, except as to the sum of £5,000 bequeathed to trustees which was increased to £10,000, they knowing the testator's wishes. On 29th March the testator died, and the question arose whether the gift of the additional sum of £5,000 for the secret trust was valid.

Held, the main principle which is laid down is that communication of the purpose for which the legacy is given to the legatee and acquiescence by the legatee in that purpose or promise on his part to carry it out are the essential matters which render valid a legacy for a secret trust [Blackwell v. Blackwell, (1929) A.C. 318, followed]. It is a matter of trust and not testamentary disposition. As the bequest of the second £5,000 was not communicated and accepted by the trustees it falls back into the residue.

WALLINGTON v. TOWNSEND, (1939) 1 Ch. 588.

Contract for sale of land—Vendor's default not due to defect in title—Purchaser's right to damages—Nature and extent.

Where the vendor's failure to carry out the contract is not due to a defect in vendor's title, the damages are at large and the Court can give such damages as according to general principles it thinks right. When there was no evidence that the property was worth more than the purchase price the purchaser is entitled to return of his deposit with interest at 4 per cent. by way of damages in respect of the loss of the use of the deposit, damages in respect of the costs of approving and executing the contract, and damages in respect of the costs of investigating the title and preparing the conveyance and searches.

Until a legal personal representative has been constituted the Court has no power to make an order for the administration in bankruptcy of a deceased debtor's estate.

LAYCOCK v. FREEMAN HARDY AND WILLS, (1939) 2 K.B. 1.

Income-tax Act (1915), Schedule D, Cases I and II, rule 11, sub-rule (2)—Acquisition of wholesale subsidiary companies by holding companies—Acquiring company selling the goods direct to public—If company succeeded to the wholesale business.

A retail boot and shoe business was carried on by the respondent company who also owned the whole of the capital of two subsidiary wholesale manufacturing companies whose whole output they purchased. On a voluntary liquidation of the two subsidiary companies the business was assigned to the respondent company and goods manufactured by them were sold direct to the public from respondent company's shops.

Held, the wholesale business of the subsidiary companies ceased and the respondent company did not succeed to the wholesale business under the Income-tax Act, 1918.

MAHON v. OSBORNE, (1939) 2 K.B. 14.

Negligence—Surgeon and patient—Swab left in patient on operation—Res ipsa loquitur—If applicable—Degree of care required.

In an action by the mother of a deceased patient against the surgeon and staff for damages for negligence in leaving a swab in the patient which necessitated a second operation which resulted in death, the plaintiff contended that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable.

Held, a decision of actionable want of care cannot be justly reached without taking due account of all the circumstances of the particular operation and the legal standard of care cannot be set higher than that of the ordinarily good and careful practitioner in those circumstances and whether or not there was failure to exercise such skill and care must depend on the evidence in the particular case.

Per Mackinnon and Goddard, L.JJ., (Scott, L.J., dissenting) the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied and the burden of proof was on the defendants.

Per Scott and MacKinnon, L.JJ., (Goddard, L.J., dissenting).—There was no general rule of law requiring a surgeon after an operation to make sure that no swab was left in the patient.

UNITED AUSTRALIA, LTD. v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 53.

Election—Commencement of action based on contract—Waiver of tort—Subsequent action on same facts based on tort against third party—If barred.

In November, 1934, certain debtors sent to the plaintiff company an order cheque for £1,900. E, the Secretary of the plaintiff company, without authority, endorsed it, in the name of the plaintiff company, in favour of M. F. G. Company. M. F. G. paid the cheque to their bankers, the defendants who collected the money. It was a simple case of conversion by E and M. F. G., and if the matter stood there not only M. F. G. but also the defendants would be liable in conversion for the amount of the cheque. On May, 13, 1935, plaintiffs issued a writ against M. F. G. for the £1,900 as money lent or as money had and received to the plaintiff's use. M. F. G. went into liquidation and a proof by the plaintiff for the amount was not admitted as the funds available were non-existent or trivial in amount. On November, 8, 1937, the plaintiffs began the present action against the defendant claiming £1,900 as damages for conversion of the cheque.

Held, the election to institute the proceedings against M. F. G. for money had and received waiving the tort prevents the plaintiff from reviving the claim in tort so as to pursue the remedy in tort against the defendant bank.

NATIONAL REAL ESTATE AND FINANCE CO., LTD. v. HASSAN, (1939) 2 K.B. 61.

Practice—R. S. C., O. 25, r. 2—Preliminary issue—Point of law—Hearing and disposal before trial—Proper procedure.

Where advantage is sought to be taken of the procedure for hearing and disposal of a "point of law" before the trial, care should be taken that a real point of law is being raised and there should be a clear definition of what the point of law raised is, and it is only in those circumstances that the Court can properly deal with the matter and that the procedure under R. S. C., O. 25, r. 2 is any advantage whatsoever.

WHITHAM v. BULLOCK, (1939) 2 K.B. 81.

Lease—One assignee of part of a lease forced under stress of liability to distress to pay the rent payable by the assignee of another portion—Right to recoupment.

The defendant an assignee of a portion of leasehold property refused to pay rent as the plot assigned to him had been cleared under the Housing Acts. The plaintiff, to whom the other portion had passed by assignment was forced to pay the rent for the whole property under threat of distress by the lessor. The plaintiffs then claimed to be re-imbursed the defendant's share of the rent so paid.

Held, though the plaintiffs were not liable to be sued for the rent due by the defendant, the plaintiffs were entitled to sue defen-

REX v. MILLS, (1939) 2 K.B. 90.

Criminal trial—Jury—Acquiescing of minority in majority verdict—Validity of verdict.

In an appeal against conviction on the ground that the recorder instructed the jury that he could not release them until they had reached a verdict.

Held, it is of the greatest importance indeed it is fundamental that jury should not be led either by a desire to acquiesce or to avoid eccentricity, or to save time and trouble to represent themselves as holding an opinion which they do not in fact hold and the conviction must be quashed.

PAGET v. MAYO, (1939) 2 K.B. 94.

Road Traffic Act (1930), S. 22—Accident causing damage to stone wall and the vehicle itself—Failure of driver to report to police—If offence.

S. 22 of the Road Traffic Act requires the driver of a vehicle to report to the police, "If in any case owing to the presence of a motor vehicle on a road an accident occurs whereby damage or injury is caused to any person, vehicle or animal." The information preferred against the respondent alleged that he failed to report an accident by reason of which a stone wall and the vehicle itself which caused the damage were injured. The contention on behalf of the respondent that the damage was not to any person, vehicle or animal within the meaning of S. 22 was upheld.

REX v. THE RECORDER OF BOLTON: Ex parte McVITTE, (1939) 2 K.B. 98.

Public Health Act (1936), S. 58—Order to execute works of repair or restoration—Specification of works if essential for validity of order.

Under the Public Health Act, 1936, S. 58, the owner of certain structures was ordered by the justices for the County Borough to execute such works of repair or restoration or if he so elected to demolish the structure and remove the rubbish as may be necessary for remedying the cause of the complaint. The order was confirmed by the quarter sessions. On an order nisi for a writ of certiorari for quashing the order it was argued that the order was bad as it did not specify the works of restoration or repair.

Held, S. 58 did not require specifications of the works to be given and the order was valid.

MORSE v. MUIR, (1939) 2 K.B. 106.

Practice—Order for payment of costs of divorce proceedings—Subsequent order for payment by monthly instalments—Fresh action in King's Bench for interest on the costs—If maintainable.

In divorce proceedings there was an order for payment of £1,478 18s. 11d. to the petitioner who then took proceedings by way of judgment summons and obtained an order for payment of the amounts by instalments at the rate of 10l per month and after the whole amount had been paid commenced proceedings in the King's Bench Division for interest on the original amount.

Held, the original judgment debt is gone and for that has been substituted a debt payable by instalments of 10l, a month and as the original judgment is gone he cannot recover interest on it.

COMPAGNIE PRIMERA DE NAVAGAZIONA PANAMA v. COMPANIA ARRENDATARIA DE MONOPOLIO DE PETROLEOS, S.A., (1939) 2 K.B. 117.

Shipping—Charterparty for two consecutive voyages—If two severable or one indivisible voyage—Deviation in the first voyage—Effect on contract.

By a charterparty dated December 30, 1937, the "Yolanda" was chartered and the charter was to be in force for two consecutive voyages. It was found that in the first voyage there was deviation and it was contended by the charterers that the contract came to an end.

Held, the true analogy to apply to the case is not the analogy of a charter for a single voyage but the analogy of a contract for delivery of goods in instalments. There was nothing to indicate that the ship intended to deviate in the second voyage and the charterers cannot refuse to implement the contract with regard to the second voyage.

BRITANNIA ELECTRIC LAMP WORKS v. MANDLER & Co., (1939) 2 K.B. 129.

Bills of exchange—Liability of indorser—Necessity for presentment for payment at address mentioned—Indorsement by a person who is managing director without any description—If indorsement by the company.

The document reads: "£100. 23rd September, 1937. Two months after date pay to our order the sum of £100 for value received". Across it is written "Accepted and payable at 2, Manville Road, Balham, S.W. 17" and then the rubber stamp "D. Mandler & Co. Ltd. Managing Director" and D. Mandler signs his name above Managing Director and also on the back of the document.

Held, the document cannot be read as a promissory note made by D. Mandler and the signature (on the back of the document) of D. Mandler without any description cannot be read as the signature of the company and the document is futile. Presentment for payment must, if in the body of the note it is made payable at a particular place, be made at that particular place in order to render the indorser liable.

THE ABODI MENDI, (1939) P. 178.

Shipping—Action in rem for possession of ship—Ship put in charge of the marshal of the Admiralty—Refusal of access to ship to master appointed by owner—If interference with custody of ship—Procedure.

The Republican Government of Spain claiming to have requisitioned a Spanish ship issued a writ in rem and the ship was arrested by a marshal of the Admiralty. The owners entered unconditional appearance and the Nationalist Government also entered conditional appearance and claimed also to have requisitioned the ship. Plaintiff then gave notice of discontinuance of the action and asked that the warrant of arrest may be removed and defendant endorsed consent. On the same day plaintiff prevented the master from entering the ship and defendant withdrew the consent and moved by summons for the reinstatement of the master and the plaintiff asked for removal of arrest on the ground of discontinuance of the action.

Held, in an action for possession, once the ship was put into the charge of the marshal of the Admiralty Court, all persons concerned in the litigation were under a duty to abstain from any interference with the custody of the ship by the marshal. The exclusion of the master constituted a contempt and the master should be reinstated. Parties were given liberty to extract the release from the Registry after the master was reinstated.

In re HORROCKS: TAYLOR v. KERSHAW, (1939) P. 198.

Will—Probate—Jurisdiction of Probate Court to delete word—If to be exercised where omission of word will alter the sense of the will.

By a will of May 14, 1925 the testatrix bequeathed the residue of her real and personal estate to her trustee in trust for such charitable institution or institutions or other charitable or benevolent object or objects. . . . The testatrix died on March 29, 1929 and the will and codicil were proved in common form on May 7, 1929 and the legacies paid. The respondents held the residue as trustees upon trusts declared by the will. In the 1st half of 1937, the solicitor of the testatrix was alleged to have discovered a typist's error in the will of "or" instead of "and" in "charitable or benevolent." The respondents applied to have the probate corrected by the omission of the word "or". As the appellants objected to such important matter being decided on motion the writ was issued claiming to have the common form grant revoked and probate in solemn form with the omission of the word "or", granted,

Held, the Court of Probate has no jurisdiction to reject a word, the result of which would be to alter the sense of what remains and defeat the intention of the testatrix.

SIFTON v. SIFTON, (1939) P. 221.

Divorce—Husband's petition based on desertion—Discretion statement by petitioner admitting adultery—Answer by wife denying desertion and alleging adultery—Discretion statement by husband—If admissible in evidence.

The evidence given by the husband of his own adultery and the discretion statement put in evidence in earlier ex parte stage was available for the wife's framing of her counter-charge of adultery. In a petition for divorce based on desertion the presumption is against the deserting spouse and it is not incumbent on the petitioning husband (notwithstanding he did not expect or really want his wife to come back) to show that he was at all material times ready and willing to receive her.

CLARK v. CLARK (No. 1), (1939) P. 228.

Divorce—Adultery—Birth of child within 174 days of access—If sufficient proof of adultery.

A husband filed a petition against his wife, on the charge of adultery based simply and solely on the fact that on February 10, 1936, the wife gave birth to a child and that if the husband was in fact the father, the earliest possible date on which conception could have taken place was August 20, 1935.

Held, on the medical and other evidence it is utterly impossible to say that there is anything extravagantly improbable about this being a viable child, and there is no ground for saying that the child is illegitimate.

GALENE v. GALENE OTHERWISE GALICE, (1939) P. 237.

Husband and wife—Annulment of marriage by competent French Court—Judgment in rem—English Courts—Duty to enforce.

The marriage (in England) of the petitioner (a citizen domiciled in France) was annulled by a Court of competent jurisdiction in France on the ground of informality under French Law. Applying the general principle that a judgment of the competent Court of the domicile is a judgment in rem which must be recognised and enforced by the English Court unless it is obtained by fraud, collusion or other unlawful means, held, a decree nisi of nullity ought to be granted.

JORDAN v. JORDAN, (1939) P. 239.

Divorce—Desertion—Previous proceedings—If terminates or suspends period of desertion.

The husband filed a petition for divorce on the ground of desertion for at least 3 years preceding the presentation of the petition (January 17, 1938). The wife left the husband on October 16, 1932 and there had been no resumption of co-habitation since the date. On March 1, 1933, the husband filed a petition for divorce on the ground of wife's adultery. The suit was undefended and decree nisi was passed on June 14, 1933. On December 18, 1933, the wife and correspondent obtained leave to appear and an order that decree should not be made absolute before January, 22, 1934. On January, 19, 1934, the decree nisi was rescinded and the case ordered to be reheard. On January 26, 1934, the wife filed an answer denying adultery and making a cross-charge of adultery against her husband and prayed for divorce. On October 19, 1934, the husband's petition and wife's prayer in her reply were dismissed. There was no resumption of co-habitation.

Held, the fact of the institution and prosecution of proceedings by the deserted spouse does not absolutely terminate the offence of desertion but merely precludes him or her from asserting that the period of desertion runs during the pendency of those proceedings and that as a matter of law, the continued absence of the other spouse can re-assume "the quality of desertion" after the suspensory bar has been removed by the termination of the suit although there has been no subsequent resumption of co-habitation. It is not a condition precedent to the revival or continuance of the original desertion after earlier proceedings are disposed of, that some active steps have been taken by the petitioner towards bringing about a resumption of co-habitation.

CLARK v. CLARK (No. 2), (1939) P. 257.

Divorce—Desertion—Non-payment of amounts due under deed of separation—If intention to desert can be inferred.

By a deed of separation provision was made for the payment of 35s. per week to the wife and the husband paid for a considerable time, though irregularly and the wife eventually put the deed in suit and obtained judgment. In the wife's petition for divorce on the ground of desertion.

Held, from mere non-payment of the amounts under the separation deed, desertion cannot be inferred. Unless the withholding of payment is wilful, it has no significance.

SHAW v. SHAW, (1939) P. 269.

Divorce—Desertion—Refusal to commence co-habitation after expiry of agreement to postpone inception—If constitutes desertion.

A spouse who without excuse refuses to commence co-habitation after the expiration of an agreement merely to postpone its inception, can also be guilty of desertion.

BENNETT v. BENNETT, (1939) P. 274.

Divorce—Desertion—Insanity of deserting spouse—Effect.

Before a decree of dissolution for desertion can be granted, there must be desertion for 3 years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition. So, where a wife whilst sane, in fact deserted her husband for 31 years was certified as insane and was in a mental hospital for 18 months preceding the presentation of the petition.

Held, when she became insane her intention to desert came to an end, unless it is proved that although she was certified insane, on the question of co-habitation with her husband, she remained capable of forming a reasoned judgment. The burden of proof that she retains a rational intention to desert her husband rests on the petitioner.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Lord Shaftesbury as Lord Chancellor.—We read that when Lord Shaftesbury, who was appointed Lord Chancellor in 1672, sat in Court he wore neither wig nor cap, but a hat which Roger North charitably assumed might once have been black. In the Examen we are told that "His Lordship regarded censure so little, that he did not concern himself to use a decent habit as became a Judge of his station; for he sat upon the Bench in an ash-coloured gown silver-laced, and full-ribbed pantaloons displayed without any black at all in his garb, unless it was his hat which now I cannot positively say, though I saw him, was so." Another writer tells us that as late as the reign of Queen Anne, a Lord Keeper wore his own hair in Court, until he received the Sovereign's express order to adopt the venerable disguise of a full-bottomed wig. Lady Sarah Cooper recorded of her father, who was appointed Lord Keeper in 1705, that "the Queen after this was persuaded to trust a Whig ministry, and in the year 1705, October, she made my father Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, in the 41st year of his age—'tis said the youngest Lord Keeper that ever had been. He looked very young, and wearing his own hair made him appear yet more so, which the Queen observing, obliged him to cut it off, telling him the world would say she had given the seals to a boy." Obeying the regal command he, when he appeared in Court in his wig, looked so grave and reverend that the Queen had to look at him twice before she recognised him.—L.T., 1939, p. 342.

Counsels' Wig.—It is said that when members of the Bar began to adopt the wig in Court, the judges looked upon them as coxcombical in the last degree, and one writer goes so far as to say that the more prudent, not to say cunning, barristers, declined to adopt the obnoxious head-covering. Chief Justice Hale, an austere man, in particular, looked with much disfavour on counsel who wore periwigs and attorneys who went with swords. But the Court wig made headway, if the paronomasia may be pardoned, and it became almost universal by the close of the seventeenth century. In Scotland, however, the wig as the head covering for members of the Faculty of Advocates was slower in coming into vogue, the cocked hat and the powdered hair being the fashion. When Alexander Wedderburn joined the Faculty in 1754 wigs had not come into fashion with the Edinburgh advocates; and when precisely they did does not seem to be established. Even as late as the early part of the last century Jeffrey was accustomed to appear in the Court of Session without the conventional forensic head covering, but probably he was among the last to be thus conservative.—L.T., 1939, p. 343.

Sir Henry James's Wig.—Older members of the Bar may recall Sir Henry James while still in practice, and they may remember that he was one of the last to have his wig periodically powdered, to make it, like that of the Laird of Cockpen already mentioned, "as guid as when new." But he had a singular experience once while in Court. Being a Queen's Counsel, he was, of course, seated in the front row, where he was waiting to be called upon when his opponent had concluded his argument. Leaning back, the tails of his wig were seen by one of the old reporters, who sat immediately behind, to be getting into perilous proximity to the ink well in the juniors' row. With the laudable desire to save the white tails of the distinguished counsel's wig from being immersed in the ink, the reporter, whom the present writer knew well, gallantly came to the rescue by cautiously inserting his pen into the loop of the wig and proceeding to edge it to a safe distance, when, as ill-luck would have it, Sir Henry somewhat abruptly jerked his head, with the consequence that the pen, still entangled in the loop, twitched the wig right off, to the intense amazement of Sir Henry, who, naturally, turned round sharply, imagining that some diabolical agency had been at work. Hurried explanations were offered, and the incident ended like the fairy tales, quite happily. It was certainly an adventure for the reporter, and it gave him something to talk of in his later years.—L.T. 1939, p. 343.

Law Revision.—Lawyers are frequently, though quite ungenerously, assumed to seek the perpetuation of old rules in which they have been nurtured, regardless of the fact that they may run counter to what the ordinary person would consider fair dealing between man and man. For the most part, lawyers, like others, have to accept the law as they find it, but it is worth emphasising that most of the reforms, both in its substance and in its form, have emanated from members of the profession. The Law Revision Committee, during the few years of its existence, has been able to suggest various reforms which have proved of immense value as bringing rules of law more into consonance with its moral aspect. Now the committee has made a very practical proposal, namely, the modification of the rule laid down, no doubt correctly in strict law but on lines which many thought exceedingly harsh, in Chandler v. Webster, (1904) 1 K.B. 493, a case arising out of the postponement of the Coronation Procession in June, 1902, deciding that no action would lie to recover back money paid by the defendant to the plaintiff for the right to view the royal procession from his window. There, it will be remembered, the Court of Appeal decided that the defendant was entitled not only to retain the money paid on account, but was entitled also to recover the balance, the right to which had, by the terms of the contract, accrued prior to the date when the contract became impossible of performance. No doubt as the law stood, and still stands, the decision was correct, but nevertheless it could not fail to strike the layman, particularly the defendant in the action, and lawyers as well, as difficult to reconcile with justice. Sharing this view the Law Revision Committee propose that the rule should be modified by providing that in such circumstances the money paid prior to the frustration of the contract shall be recoverable, but subject to the deduction of such sum as represents a fair allowance for expenditure incurred by the payee for the purpose of performing the contract. Further, when at the moment of frustration the contract has been in part performed and that part is severable, the proposed rule is to apply only to that part of the contract which remains unperformed.—S.J., 1939, p. 385.

The Recommendations.—The recommendations concerning this important matter should be set out in detail. They are to the effect that the following rules shall apply when performance of a contract has been frustrated in whole or in part and any money has been paid, or has been agreed to be paid, at a time prior to the frustration: (1) Money paid by the one party to the other in pursuance of the contract shall be recoverable, but subject to a deduction of such sum as represents a fair allowance for expenditure incurred by the payee in the performance of or for the purpose of performing the contract. In fixing the amount of such deduction the Court shall include an allowance for overhead expenses, but shall also take into account any benefits accruing to the payee by reason of such expenditure, and the amount recovered shall not exceed the total of any money so paid or agreed to be paid under the contract. Loss of profit shall in no case be taken into consideration. (2) When at the moment of frustration the contract has been performed in part and the part so performed is severable, these rules shall apply only to that part of the contract which remains unperformed, and shall not affect or vary the price or other pecuniary consideration paid or payable in respect of that part of the contract which has been so performed. (3) For the purpose of these recommendations no regard shall be had to amounts receivable under any contracts of insurance. Finally, it should be observed that the committee does not recommend any alteration in the law relating to freight pro rata itineris. It is recognised that the rule has been frequently criticised, but considered that it has become so firmly fixed that it would be undesirable to alter it. For the same reason no alteration in the law relating to advance freight is favoured, except in the case of hire paid in advance under a time charter, which, it is considered, should be recoverable in the event of frustration of the adventure in the same manner and to the same extent as other payments in advance made under a contract. The report of the Committee is published as a White Paper by H. M. Stationery Office (Cmd. 6,009, price 2d net).—S.J., 1939, p. 385.

Bowen's Version of Latin Maxim.—In the Life of Lord Bowen, written by Sir Henry Stewart Cunningham, are enshrined many examples of the bright, sparkling wit for which Bowen was famous, one of these being a capital instance of a delightful manipulation of a well-known maxim. When it was uttered, Bowen was still at the Bar and he was appearing for the plaintiff, who was grounding his right to a piece of unenclosed land on the fact that his donkey had been habitually pastured upon it. At the close of the argument the judge inquired whether the plaintiff claimed the land through his accredited agent, the donkey. "Yes, my Lord," was Bowen's prompt reply. "My contention is, Qui facit per asinum facit per se." What could have been neater?—L.T., 1939, p. 359.

Bias.—If Lord Hewart had no other claims to fame he would be honoured by present and future lawyers for his judgment in R. v. Sussex Justices: Ex parte McCarthy, (1924) 1 K.B. 256. The famous passage, in which he insists that in all Courts justice must not only be done, but must be clearly and undoubtedly be seen to be done, has been so often quoted that few lawyers do not know it. Yet the fundamental rule which it expresses is still sometimes ignored by those who have to administer justice in inferior Courts. Last week a case of this kind came before a Divisional Court in the Divorce Division. A husband appealed against an order for maintenance which had been made by a Magistrate in a western city. He supported his application by evidence showing that the learned Magistrate was an intimate friend of his wife and his mother-in-law. He showed that his wife had told him (the applicant) that she would take steps to bring her complaint, or some similar complaint, before the Court on the particular day when this magistrate was sitting. The husband made due protest when the case came on below, but was overruled. Now he has got a new trial. The judges were careful to exonerate the magistrate from all charge of partiality; which, of course, we endorse. That was not the issue. The applicant may have got a fair trial: but could reasonably think that he had not.—L.J., 1939, p. 299.

Lord Merrivale.—Lord Merrivale, known at the Bar as Henry Duke, who died last Saturday at the age of 83, was the last survivor of the great advocates who dominated the Common Law Bar and won popular fame at the beginning of the present century; the others were Rufus Isaacs, Edward Carson, F. E. Smith and Marshall Hall. Sir Edward Clarke was earlier. The careers of the first three are well known. Marshall Hall did not go beyond advocacy. While at the Bar Henry Duke was the equal of any of them. Perhaps in his restrained and effective handling of cases he surpassed them. And he made his position entirely by his own merits. Without the advantages of public school or university education, he passed from apprenticeship in West Country journalism to the Press Gallery of the House of Commons, and then in 1885 he was called by Gray's Inn, and renewed his West Country associations on the Western Circuit. But all this was only the prelude to the position he won in London. Marshall Hall and Rufus Isaacs took silk in 1898, Henry Duke followed them in the following year. "F.E." was ten years later in 1908. Carson was already an Irish Q.C. when he came to the English Bar in 1892, and the silk in this country, which was at first refused to him, he obtained in 1894. After nearly 20 years in the first rank at the Bar, Duke became Secretary for Ireland when the Dublin Rebellion had broken Birrell's career there. But though Duke continued a policy of leniency, he succeeded little better than others. In 1918 he found a more congenial position in the Court of Appeal. A year later he became President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, and was raised to the Peerage as Lord Merrivale in 1925. In the Divorce Court he had to deal with the new conditions due to the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1923, and he proved himself a capable, courteous and dignified judge. His judgment in Apted v. Apted in 1930 had an important effect in fixing the present manner in which the judicial discretion in divorce is exercised. "Above all things," said Sir Francis Bacon of judges, "integrity is their portion and proper virtue". The words may fittingly be applied to Lord Merrivale.—L.J., 1939, p. 369.

A Famous Saying.—I have seen in an old file of the Westminster Gazette correspondence relating to the question as to whether Lord Justice Mathew, who had recently died, was the inventor or first author of the phrase admittedly used by him:

"Truth will out, even in an affidavit."

What Sir James Mathew "certainly said", according to one correspondent, was: "Truth will leak out, even in an affidavit". "The occasion", said the writer, "upon which he committed this brilliancy was an action brought to recover some land. At the end of the plaintiff's case it was submitted that there was nothing to show that the defendant was in occupation of the premises, and upon the evidence given at the trial the objection seemed to be fatal. But it occurred to the plaintiff's advisers that in an affidavit, made in an interlocutory application when it was important that the defendant should maintain the status quo, he had sworn that he was in possession. The affidavit was put in, and Mr. Justice Mathew (as he then was) gave judgment for the plaintiff in the single sentence aforesaid."

It had been alleged that Charles Reade had already coined the phrase. "If so," said the correspondent, "the learned Judge might well say, 'Pereant qui ante nos nostra dixerunt!'"—L.J., 1939, p. 380.

Truth Will Out.—The Westminster itself, writing from recollection, was "quite sure it was Charles Reade who first jested as to the affidavit". Later it gave the reference. "We have now before us as we write a copy of The Cloister and the Hearth, and in Chapter XXVII (page 171 of our edition) we have the following:

"Alas! It was an unlucky day. His sincere desire and honest endeavour to perjure himself were baffled by a circumstance he had never foreseen nor, indeed, thought possible.

He had spoken the truth.

And IN AN AFFIDAVIT"

The Westminster thought the Judge was quoting what at the time he believed to be familiar to many.

Another newspaper was of opinion that the legal bon mot was generally misunderstood. "He was not," said this paper, "disparagling the veracity of affidavits, though cynics have naturally seized on this interpretation, but contrasting unfavourably the value of written documents for getting at the whole truth with that of cross-examination".—L.J., 1939, p. 380.

Lord Merrivale.—No man who, before Ireland was a nation, allowed himself to be appointed to the Chief Secretaryship for that country could reasonably expect to survive the experience with unimpaired prestige. He might indeed survive, but hardly as a politician. Lord Merrivale, when he was Mr. Duke, K.C., M.P., a patriot, went to Ireland after the Easter Rebellion of 1916 not fully knowing whither and to what kind of people and problems he went. "Who are these Sin Feeners?" he asked an Irish friend of the English Bar a few days before he went to Dublin as Chief Secretary.

No further rebellion occurred in his time, but he was not regarded as wholly successful. He resigned in 1918; and returning to England and the law happily succeeded Swinfen-Eady, L.J., in the Court of Appeal. After 18 months he became President of the P. D. and A. Division, and so continued, living in Gray's Inn, until his retirement in 1933. Calm, seeming slow, patient, just, courteous and Devonian, he looked and was in fact grandly judicial, despite a certain hardness of hearing which hampered him in his later years.

I can just remember the days when Carson and he were often the "fashionable" leaders on opposing sides in the K.B. Quick in perception and slow of speech were both; well-matched, too; and the forensic battles of the Devonian and the Irishman were the students' joy.—L.J., 1939, p. 381.

Dissenting Judgments in the Lords.—Correspondence in the Times, to which Lord Dunedin and Dr. A. F. Pollard have contributed, has raised the question of the value of dissenting judgments in the House of Lords, and also of the different practice as to such judgments in the House of Lords and the Privy Council. The two questions are related, but distinct. Everyone knows the value of dissenting judgments. They are the whiff of salt sea air that keeps the judicial atmosphere of the House of Lords fresh and invigorating. Of course, the law and its application, however uncertain and confused the issue till the case reaches the House of Lords, may by the time it has arrived there become, if not clear, at least reasonably certain, and then the Lords follow their leader, each, in Lord Bowen's phrase, becoming Lord Concurry. At other times the lists are set and there is battle royal. The best known instance is the duel between Lord Birkenhead and Lord Sumner in the Russell legitimacy case in 1924, and in a sense Lord Dunedin decided the dispute, for had he been on the side of Lord Sumner instead of on the side of Lord Birkenhead, Lord Sumner would have won. Still more dramatic is it when a single Lord—an Abdiel in the Judicial Peerage—stands firm against the serried ranks of the majority who make the law by the sheer force of numbers. So Lord Shaw—not yet Viscount Craigmyle—upheld Magna Carta and the liberty of the subject in Zadig's case in 1917, and Lord Finlay struck a shrewd blow for Christianity in Bowman v. Secular Society. No, we could not do without the Great Dissenters in the House of Lords, useful as Lord Concurry may be.—L.J., 1939, p. 403.

The Unanimity of the Judicial Committee.—And when we pass from the House of Lords to the Judicial Committee, we find a great change. No one would speak without sincere respect of this Tribunal. For one thing its jurisdiction is the widest of any court in the world. It extends over a quarter of the population of the globe. For another, there is no fuss about it. "Its business is the search for truth; and the stuff which it works in is justice. A grave task and austere, according so much with simplicity and quiet that there is no place there for even the paraphernalia of a court." But while the great position which the Judicial Committee holds is well recognised, we do not suppose that its judgments rank in interest and weight with those delivered in the House of Lords. In the Judicial Committee there is no dissent, and members of the court who do not agree—if there ever are any—have to submit with a good grace. As to what happens when there is a difference of opinion history perhaps is silent. Lord Dunedin says that there would be no difficulty in recording a dissenting opinion; but he does not say that he ever did so. Dr. Pollard differs. He expresses the usual view that Judicial Committee judgments are unanimous because the members are not giving judgments, but advising the Crown, and they must speak with one voice. And he points to the practical difficulty in reversing a judgment by legislation. This can be readily done with a judgment of the House of Lords, but there is no common legislature to override a decision of the Privy Council. For this reason, perhaps, the House of Lords is bound by its own decisions; the Judicial Committee is not. Appeals to the House of Lords are now restricted, and the Judicial Committee no longer receives appeals—or very rarely—from some of the Dominions; but both these final Tribunals are held in high esteem.—L.J., 1939, p. 403.

Judah Philip Benjamin.—In the course of his recent miscellaneous reading the present writer has met with various references to the striking career of this distinguished lawyer whose memory is perpetuated in the Profession by his classic work on Sale. Born in the West Indies, Benjamin started his professional work in New Orleans, and soon built up a large practice, for he was a forceful advocate and a shrewd adviser. Ere long he conjoined legal work with a keen interest in politics, in 1861 joining Jefferson Davis's Cabinet as Attorney-General, and later becoming his Secretary of State till the collapse of the Confederates. Escaping in an open boat, he eventually reached this country, where he was in due time called to the Bar through the good offices of Lord Cairns, after only a short probationary period, and, despite a not over-prepossessing appearance and a voice with the very worst of American twangs, he triumphed over those disadvantages and made his merits known.—L.T., 1939, p. 391.

An Early Case.—The late Sir John Hollams, in his pleasant little book of professional reminiscences, had a good deal to say of Benjamin, of his forcefulness in advocacy and persistency in the submission of his points, instancing his appearance as junior in a Chancery suit instituted by the American Government against certain agents in this country with respect to the expenditure of the large amount raised in Europe by the issue of Confederate bonds. The suit came on before Vice-Chancellor James, and it appeared that, as usual at that time, a decree would be made directing inquiries in chambers, when, suddenly Benjamin rose, and to the astonishment of all present, began thus in a stentorian voice: "Notwithstanding the somewhat off-hand and supercilious manner in which this case has been dealt with by my learned friend, Sir Roundell Palmer, and to some extent acquiesced in by my learned leader, Mr. Kay, if you will only listen to me—if you will only listen to me—(repeating the same words three times, and on each occasion in a crescendo), I pledge myself you will dismiss this suit with costs". Sir John added that the Vice-Chancellor, Sir Roundell Palmer and the whole court looked at Benjamin in amazement, but he went calmly on without intermission for an hour or two. The court became crowded, for it was very soon bruited about that something singular was going on in the usually quiet court of the Vice-Chancellor. In the end the suit was dismissed, and this dismissal was confirmed on appeal.—L.T., 1939, p. 391.

Pressing Appointment.—Often a joke has a longer and more complicated ancestry than you might think. I myself have traced one back with little variation to the time of the ancient Romans. Thus in a recent number of a comic paper there was a drawing of an infuriated lady in bridal dress standing in an office ante-room while the switch-board girl calls through: "There is a lady to see you, Mr. Larkin. Says you had a ten o'clock appointment with her." Now, more than a hundred years ago, the Inns of Court used to rock with laughter at the story of Mr. Serjeant Hill's wedding day. In the morning he went to his chambers as usual but, becoming immersed in a brief, forgot all about his engagement. Time passed and at last a messenger was sent in search of him and brought him safely to the church. After the ceremony he found means to get back to his library to look up another case, and it was dinner time before his clerk could get him packed off home to his expectant bride. I believe it was Chief Baron Palles whose last thought as he left for his honeymoon was to take Fern on "Contingent Remainders" with him.—S.J., 1939, p. 475.

A Bold Peer.—An extra from the Morning Post of a hundred and fifty years ago tells how after a conflict between Lord Stanhope and several bishops on a Bill brought in by him, another Bill was postponed to a future date, the noble lord declaring "that he would on that day teach the Lord Chancellor of England law as he had on the present taught the Bench of Bishops gospel". One can only gasp at his boldness thus to beard Lord Thurlow on the Woolsack:

"That rugged Thurlow who with Sullen Scowl
In surly mood at friend and foe will growl."

Hardly had he received his peerage when he cowed the whole House of Lords by trampling on the Duke of Grafton who had sneered at his plebeian origin. "The noble Duke", he said, "cannot look before him, behind him or on either side of him without seeking some noble Peer who owes his seat in this House to successful exertions in the profession to which I belong. Does he not feel it is as honourable to owe it to these as to being the accident of an accident?" His verbal ferocity caused him to be known as "The Tiger". Once the Bishop of Peterborough fell foul of him by speaking of "fruitless desolation" which, said the Chancellor, is "an expression which carries no meaning and is neither sense nor grammar. It is not supported by any figure of speech or by any logic or even by any vulgarism that I ever heard. 'Fruitless desolation,' my lords, is rank nonsense. I was not aware before that desolation might be fruitful."—S.J., 1939, p. 475.

The Week's Personality.—On the 22nd June, 1861, Lord Campbell seemed, despite his eighty-one years, to be in full vigorous health. Only two years before he had taken on the Chancellorship, a final proof of his supreme talent for getting on, and after a life spent in the Common Law Courts he had turned himself into a respectable Equity Judge. On this day, in 1861, he drove to Lincoln's Inn with two of his daughters, sat in court till the afternoon and then went to Downing Street for a Cabinet meeting. Then he went home to Stratheden House and, having some time to spare before preparing for a dinner party, he sat down at his desk and wrote a judgment. The first of his guests to arrive was his old friend Sir David Dundas, who had just come from the bedside of one who had been stricken with the loss of all his faculties. Campbell declared that there should be added to the litany a fresh petition: "From a lingering illness, Good Lord deliver us". He entertained his guests with animation and bidding his children good night finally retired to his room near midnight. Next morning his servant found him sitting in his chair dead. He had been "honourably released from the labours and anxieties of the Great Seal".—S.J., 1939, p. 495.

No Flying Start.—In a recent address in Gray's Inn Hall, Sir Wilfrid Greene, the Master of the Rolls, pricked the bubble of a common illusion that an advocate's life is a series of dramatic incidents by which he attains success with no mental effort. He also treated as imaginary the popular picture of the fortune-making brief unexpectedly delivered to a young advocate sitting in his chambers at 5 o'clock on a Saturday afternoon by a desperate solicitor who has hunted through the rest of the deserted temple. There is rarely any drama about a first brief. When the future Lord Sankey first went into a London court he took ten volumes of law reports and was very apprehensive of the pugnacious reputation of his opponent. To keep his courage up he kept murmuring: "There is a tide in the affairs of men." But there was no tide. The other side submitted to judgment and all he had to say was: "My lord, I ask for costs." The great Hawkins, J., returned his first brief because the prisoner he was briefed to defend on a charge of stealing a wheelbarrow had pleaded guilty. He only realised his foolishness when he heard a senior counsel who had pocketed the guinea simply admit the man's guilt and express the hope that the Judge would deal leniently with him. Equally undramatic was the coming of the first client to the future Mr. Justice Alpers of New Zealand where Bar and solicitors are one. A member of the profession brought him an affidavit to be sworn, but suddenly he remembered that he had not the remotest idea of the proper form of words. He therefore had to appeal to his visitor, who obligingly dictated the formula and was duly sworn.—S.J., 1939, p. 495.

First Appearances.—Sometimes briefs do come out of the blue. The late Mr. Balfour Browne, K.C., on his first circuit, received a brief at Derby from an unknown solicitor. When the case was over he asked his client how he came to deliver it to him, and received the cryptic reply: "It was because you went into court last". But though Balfour Browne tried the method again it never worked. The famous Montagu Williams, who became a great criminal advocate, made a very poor show in his first case, a prosecution for horse-stealing. On the inevitable acquittal, he so far forgot himself as to jump up in great anxiety, exclaiming: "My lord, what's to become of the horse?" Marshall Hall's first employment was a Chancery case in which all he had to do was to consent to an injunction against his client.—S.J., 1939, p. 495.

Enthusiasm for the Law.—We have it on the uncontrovertible authority of Lord Chancellor Bacon that every man is a debtor to his profession, a pronouncement which presumably means that those belonging to the particular calling owe to it the obligation of carrying out the duties entrusted to them with the utmost diligence and with the like integrity. This is, of course, true of all professions, but it is especially true of that to which we belong; but while members of the legal profession readily acknowledge the obligations incumbent upon them towards their clients and towards the court, not everyone evinces any particular enthusiasm for the work he may be called upon to undertake. He may, no doubt, feel a generous warmth when briefs arrive at his chambers marked with comfortable fees; further, in the heat of advocacy he may feel something of that joy which, according to Sir Walter Scott, the warrior feels on encountering a foeman worthy of his steel, but this is the joy of conflict rather than the quiet satisfaction which animates the expert on some legal subject when something he has undertaken to carry out eventuates in a complete success. Curiously enough, such a sense of satisfaction seems to have been attained by those of whom the great world in the sphere of law know nothing or very little, such as those whose lives, professionally speaking, have been spent in the quietude of their chambers in the drafting or the revision of documents either for the purposes of litigation or the investigation of title.—L.T., 1939, p. 423.

Lord Campbell's Tribute.—The many volumes that came from the busy pen of Lord Campbell treating of the lives of the Lord Chancellors and Chief Justices may not all be taken au pied de la lettre in the matter of strict accuracy or just appreciation of the various characters who move across his pages, but at least this may be said with assurance that he was able to write so attractively that he who runneth may read. There is no gainsaying the brilliance of his writing and the intense human interest he gives to his biographies. Occasionally, too, he intersperses an anecdote of special interest, and one of these is particularly relevant to the matter in hand. In his biography of Thomas Parker, who rose to be Lord Chancellor Macclesfield in the Georgian period and who was a particularly fortunate person in some respects, we read that on his being presented with the Great Seal in 1718 it was accompanied by an extraordinary gift of £14,000 from the King, while his son was granted a yearly pension of £1200 till he obtained the place of teller of the Exchequer, to which he was appointed in the following year. It is true that Lord Macclesfield fell on evil days by reason of corruption in the sale of offices and of other delinquencies not quite fitting his position as the head of the law. The point in connection with this Lord Chancellor to which attention is called by Campbell on the topic now under discussion dates from the days when Macclesfield was still at the Bar and was only Mr. Parker.

As counsel in the once famous cause celebre, Regina v. Tutchin, which was tried by Lord Holt at the Guildhall, his argument on the objection taken to the regularity of the jury process, Campbell says, was "most masterly, and by genuine lawyers is perused with enthusiasm". This then leads Campbell to append a foot-note which is surely one of the most delightful of his anecdotes, namely, a saying of the deceased Mr. Duval, the greatest conveyancer of his day. On being asked by Campbell whether the constant perusal of abstracts of title was not "weary work" Duval replied thus: "It is sometimes a little dull; but every now and again one meets with a brilliant deed, which is a reward for all one's labour." To this confession of enthusiasm Campbell appends no less than three notes of exclamation, as if to call attention to the absurdity of the remark; but while our individual tastes may not run exactly in the same direction as Duval's, we may admire the genuine enthusiasm he brought to his daily round and common task.—L.T., 1939, p. 423.

Theobald Mathew.—We very much regret to have to record the death of Mr. Theobald Mathew at the age of 72. The son of Lord Justice Mathew, who was one of the great Judges of late Victorian years, he showed, though in a less prominent sphere, the abilities of his father abilities enlivened by a humour to which pen and pencil alike bore witness. To readers of The Law Journal he was known by his Forensic Fables, which for a series of years portrayed the lighter side of litigation. In this he followed in the steps of Sir Frank Lockwood, whose sketches, both legal and political, delighted an earlier generation. And Theobald Mathew's abilities were shown, in a more serious though still very interesting way, in the collection of essays which he published in 1937 under the title For Lawyers and Others. The Duchess of Kingston's case is a well-known leading case in Estoppel, but Mathew's account of it brought out the human interest which its technicalities concealed. And he was equally at home in the "Decline and fall of the Serjeants" and in the need for reforming the Judicature Acts. But these were only diversions. "Silk" did not win him from the Junior Bar, and he remained there to give his numerous clients the benefit of his wide knowledge of legal principle and his shrewd judgment on the possibilities of their cases. And with his combination of wit, kindness and learning it is small wonder that he gained with the Bar a position of esteem which is rarely rivalled.—L.J., 1939, p. 443.

The Macnaghtens.—The Hon. Mr. Justice Macnaghten, who has been on the Bench for more than 10 years, is in himself a justification of the hereditary principle. In him more than in any other contemporary Judge the learning and principles of the Common Law and of Equity are combined, and he can apply them without conflict.

In his earlier youth he went from Eton to Cambridge with a major scholarship at Trinity; he was President of the Union in 1890 and graduated with a First in the Historical Tripos in 1891. Called by Lincoln's Inn in 1894 he was elected Bencher in 1915 and took silk in 1919, and both as junior and silk had a large practice. Unionist M. P. for North Derry in 1922, he was elected for the City and County of Londonderry in November of that year and he continued until his election to the Bench in 1928. He was returned at the previous General Election by the largest majority of any member of the House.

The great Lord Macnaghten, appointed direct from the Bar to the House of Lords, who twice refused offers of Judgeships and once the Principal Secretaryship of State was his father, of whom it is written in the Dictionary of National Biography: "As a Judge his name will long endure. He possessed in a happy combination the gifts of listening with patience and deciding without doubt, after bringing to bear his great range of unobtruded learning and a clear practical appreciation of business and of character it was remarkable that both Bench and Bar fell into the way of citing a sentence or two of an opinion of Macnaghten and of accepting it without discussion as an authoritative statement of the law."

The mother of Macnaghten, J., was the only child of Sir Samuel Martin, Baron of the Exchequer; "his vast knowledge of business and the vigour of his understanding enabled him to master the essential parts of a case with marvellous celerity and his judgments were marvels of terseness and precision." He went Circuit as a Judge, and where demanded by justice could impose a heavy sentence; but "his natural kindness of heart induced him not infrequently to endeavour to obtain their mitigation."—L.J., 1939, p. 455.

The Passing of Theobald Mathew.—Theo Mathew is dead. The Bar could not, by the death of any of its members, suffer a greater loss. He would go on working almost to the end of last term, when he ought to have rested. Last Friday, although he was very ill and spoke with difficulty, I thought he would recover; that his mind, keen and alert as ever, and his unquenchable spirit would compel his body to survive. He rejoiced to see his friends and to hear and speak of what was doing in the Temple; of the South-Eastern Circuit and of the dinner given to his friend "Malcolm" at Chelmsford; and the irresistible humour of his comments evoked laughter from the two who were with him, one of them the brave woman who nursed him to the end and is now his widow. Under the fresh shock of this melancholy news I know not what to say or how to say it. I am one of a great number who loved this man; and the grief we feel is not so much for the man of genius; the incomparable and kindly wit, the lawyer of great learning the imi-table author of forensic fables and caricatures the master of the spoken and the written word; but rather for the man incapable of meanness, the friend whose life was spent in helping others rather than himself. He went about doing good; and he did so as a good Christian unconscious of his merit, in accordance with the precept: Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth.—L.J., 1939, p. 455.

Voluntary Judicial Service.—One notable characteristic of English public men is their readiness to undertake voluntarily duties without any reward save the satisfaction they may themselves feel in rendering useful service to the nation. Again and again this has been exemplified in various departments of our national life, and notably in that of the law. It might well be thought that one who has discharged the arduous functions to which a Judge of the Supreme Court is called, for the period entitling him to retire and thus obtain a well-earned rest, had sufficiently demonstrated his devotion to duty, but time and again ex-judges have returned to what the poet termed "the dusty purlieu of the law" in order to lend assistance in clearing the arrears which periodically have a knack of accumulating. This public spirit has again been exemplified during recent days in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, where Lord Fairfield, whom we best recall as Lord Justice Greer, and who only recently retired from the Court of Appeal where his profound legal learning and his invariable courtesy proved an asset of which we were all proud, and also Lord Salvesen, an ex-judge of the Court of Session, have been assisting in disposing of the heavy list of appeals which have come from the various outposts of Empire to find their definitive decision in the quietude of the Council Chamber. Seeing that the Judicial Committee has a jurisdiction unexampled in extent and diversity of laws it is of the greatest advantage to have on the Bench representatives of various systems of law, each being thus able to bring his special knowledge into the common stock, and so making the committee a centre of enlightenment in juristic learning.—S.J., 1939, p. 505.

Legal Formulas.—This week the House of Lords in its judicial capacity has delivered a large number of decisions, most of them of great importance, but it is curious to note that their lordships, in announcing their intention to deliver their decision, do not, as do the judges of the High Court and Court of Appeal, intimate in the cause list their intention to "give judgment" on a certain date, they announce that the case is "to be considered," which means that they will deliver their opinions; in other words their judgment. These little differences in terminology are duly reflected in the reports. In the Law Courts the reporter at the end of the argument he provides will probably use the words "Cur. adv. vult.", which, as we all know, is the abbreviated form of stating that their lordships announced their intention to postpone giving their decision, whereas in the reports of cases in the House of Lords the corresponding formula is: "The House took time for consideration," and in due course, in the official list, the case will appear as "to be considered" on the date mentioned. These, to be sure, are small matters, but they have a certain interest, showing, no doubt, the force of tradition.—S.J., 1939, p. 505.

Limited Knowledge.—A story has come down to us regarding someone who might be described as a well-informed man who strenuously endeavoured to open up a conversation with a traveller whom he encountered on his route, but all his efforts to draw the latter proving futile, at last expostulated thus: "My friend, I have tried to talk to you on a great variety of subjects—the weather, politics, the law, the church, business, the crops, but all in vain. Is there any topic on which we might hold converse?" To this the hitherto unresponsive person replied: "Can you say anything pretty about bend leather?" Apparently this subject, whatever it might mean, was outside the talkative gentleman's parish and one gathers that no conversation ensued, as how could it? All cannot, it is true, be Admirable Crichtons with a universality of knowledge, but in the law it is of course essential to possess a considerable stock of knowledge of life and its affairs, and the greater the stock the more useful it will be found. This does not of course mean that we should be like him of whom Lowell wrote long ago as "A reading machine, always wound up and going,

He mastered whatever was not worth knowing."

Gaps in Judicial Knowledge.—Occasionally it has happened that even on the Bench its occupant has had to confess to a lack of familiarity on some subject forming part of the case under discussion, or even has shown in a very marked degree that he is ignorant altogether of the matter discussed. One of the most amusing instances of this, due to unfamiliarity with local terms, is said to have occurred at Newcastle long ago. According to the story, the deputy-surveyor of the city was giving evidence at an important trial, and doing so in dialect of the true Northumbrian type. He deposed as follows: "As I was going along the quay, I saw a hubble-shew coming out of a charge-foot." The Judge, it is not surprising to be told, was not aware that on Tyne-side the term "hubble-shew" denoted a "concourse of riotous persons", or that the narrow alleys or lanes in the city were popularly known as "chares," and that the lower end of each alley was termed a "chare-foot", but he seemed at the moment to be puzzled only by the curious word "hubblesheew", so he inquired its meaning, which having been explained by the witness, the Judge said: "And you mean to say that you saw a crowd of people come out of a chair foot?" "I do, my Lord," said the witness. Thereupon the story goes that the Judge turned to the jury, and remarked: "Gentlemen of the jury, it must be needless for me to inform you that this witness is insane!" It is to be hoped that his Lordship was eventually put right on the true meaning of a chare-foot, and as to the sanity of the witness, and that no miscarriage of justice was caused.—L.T., 1939, p. 11.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE LAW OF MASTER AND SERVANT by Anadinath Sarkar, B.L. Published by Messrs. M. C. Sircar & Sons, Ltd., 14, College Square, Calcutta. Price Rs. 4.

In this short treatise on the subject of 'Master and Servant,' the author has succeeded in producing a useful book of reference. Under the various chapters, the relationship of Master and Servant with particular bearing on the topics of Servant and Agent, Servant and Bailee, Servant and Apprentice, etc., has been lucidly brought out with the case-law up to date, both English and Indian. The liability of master in an action for tort against the employee especially in the course of the master's service, is a subject of perennial interest coming before courts for decision, and we have the satisfaction that the book deals with it in a separate chapter adequately illustrating the points with leading cases.

We hope the modesty of the author in introducing the book to the public with the words 'nor does it aspire to stand on the same shelf with the masterly works on the subject' may not deter the eager students of that branch of the law from profiting much by a perusal of it.

INCOME-TAX RETURN AND HOW TO FILL IT by Surendra Singh, M.A., B.Sc., LL.B. and D. R. Jain, A.C.A. (Eng. & Wales), A.S.A.A. (Lon.), F.F.C.S. (Lon.), 2, Hotu Singh Road, Lahore. Price Re. 1.

It will be found that this pamphlet is very timely after the recent amendment of the Income-tax Act. Many will agree that the recent amendment has only added more difficulties to an Act already not easy of understanding. Hence an attempt of the kind this pamphlet makes will receive the recognition it deserves.

MEDICO-LEGAL COURT COMPANION. Published by the Eastern Law House, Calcutta, 1939 Edn. Price Rs. 7-8-0.

The volume under review has deservedly enjoyed reputation for its clarity, and the fact that it has run into three editions makes its popularity more convincing to us.

The subject is discussed in every chapter with necessary references to the various sections of the Indian Penal Code. There is nothing therefore to detract us from realising the author's thorough grasp and exhaustive comprehension of the subject. The questions that are appended to this volume make the book more useful to those in the actual work of helping investigations of crimes by courts.

HINDU LAW, PRINCIPLES AND PRECEDENTS by N. R. Raghavachariar, Advocate, Associate Editor, The Law Weekly, Madras. Published by The Indian Law House, Mount Road, Madras. Price Rs. 8.

The second edition of Mr. Raghavachariar's Hindu Law has appeared none too soon. The first edition of the book has already won the approval of competent critics. Since the first edition, important enactments on some branches of Hindu Law have been passed by the Legislature, the most notable of which is the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act of 1937. There has also appeared the latest edition of Mayne's Hindu Law from the pen of Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar which has thrown fresh light on many questions of Hindu Law. Several important decisions have been given by the various High Courts and by the Privy Council. In view of all these, Mr. Raghavachariar has had to re-write many portions of the book and add about 250 pages to it. As we observed in reviewing the first edition, the learned author has not rested content with giving references to the cases without marking his preference and giving his reasons for the same. We may notice in this connection that in dealing with the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, he has canvassed the view of Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar that the Amending Act of 1938 is ultra vires in so far as the succession to agricultural lands is concerned and has differed from it at pages 740 to 742 of the book, after discussing the question with reference to the rules of construction applicable to such questions and the decisions. It is needless to say that all the decisions have been noticed in their appropriate places. Two noticeable features of this edition are that new chapters have been added on the Law of Jains and the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act. We must also point to one welcome departure in this edition which is that references to all the non-official legal journals have been given of the cases referred to, so that the practitioners may not be compelled to look for any single report. We have no doubt that the book will be read with interest and profit by students, lawyers and judges.

LAW OF EVIDENCE IN INDIA AND BURMA (6th Edn.) by S. C. Sarkar, Judge, Calcutta Small Cause Court. Published by S. C. Sarkar & Sons, Ltd., College Square, Calcutta. Price Rs. 16.

Sarkar's Law of Evidence has been looked upon as one of the leading commentaries on the Indian Evidence Act and we welcome the appearance of the sixth edition seven years after the fifth edition was published. A lengthy review of such a popular book is not called for as we had occasion to review the earlier editions and drew attention to its salient features. A number of decisions under the Act have appeared since the last edition and the learned author says that the citation in the present edition has increased by two thousand instances. A new feature of this edition is that under each section there is a synopsis given which gives references to pages in which each one of the topics referred to therein has been discussed and dealt with. We have no doubt that this edition will fully maintain the reputation of its predecessors.

THE LAW OF LOCAL BODIES IN THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY by Rao Saheb C. P. Ramachandra Rao, B.A., B.L. Published by V. S. N. Chari & Co., Nungambakkam, Madras. Price Rs. 6.

The object of this book is to impress upon the mind of the reader the fundamental principles of Local Self-Government law and to arouse a general interest in the subject. With that view the learned author has adopted a topical treatment and a narrative method of exposition of the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act and the Madras Local Boards Act. He has given references only to leading decisions as a fuller citation of cases will only embarrass the lay reader. The book has been divided into twelve chapters each dealing with a separate subject. We have no doubt that the book will be found useful to all persons having to deal with the subject.

CRIMINAL APPEAL & REVISION by Biswa Nath Banerjee, M.Sc., B.L., Advocate, Calcutta. Published by The Law Book Company, Calcutta. Price Rs. 4.

This book collects all the learning connected with the Law and Practice of Criminal Appeals and Revisions. The matter contained in this book can be judged from the fact that the chapters deal with appeals to the Privy Council; to the Federal Court, to the High Court, to the Court of Session and to the District Magistrate. There are also chapters dealing with petitions, grounds and summary dismissal of appeals, the powers of an appellate Court, additional evidence, judgment and bail. There are also the other chapters dealing with references to the High Court, revision, further enquiry and commitment, review, appeal and revision under other Laws, limitation and court-fees. There is also a chapter dealing with habeas corpus, certiorari and mandamus. From the variety of subjects dealt with, it will be agreed that the book will be found helpful to lawyers, magistrates and judges.

COPY OF A BILL TO AMEND S. 100, CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, WHICH MR. Q.M.D. AHMED KAZMI (M.L.A.), ALLAHABAD, INTENDS MOVING IN THE CENTRAL LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

BILL.

Further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient to further amend the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

This Act may be called THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) ACT OF 1939.

2. In sub-S. (1), S. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure after the ground (c) add the following:—

“(d) the original decree of the trial Court having in appeal been varied, cancelled or reversed:

Provided that a High Court, while hearing a second appeal on any of the grounds (a), (b) or (c) above, may in its discretion determine the correctness or otherwise of the decision on points of fact also if it thinks that the decision of the Court below is erroneous or unjust.”

Statement of Objects and Reasons.

S. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure deals with the grounds of second appeal in civil suits. The grounds given there are as follows:—

(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law,

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law,

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or any other law for the time being in force which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon merits.

This section corresponds to S. 584 of the Code of 1882 and S. 372 of the Code of 1859 with only a slight variation. The first two grounds deal with a mistake of law and the third ground with a mistake of legal procedure, and apparently a mistake of fact does not come in the scheme of this section at all, unless we can bring it in the words "error or defect in the decision of the case upon merits", resulting from the adoption of illegal procedure. It is rightly suggested that this provision of imposing limitations on the grounds that may be taken in second appeal is based on grounds of public policy expressed in the maxim interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium,—it concerned the state that there be an end to litigation. But on a perusal of the earlier legislation of the East India Company, it would appear that another and probably the main reason for the original limitation was the curtailment of work before the appellate Court. In the early days of the British Rule there used to be no District Courts of Appeal and only one appeal lay to the Sadar Dewany Adawlat which at the time consisted of the Governor-General and the members of the Supreme Council, who naturally could not be expected to devote much time to work of this kind. The Sadar Dewany Adawlat held its sitting at Calcutta and the distance of the Mufassil Courts from Calcutta was one of the safeguards against the increase of work; the other safeguards adopted was that an appeal was allowed only in respect of properties of large valuation.

The first attempt for providing facilities for appeal was made in 1793, when Provincial Courts of Appeal were established by Regulation V of 1793. Article 1 of this Regulation which can be termed a preamble according to our modern notions says:—

"Parties in suits instituted in the late Courts of Mufassil Dewani Adawlat who considered themselves aggrieved by the decisions of those Courts, had no tribunal to which they could apply themselves but the Sadar Dewani Adawlat, or Court of Appeal at Calcutta."

After this the preamble records that for the facility of the litigant public Provincial Courts of Appeal have been established. The powers of hearing appeals were given to Circuit Judge and the idea of not unduly increasing the work before the Sadar Dewani Adawlat led to the adoption of the rule that second appeals could only be on points of law.

Though later on gradually and with certain variations the Governor-General in Calcutta and the Governors in Madras and Bombay with their Council ceased to constitute the Sadar Dewani Adawlat which came to be presided over by permanent judges and was later on replaced by the High Courts, yet the same old rule about second appeals continues on the Statute Book with certain variations.

On whatever principle we may justify this rule it is intended to be a restriction on the rights of the litigant public and in actual practice it is a restriction on the rights of the High Courts also. After creating a High Court of Judicature for administering justice in the province how can the Government be justified in restricting its power in its administration, and it is an undeniable truth that the High Courts have been compelled to restrict their activities due to this provision of law. In their eagerness to do justice to the litigants the various High Courts have very much reduced the rigour of the provisions of this section of Civil Procedure Code by giving liberal interpretation to clause (c) which as pointed out above can be made to cover points of facts as well; yet the struggle has been a serious and continuous one and the British Indian Courts of Justice had to yield to the rigour of the section by holding:—

“The law obviously aims at finality of decision upon questions of fact in cases which do not come up to the High Courts in the first appeal, and I should say that when the Court of first appeal, after having entered into the merits of the case, has considered the evidence and adjudicated upon the merits in the manner required by S. 574 (now O. 41, r. 30) the mere circumstance that the conclusion at which the Court has arrived at are erroneous, or opposed to weight of evidence, will not justify interference in second appeal, even though such conclusions proceed upon an improper conception of the exact effect and bearing of the case upon merits.” (Mr. Justice Mahmud in *Nivath Singh v. Bhikki Singh*¹.)

These remarks are very significant and show the restrictions on the powers of the High Courts of Justice in India. They were made in connection with a reference which was made to a Full Bench by Petheram, C. J., and Brodhurst, J., of Allahabad. They wanted to know whether the question raised in the two cases before them in the following grounds of appeal could be made the subject of second appeal:—

“ (1) Because the lower Court has erred in deciding the case on conjectural grounds and ignoring the whole evidence,

1. (1885) I.L.R. 7 All. 649 (659) (F.B.).

(2) Because the lower Court has erred in reducing the amount covered by the registered bond of 8th December, 1877,

(3) Because the lower Court has assigned no reason for disallowing the item of Rs. 72-15" and "because the lower appellate Court has erred in law in awarding the sum of Rs. 168 compound interest, including other sums not lawfully due by the vendor to the respondent vendee, of the share in suit."

Evidently these grounds appear to relate to errors in the determination of facts, and Petheram, C.J., who was a member of the Full Bench, was of this very opinion. He observed:—

"The question raised by this reference is, whether this Court is at liberty, in second appeals, to look into the evidence in the cause for the purpose of ascertaining whether the lower Courts have found the facts correctly."

Then expressing his own views, he said:

"I am of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. I am aware that this opinion differs from many rulings of the High Courts in India, and from that of my brother Judges, but as I think the words of the statute are clear, and that if they are liable to create injustice, the remedy should be applied by the legislature, I feel it to be my duty to disagree with the many authorities which I have mentioned. S. 585, Civil Procedure Code, provides that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in S. 584, so that the question resolves itself into one of the construction of that section, and of that section alone. There are only three grounds of appeal mentioned in it, and it will be as well to examine them in detail."

Then his Lordship examined these grounds of appeal seriatim, and disposed of the first two grounds as they did not apply to the case. Then he took up the third ground which in the Old Code ran:

"A substantial error or defect in the procedure as prescribed by the Code or any other law, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits."

Regarding this the Chief Justice observed:—

"Procedure is a perfectly well-known word among lawyers, and means the practice followed by the Courts in the trial of cases which come before them; but, until it became necessary for the purpose of extending second appeals under the Code to questions of fact, I am not aware that the mental process by which a Judge and jury came to a conclusion on a question of fact was ever called a matter of procedure, and, in my opinion, it is impossible to fix that meaning to the word."

Then with regard to the case before him he observed:—

"This being my view of S. 584, it of course follows that no question of fact is included in either of them, and it would seem that the intention of legislature was that in small causes the finding of the lower Courts on questions of fact should be absolutely final."

Then other Judges of the Bench, however, gave a more extended interpretation to cl. (c) read with S. 574, which enacted that the judgment of the first appellate Court shall contain "the reasons of the decision; they said:

"We think that where a lower appellate Court has drawn strained or unreasonable conclusions from evidence, or has discredited or disbelieved witnesses or documentary proof upon capricious or unsustainable grounds, or has perversely interpreted or shut its eyes to proved facts, or has stated no intelligible reasons for arriving at its findings of facts, this Court may take notice of all such matters in second appeal."

Ultimately the Bench justified its opinion by saying:—

"If this Court had not the power in second appeal, we hold it has, to remand a case to the lower appellate Court for the preparation of a legal judgment properly determining the question or questions of fact, we know by experience that great injustice might often be done and it would come to this, —that we should be bound by the mere ipse dixit of a lower appellate Court in respect of the issues of fact, no matter how preposterous its findings might be. We cannot believe it was ever intended by the legislature that in such a case there should be an absolute defect of jurisdiction in this Court to examine such findings in second appeal. Our answer to the reference therefore is that the questions raised in S. A. No. 169 of 1884 by the pleas in appeal were questions that might be made the subject of second appeal."

It was in this way that they reconciled to their sense of justice with the word of the section and that continues to be the generally accepted legal view till to-day. In an earlier case reported in Futtehma Begum v. Mohamed Ausuri, the sense of equity of Mr. Justice Wilson appears to have revolted against such restrictions on the powers of the High Court in second appeal, and without referring to S. 584 he observed:—

"It is not the ordinary course of procedure for this Court to interfere in second appeal with any findings of fact which have been arrived at by the lower appellate Court; but we are well within the scope of authorities in holding that where the lower appellate Court has clearly misapprehended what the evidence before it was, and has thus been led to discard or not give sufficient weight to important evidence, and to give weight to other evidence to which it is not entitled, and has thus been led not into any mere incidental mistake, but totally to misconceive the case, this Court may interfere."

Thus a way has been found to mete out justice to the litigants in spite of the rather strict language of the section. But it has opened a door to a continuous struggle. It has led to fine distinctions between questions of facts and questions of law and some classes of questions had perforce to be relegated to the region of 'questions of mixed law and fact'. The question of construction of documents of title has led to another difficulty. Construction of documents of title has been held to be a question of law, but construction of documents which support the title is to be considered a question of fact. Questions relating to customs have given High Courts no less trouble. A finding that a certain practice or custom does or does not prevail is regarded as a finding of fact, while the question whether the prevailing practice has the attributes of a legally binding custom is held to be a question of law. In *Municipal Board, Benares v. Kandhaiya Lal*¹, their Lordships Banerji, Young and King, JJ., of the Allahabad High Court set aside the finding of the lower appellate Court to the effect:—

"That it is not proved that the practice of zar-i-chaharum ever prevailed in Kucha Champa Shahid."

They observed:

"We think this must be held to be a finding of fact binding upon this Court in second appeal, unless it can be shown that the finding is vitiated by some error of law."

On a close examination of the documentary evidence on the record they remarked:

"The learned Judge was therefore clearly under a misapprehension when he said that the Qabuliats do not refer to the custom. We think the misreading or ignoring of important documentary evidence amounts to substantial error or defect in the procedure within the meaning of S. 100 (1) (c), Civil Procedure Code and justifies the Court in reversing the finding if we hold such reversal justified on the merits."

In the end they held:

"Upon consideration of the whole of the evidence we think the plaintiff has proved the prevalence of the practice in the locality in question" and thus set aside the finding of the Court below which at first sight appeared to be only a finding of fact.

Similarly it has been held:—

"Proper effect of proved facts is a question of law, and the meaning of words is a question of fact and their effect is a question of law."

Just as I have said above the rigour of S. 100 has been much smoothened by a liberal interpretation by the High Courts in India. But that is not all. It is also the duty of the legislature to be prepared to review its Acts in the light of experience and it is time that we should try to appreciate the difficulties and remove the handicaps from which the Highest Courts of Justice in India are suffering. The restriction which forces a High Court not to interfere in a case, even when it feels:

"That the conclusions at which the Court has arrived are erroneous or opposed to weight of evidence—even though such conclusions proceed upon improper conception of the exact effect and bearing of the case upon merits" does not become the Highest Court of Justice of a country.

1. A.I.R. 1931 All. 499 (S.B.).

It is to meet this need that the present amendment is being moved. Its object is twofold. It gives the High Court full liberty in cases where the lower appellate Court has modified or reversed the decree of the trial Court. In such a case the High Court must be allowed to judge the validity of the judgment for itself on merits. In cases where the two judgments are concurrent and the High Court on hearing the case finds that there has been a serious error of facts also, it must be given discretion to interfere when it thinks fit, and we can safely rely upon the proper exercise of discretion by the Highest Court of Justice in India.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

In re A JUDGMENT-DEBTOR : JUDGMENT-CREDITOR v. JUDGMENT-DEBTOR, (1939) 1 Ch. 601.

Bankruptcy—Foreign judgment registered under the Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933, S. (2) 2—Bankruptcy notice founded on the judgment—Competency.

Where the judgment-debtor sought to set aside a bankruptcy notice founded on a judgment of a competent Court in France, which had been registered under the Foreign Judgment (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act, 1933, on the ground that the only relief which the holder of the judgment had was by way of execution.

Held, the foreign judgment when registered is in the same position as if it was a final judgment of an English Court for the purposes of bankruptcy notice; and it is not prevented from becoming the basis of a bankruptcy notice.

SHENTON v. TYLER, (1939) 1 Ch. 620.

Practice—Discovery—Privilege—If widow entitled to claim in respect of communications during marriage by husband.

Plaintiff sought to administer to the defendant certain interrogatories designed to obtain admissions to the effect that a secret trust in favour of the plaintiff was imposed upon the defendant by her late husband before his death. Defendant objected on the ground that she was not bound to answer questions relating to a communication made to her by her husband. [Simonds, J., upheld the objection. (1939) 1 Ch. 271.] On appeal after discussing the history of the rule,

Held, the only rule that exists is that contained in S. 3 of the Evidence Act of 1853 which in terms relates only to husbands and wives and you cannot read into the section a reference to widowers or widows or divorced persons. The widow is not entitled to refuse to answer the interrogatories.

In re COWLISHAW: COWLISHAW v. COWLISHAW, (1939) 1 Ch. 654.

Will—Bequest of annuity free of all deductions—If annuity payable to be free of income-tax.

A bequest of an annuity to the testator's widow provided that it was to be "paid free of all deductions whatsoever,"

Held, the expression "deductions" must include income-tax and the annuity is payable to the widow free of income-tax.

In re WARREN: PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. FLETCHER, (1939) 1 Ch. 684.

Trust Funds—Investments specified by the will—Powers of investment conferred by Statute—Whether prohibited.

The mere provision in a will for investment in a list of specified investments, with no negative provision, did not amount to an express prohibition and the trustee had the powers of investment conferred by statute.

In re MUSCOVITCH, (1939) 1 Ch. 694.

Bankruptcy Rules (1915), rr. 132, 385 and 386—"Forthwith"—Meaning of—Notice of appeal not sent "forthwith"—If mere irregularity—Power to extend time when to be exercised.

An appeal against an order suspending discharge in bankruptcy was entered on 25th October, 1938, and the notice of appeal (which under the Bankruptcy Rules, 1915, r. 132, is required to be sent "forthwith" to the Registrar of the Court appealed from) was effected on 28th October, 1938.

Held, the notice was not sent "forthwith" within the meaning of the rule, and it was not a mere irregularity which can be cured under Bankruptcy Act, 1914, S. 147 (1), or under Bankruptcy Rules, r. 385. There were no special circumstances sufficient to enable the Court to extend time under r. 386.

In re FRAME: EDWARDS v. TAYLOR, (1939) 1 Ch. 700.

Will—Bequest on 'condition' that legatee adopts testator's daughter—If a trust—Inability of legatee to obtain adoption order—If trust to fail.

A testator bequeathed all his money and insurance policies "on condition that the legatee adopted one of the testator's named daughters and gave a sum of £5 each to his other three daughters and son."

Held, the word "condition" is not used in its strict legal sense: It is a gift on condition, in the sense of, on the terms, or on the trust that the legatee does certain things. It imports a trust and though the devisee or legatee dies before the testator, and the gift does not take effect, yet the payments must be made, for it is a trust and no trust fails for want of trustees. So the inability of the legatee to obtain an adoption order cannot allow the trust to fail.

In re WILLS : DULVERTON v. MACLEOD, (1939) 1 Ch. 705.

Will—Beneficiaries bringing into hotchpot advances—Interest on advance from testator's death—Liability.

Where an advanced beneficiary has under a clause in the will to bring the capital amount of his advance into hotchpot against his share of the capital of the estate some means must be devised of equalising the position in regard also to the income of the estate, for it would be unfair that the advanced beneficiary should at once enjoy the interest of the sum advanced and be placed in the same position as unadvanced beneficiaries in regard to the income earned by the capital of the estate before distribution. The advanced beneficiaries will be charged with interest at 4 per cent. on their advances from the death of the testator the amount of such advances being determined by the value of the settled securities as at the date of the settlement.

In re DAVID MOSLEY AND SONS, LTD., (1939) 1 Ch. 719.

Company—Provision for retirement of one-third of ordinary directors by rotation.

The articles of association provided that at every annual general meeting one-third of the ordinary directors, or if their number was not a multiple of three, then the nearest number to, but not exceeding, one-third should retire from office (those who had been longest in office to be the ones to retire). When the number of ordinary directors became reduced to two in number,

Held, neither of them was bound to retire under the article.

SUPERMA, LTD. v. TENOONI, (1939) 1 Ch. 724.

Patents and Designs Act (1907-1938), S. 35—Action for infringement of patents—Striking out defence and counter-claim for default in discovery—If certificate of validity of patent under S. 35 can be granted—R. S. C., O. 53-A, r. 20—Proceeding to trial—Meaning.

In an action for infringement of patent, the defence and counter-claim for revocation of the patent were ordered to be struck out owing to the failure of the defendant to comply with an order for delivery of an affidavit of documents. At the trial, the plaintiff asked for a certificate under S. 35 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907-1938 of validity of the patent.

Held, as there is only a statement of claim containing allegations which are not disputed (because the defence and counter-claim were struck out) the certificate under S. 35 cannot be given and the case had not proceeded to trial under R.S.C., O. 53, r. 20, and the costs of the issues raised by the particulars of breaches are in the discretion of the Taxing Master.

ADAIR (J.F.) & Co. v. BERNBAUM, (1939) 2 K.B. 149.

Contract—C. I. F. contract for sale of pepper—Contract incorporating Rules of General Produce Brokers' Association—Clause in rules that on seller admitting failure to fulfil the contract the buyer should invoice back and difference in price to be paid in cash—If not a wagering contract—Enforceability.

The rules and conditions of sale of the General Produce Brokers' Association contain, inter alia, the following provisions:—".....(f) Whenever it may be admitted by the seller, or decided by arbitration, that the seller has failed to fulfil the terms of the contract, the buyer shall 'close,' by invoicing back the contract to the seller at once, at a price and weight to be fixed by arbitration.....the difference between the contract price and invoicing back price to be paid in cash within seven days;....."

".....If before the maturity of any contract either party liable on the face thereof shall suspend payment, or be a defaulter, or issue a notice convening a meeting of his creditors, or become bankrupt or insolvent, such contract shall thereupon be closed (on 48 hours' previous notice) upon terms to be fixed by arbitration...." In a series of contracts for the sale of a large quantity of pepper incorporating the rules the seller intimated his failure to fulfil the contracts and claimed to have the contracts closed by invoicing back to himself. Also the seller had become insolvent before the maturity of the contract.

Though the Court of Appeal felt that the contracts may be wagering ones they felt bound by the majority view in Lancaster v. Turner & Co., Ltd., (1924) 2 K.B. 222 and Lang v. Crude Rubber Washing Co., (1912) (since reported in (1939) 2 K.B. 173 as footnote to this case) and Held, that though the seller was the defaulter the buyer was bound to close by invoicing back the contract to the seller at the price and weight to be fixed by arbitration under r. 9.(f) notwithstanding that the seller had become insolvent before the maturity of the contract. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords was given.

ELLIS v. RAINE, (1939) 2 K.B. 180.

Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 and Law Reform Act, 1934—Claim for damages by parents for death of child due to negligence of defendants' driver—Award of damages by jury under Fatal Accidents Act only—If retrial to be ordered.

Where a jury though properly directed awarded to the plaintiffs, the parents of a child of 8 years killed in a motor accident due to the negligence of the defendants' driver, damages only under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 and nothing for the loss of expectation of life under the Law Reform Act, 1934.

Held, there must be a new trial on the issue of damages. The Fatal Accidents Act deals with pecuniary loss only. If parties who will benefit under the Fatal Accidents Act and Law Reform Act are the same they must not to any extent be allowed to have their damages twice over.

MARRISON v. BELL, (1939) 2 K.B. 187.

Master and servant—Sickness of servant—If suspends his right to wages under the contract of service—Receipt of benefit under National Health Insurance during sickness—If affects his right to wages for the period.

Under a contract of service irrespective of the question of the length of notice provided by that contract, wages continue through sickness and incapacity from sickness to do the work contracted for until the contract is terminated by a notice by the employer in accordance with the terms of the contract. The benefits under the National Health Insurance Act is irrespective of the amount of wages as determined by the workman's individual contract of service. So the workman was entitled to recover the wages till the termination of the contract.

Case-law reviewed.

SHIRLAW v. SOUTHERN FOUNDRIES, (1939) 2 K.B. 206.

Companies—Contract of employment of Managing Director for 10 years—Implied term—Alteration of articles giving power to remove director—Exercise of power—Liability of company for breach of contract.

The S.F. Company agreed by contract of 21st December, 1933, to employ the plaintiff as Managing Director (for which he had to be director also) for ten years and the company could not remove him under the articles of association and defeat the provisions of the contract, which they had power to make. In April, 1936, the company altered its articles which gave power to F.F., Ltd., the second defendants who had acquired financial control of S.F. to remove any director of S.F. company and also provided that an appointment as managing director should determine if he ceased from any cause to be a director. On 25th March, 1937, the F.F., Ltd., exercised the power to remove the plaintiff from being a director of S.F. and ipso facto his managing directorship ceased. In a claim by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract, Held (Sir Wilfrid Greene, M.R., dissenting) granted that a company cannot be deprived of its right to alter its articles it is wrong to say that by an alteration the company can put it into the power of some one else to do in relation to an existing contract that which it could not do itself. It must be an implied term of the contract that the company would not so alter its articles as to put it in the power of itself or anyone else to determine the contract. The defendants are liable for damages for breach of contract.

UXBRIDGE PERMANENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. PICKARD, (1939) 2 K.B. 248.

Principal and agent—Fraud committed within agent's ostensible authority—Liability of principal for damages.

The defendant was a solicitor practising in London with a branch office at Slough managed by a clerk who with the help of some forged title deeds induced the plaintiff to advance a loan on a fictitious mortgage. In a claim for damages for the fraud of the defendant's agents, Held [affirming the decision of Atkinson, J., (1939) 1 K.B. 266] where a fraud is committed within agent's ostensible authority the principal is liable and the rule in Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co., (1912) A.C. 716, applied.

ROBINSON v. STERN, (1939) 2 K.B. 260.

Evidence Act (1938), S. 1 (3)—Statement by defendant to police immediately after accident—Admissibility as evidence in suit for damages for injuries in the accident.

The defendant who was driving a motor car, immediately after an accident causing injuries to the plaintiff, made a statement to the police. In an action for damages for the injuries, the defendant's statement to the police was admitted in evidence. On appeal,

Held, assuming the statement to have been a document within the meaning of S. 1 (i) of the Act the circumstances were such as to make the statement inadmissible by reason of the provisions of sub-S. (3) of that section which provides "Nothing in this section shall render admissible as evidence any statement made by a person interested at a time when proceedings were pending or anticipated involving a dispute as to any fact which the statement might tend to establish."

BAXTER v. GAPP & Co., (1939) 2 K.B. 271.

Principal and agent—Estate agent—Gross over-valuation of property by—Mortgage on footing of valuation—Liability of agent for negligence—Damages—Measure of.

In a suit by plaintiff against the defendant for damages for negligence in acting as valuers of property as a result of which the plaintiff in reliance on that valuation advanced money by way of mortgage,

Held, a person who undertakes the duty of valuing property holds himself out as possessing the necessary experience and skill required for the discharge of that duty. Where, by reason of the lack of knowledge and experience, he made a over-valuation of the property, whereby, the plaintiff suffered loss, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the loss which he has sustained owing to the breach of duty, namely, the loss of interest and the loss of his capital. (1938) 4 All.E.R. 457, affirmed.

E. E. & BRIAN SMITH, LTD. v. WHEATSTRAEF MILLS, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 302.

Arbitration—Successive arbitrations under one cause of action—Validity.

A clause in a contract provided that all disputes from time to time arising out of the contract shall be referred to arbitration. The mercantile custom to decide first the question as to whether or not a particular parcel of goods is such that it can be rejected before going into any question of damages which might arise upon the hypothesis that it can be rejected is a convenient one. It is not necessary to have every possible claim before the arbitrators in the first instance. A second claim and arbitration is not barred as the agreement excludes, the rule that all reliefs under one cause of action should be claimed in one proceeding.

NEWSTEAD v. LONDON EXPRESS NEWSPAPER, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 317.

Libel—Statement complained of true about existing person of same name as plaintiff—Effect.

Where the writer of an alleged libel has in his mind a person other than the plaintiff and where what he writes is true of that other person the principle laid down in Hulton & Co. v. Jones, (1910) A.C. 20, is applicable. It does not matter what the writer of a libel means or intends to mean. His meaning is to be discovered from the expressions which he uses and which he puts into permanent form on paper or some such medium.

STIMPSON v. PORTSMOUTH CORPORATION, (1939) 2 K.B. 327.

Electricity (Supply) Act (1919), S. 16, as amended in 1922 and 1933
—Transfer of undertaking—Compensation for loss of employment.

If as a result of the transfer of an undertaking some one employed by any authorised undertaking can show that he has lost his employment he is entitled to claim compensation.

LONDON PLYWOOD AND TIMBER CO. v. NASEB OAK EXTRACT FACTORY AND STEAM SAWMILLS CO., (1939) 2 K.B. 343.

Sale of goods—Delivery of goods contracted for mixed with goods of different description—Buyer's right to reject—Acceptance and appropriation of part of the goods to contract—If affects buyer's right to reject.

Where the sellers delivered to the buyers the goods they contracted to sell mixed with goods of a different description not included in the contract the buyers are entitled to reject the whole. The fact that part of the goods had been accepted by the buyers and appropriated to the contract does not prevent the buyers relying on the right to reject.

CHANT v. READ, (1939) 2 K.B. 346.

Married Women's Property Act (1882), S. 12 and Married Women and Tortfeasors Act (1935), S. 6 (1) (c)—Tort—Negligence—Loss of expectation of life of wife—Claim against husband for contribution by joint tortfeasor—Sustainability.

A married woman who is killed in a motor collision by reason of the negligence of her husband in driving the car in which she is a passenger has not got vested in her at the date of her death a cause of action against her husband for damages for the loss of her normal expectancy of life. So a claim for contribution against the husband by a joint tortfeasor whom the husband (as his wife's administrator) sued, must fail.

SQUARE v. MODEL FARM DAIRIES BOURNEMOUTH, LTD.; (1939) 2 K.B. 365.

Sale of goods—Breach of warranty—Fraudulent misrepresentation—Statutory duty—Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (c. 31), S. 2—Breach of—Remedy if restricted to the penalty.

Certain milk consumed by the plaintiffs (purchaser and his relatives) proved to be contaminated and plaintiffs became ill and suffered serious loss. The plaintiffs claimed damages for misrepresentation, breach of warranty and breach of statutory duty under Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, S. 2. Damages of £400 was awarded on the basis of breach of implied term of contract and there was no appeal regarding it on the other points. On appeal, Held, there was no misrepresentation. Food and Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, deals with relations of vendor and purchaser and does not give new rights to consumers who are not parties to the contract. Assuming there was an offence under S. 2 of the Act, that has only penal consequences and did not give new rights of action for breach of duty imposed by it.

CLAYDON v. SIR LINDSAY PARKINSON, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 385.

Master and servant—Employee of a sub-contractor—If entitled to claim damages against head contractor for injuries due to breach of statutory duty owed to his immediate employee.

The employee of a sub-contractor of the defendant a building contractor, had erected a scaffolding which broke under the plaintiff's weight in the course of his work. In an action for damages for injuries by the plaintiff against the head contractors based on a breach of statutory regulation [Building Regulations, 1926, Paras. 1, 4 and 14 (1)] by the defendant in not having a proper scaffolding.

Held, that the statutory duty is one owed by the employer to the workmen he employs and the plaintiff cannot succeed in his claim against the head contractor.

TRIPLEX SAFETY GLASS CO. v. LANGE GAYE SAFETY GLASS (1934), LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 395.

Practice—Discovery—Incriminating interrogatories—Privilege in answering—Company if entitled to.

The plaintiff in a suit for libel and slander against the defendant company and one L sought to interrogate both defendants in order to obtain admissions (a) that they published defamatory libels, (b) that they were actuated by malice, and (c) that L, "acting on his behalf and on behalf of the defendant company" spoke and published words defamatory of the plaintiff company which had been previously published and subsequently repeated in the libels complained of. The defendants declined to answer on the ground that the answers would tend to incriminate them.

Held, (i) the mere fact that a party or a witness swears that his answers would tend to criminate him is not conclusive and the Court may have a duty, notwithstanding the assertion of a claim of privilege to compel him to answer; (ii) the Court will insist upon an answer if the witness is trifling with the authority of the Court and availing himself of the rule of law to keep back the truth having in reality no ground whatever for claiming the privilege; (iii) the power of the Court to insist on an answer is not limited to a case of mala fides but extends to any case in which it is not made to appear to the Court that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer. On the facts it is impossible to say that L's objection is mala fide and the answer to the interrogatories might tend to criminate him. A limited company may be indicated for libel and the claim of privilege is not limited to natural persons and it could be taken advantage of by a corporation. The defendants were entitled to refuse to answer the interrogatories.

STEVENS v. TIRARD, (1939) 2 K.B. 410.

Income-tax—Finance Act (1920), S. 21—Payment of money to wife on condition that she is only bound properly to maintain the children—If money to which child is entitled in his own right.

By an order of the Divorce Court, the respondent was ordered to pay his wife, who divorced him certain sums in excess of £50 per annum for the maintenance and education of the three children.

Held, that it cannot be said that the child is entitled in his own right to money paid to his guardian for his maintenance. The money is not impressed with a trust but is paid upon condition.

WATKINS v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE, (1939) 2 K.B. 420.

Income-tax—Sums paid by husband annually to make up the deficiency in wife's income for maintenance in a mental institution in pursuance of an undertaking in lunacy proceedings—If annual payment within Finance Act, 1918, S. 27—If income in the hands of the payee or merely expenditure of husband's income—Liability of husband for sur-tax.

On a case stated by the Commissioners, held, that sums paid (in pursuance of an undertaking in lunacy proceedings) by a husband annually to make up deficiency in wife's income for her maintenance in a mental institution, do not fall within the Finance Act, 1918, S. 27 and are merely expenditure of the payer's income and were not proper deductions in arriving at the total income for the purposes of sur-tax. There was no distinction between this and payments under order of the Divorce Court.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Lord Mansfield and the Sailor.—Pepys in his Diary tells us that he was present at a trial at the Guildhall in 1663 concerning the fraud of a merchant adventurer who had sought to make the insurers pay by wrecking his vessel off the French coast. The diarist's comment on the evidence is interesting; he said that "it was pleasant to see what mad sort of testimony the seamen did give, and could not be got to speak in order; and then their terms such as the judge could not understand. And to hear how sillily the counsel and judge would speak as to the terms necessary in the matter; and, above all, a Frenchman that was forced to speak in French and took an English oath he did not understand, and had an interpreter sworn to tell us what he said, which was the best testimony of all." Certainly to an onlooker it must have been a singularly amusing instance of the difficulties arising from the confusion of tongues. But the most dramatic case in which sailor's terminology provided no little amusement was one at which no less distinguished a judge than Lord Mansfield presided. The action arose out of a collision between two vessels—a fruitful source of litigation in the Admiralty Court—and one of the nautical witnesses in the course of his evidence said that at the material time he was standing "abaft the binnacle." With a proper desire to master the facts Lord Mansfield said: "Stay a minute, witness; you say that at the time in question you were standing abaft the binnacle; now tell me where 'abaft the binnacle' is." This question appeared to be too much for the nautical witness, who, it should be mentioned, was said before entering the witness-box to have taken a copious draught of neat rum; so turning round upon the crowded Court with an expression of intense amusement, he exclaimed at the top of his voice: "He's a pretty fellow for a judge. Bless my jolly old eyes"—or words with a stronger implication—"You have got a pretty sort of landlubber for a judge. He wants me to tell him where 'abaft the binnacle' is." The last word, however, was with the judge, who uttered, with great good humour: "Well, my friend, you must fit me for my office by telling me where

'abaft the binnacle' is ; you've already shown me the meaning of half-seas over!"—L.T., 1939, p. 11.

False Quantities.—It was said that few things caused such real pain to Lord Mansfield as when a member of the Bar pronounced a Latin word with a false quantity. It is told of him that on one occasion a member of the Scots Bar, and those of that body were apparently at that time not so fastidious in this matter as their English confreres, had to make use of the term "curator," and in doing so pronounced it as "curator," which brought down a reproof in these words : "Curators ! I wish our countrymen would pay a little more attention to prosody." This in its turn brought forth the witty rejoinder : "My Lord, I can assure you that our countrymen are very proud of your Lordship as the greatest senator and orator of the present age." A somewhat similar story, slightly varied in phraseology, has been told of another judge of Scottish ancestry and a later member of the Scots Bar equally ready in retort. To many it must seem, however, not a little strange that a false quantity in Latin is so heinous in the speaker and so mirth-provoking to the hearer, whereas a similar solecism in English is overlooked as of comparatively no importance.—L.T., 1939, p. 12.

Free fight about Flogging.—The hopes of the good women and of the Judges who would keep the "cat" have been revived by the announcement that a free fight is to take place on the floor and in the lobbies of the House on the subject of corporal punishment ; while those who would put it out for good are showing symptoms of slight depression. Sir Samuel Hoare, it is said, will appeal to reason, and Mr. Chamberlain will be with him in the belief that flogging does more harm than good. On the other hand, the vote being free, it is thought that Government supporters will not be wholly unimpressed by the conservative women's avowal of faith in the cat's efficacy ; while many opposition members will enjoy the novelty of sharing the same opinion and the same lobby with the Secretary of State for Home Affairs. After the Commons, whatever happens therein, will come the Lords.

Mr. Heber Hart has reminded the Times of a leader in which it was stated that the only relevant question is whether corporal punishment deters "in such an exceptional degree as to outweigh the obvious objections to it. The considered conclusion of the Departmental Committee, after thorough analysis of the results of experience, is that it does not." Mr. Hart calls attention to the absence of any successful challenge to the reliability of the evidence considered by the Committee, or to the process of reasoning by which they arrived at their conclusions. "If their Report is incontrovertible, should not the opposition to its recommendations cease?"—L.J., 1939, p. 12.

Tit for Tat or Homoeopathy?—Writing merely as "Outlaw," I should say that the opposition should cease, but that it will not; and that until their favourite is dead and buried they will go on fighting for its survival. Perhaps the strongest evidence of the unselfish devotion of some of them is this: that while frankly admitting and declaring that early floggings and canings have made them what they are, they still believe the cat is an influence for good.

As the opposing parties stand in battle array the casus belli is not that Sir Samuel Hoare and his people do not abhor with detestation equal to that of his opponents the sort of crime which may now be punished by flogging. Nor is it, so far as one may judge from the arguments thus far used in the controversy, that the cat o' nine tails has proved a deterrent to any noticeable degree in the past. The profloggers feel, however, that it ought to, really; and, anyhow, that it is the only stuff to give the kind of rotters who commit the filthy kinds of violence for which they would apply it. "Give 'em", they say in effect, "a taste of their own medicine, the only punishment such low fellows can appreciate."

"The crime is indeed beastly," say the others, "but your punishment is beastly, too; it tends to make you so, irrespective of its effect on the criminal and the unfortunate executioner. Demonstrably it does not deter (see Report)."

In Mr. Hart's words:

"Where punishment is accorded not merely for the protection of society or the reformation of the criminal, but is retaliatory, vindictive, or retributive in character, it becomes necessarily demoralising to those who administer it, and to those who are responsible for its infliction. As soon, therefore, as a penalty which involves acute bodily suffering is found, in fact, not to be specially deterrent, and, accordingly, not to be necessary, the evil of its retention as a feature of our penal system becomes apparent."—L.J., 1939, p. 12.

Corporal punishment for Women.—Old ideas do give place to new, even on such matters as corporal punishment. Time was when a husband could lawfully administer it to his wife; and wives, according to some authorities, are not substantially worse than they were.

It was in the present century that Grantham, J., on the South-Eastern Circuit, offered advice from the Bench to husbands who were unfortunate enough to find their domestic peace disturbed.

"The prisoner," he said, "was justified in believing that his wife had formed an unholy affection for another man. If he had contented himself with boxing her ears it would only have served her right, for her conduct was enough to drive any man out of his mind." Soon afterwards there appeared in the press a protest from Lady Harborton, who said that "assaults on women are already far too common, without a Judge on the Bench going out of his way to counsel an utterly illegal act," and called upon Grantham, J., promptly to undo the mischief which the publication of his views on the adjustment of matrimonial disputes would infallibly bring about. —L.J., 1939, p. 12.

Ancient rights.—In that book of ancient fundamental truths of the common law, Matthew Bacon's New Abridgment of the Law, is set out the contemporary learning on the mutual relations of husband and wife.

"The husband," he wrote, "hath, by law, power and dominion over his wife, and may keep her by force within the bounds of duty, and may beat her, but not in a violent or cruel manner; for, in such case, or if he but threaten to beat her outrageously, or use her barbarously, she may bind him to the peace by suing a writ of 'supplicavit' out of Chancery; or may apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce 'propter sœvitiam'."

This power of judicious corporal punishment in time of need was whittled down, principally and not unnaturally, during the reign of Queen Victoria. The sayings in Bacon's Abridgment became things of the past, and could no longer be cited as a binding authority in the Courts of the Law. Lord Halsbury, when the passage aforesaid was read to him by hopeful counsel, was moved to scorn. "Such quaint and absurd dicta," said he, "as are to be found in the books as to the right of a husband over his wife in respect of personal chastisement are not now capable of being cited as authorities in this or any civilised country."

That some wives may be very cruel, and that their husbands may not lawfully beat them, is known in every police court. Is it that the Conservative women still believe, regarding very bad men, that "the more you beat 'em the better they be"?—L.J., 1939, p. 12.

The Lord Chancellor on the Rule of Law.—Responding to the toast of His Majesty's Judges at the customary dinner given by the Lord Mayor to members of the judiciary on Tuesday, Lord Maugham, L.C., referred to a number of legal changes and appointments during the past year, and recalled that he had set up a number of important committees which included subjects of such diversity as law reporting, poor persons rules, the law of defamation and shorthand notes in Court; and he expressed the hope that when he received the reports it would be possible to bring about some much needed reform. He emphasised the fact that the subjects of the King, whether residing in this country or beyond the seas, lived under the dominion of law. Our true liberties could not be interfered with except by due process of law. But it was not only on good laws that our peace and tranquillity depended. It was necessary also that they should be well administered, and this was all the more essential in such a far extending empire as ours. In many lands where British justice was administered there was the same equal justice for rich and poor, white and coloured, educated and ignorant, civilised and savage. The Lord Chancellor gave instances of what he was saying, and concluded by observing that the judges and the lawyers from the highest to the humblest throughout the empire had in this matter a single philosophy and a single creed. They stood for the ancient traditions of law and justice. Those were the ultimate reasons for their existence and they must of necessity make every effort and every sacrifice to retain those traditions unimpaired.—S. J., 1939, p. 533.

The Lord Chief Justice.—On the same occasion Lord Hewart, C.J., alluded to the despatch of legal business. There was no time, he said, when the work of the judges was greater in volume, or more punctually performed. There were people who applied the term arrears to every case set down, and who thought the whole body of cases must somehow be immediately and simultaneously tried the moment each came into existence. Perhaps that system would flourish in that happy time, fraught with unfold blessings for solicitors, barristers, juries and the public, when every court would sit all the year round, seven days a week, twenty-four hours a day. Meanwhile judges would continue to the best of their ability to discharge their task steadily, vigilantly, and courageously.—S. J., 1939, p. 533.

The Week's Personality.—In 1835, Chief Justice Marshall breathed his last without pain, his mind as clear and strong as ever. One who was present tells how he "met his fate with the fortitude of a philosopher and the resignation of a Christian." The last thing taken from his body was a locket which three and a half years before his beloved wife had hung about his neck just before she died. Her loss had left him a changed man and he had never recovered from it. Old memories must have filled his mind as he lay expiring in Philadelphia, for nearly sixty years earlier, as a lieutenant in the armies raised to assert American independence, he had marched through the city on the road from Valley Forge to Monmouth. It was in 1801 that he was appointed Chief Justice. The defective organisation of the Supreme Court had brought its dignity to a very low ebb, but that extraordinary ability, that courage, that unswerving impartiality, that absolute control of nerves and temper which made him one of the greatest men of his country enabled him to confer on it a high prestige. All America felt that his place could never be supplied as it honoured "the Soldier, the Orator, the Patriot, the Statesman, the Jurist, and, above all, the good and virtuous man."—S. J., 1939, p. 541.

Horse Guards' Right of Way.—A recent note in a newspaper pointed out that passage under the Horse Guards arch is not a royal prerogative, though it is permitted to so few people that it has come to be so regarded by the layman. The select few are rather arbitrarily chosen and this once gave Sir Frank Lockwood an opening for one of his jokes. One morning he rode across the Horse Guards Parade to Parliament Street. On being stopped by the sentry he weightily informed him that he was "one of Her Majesty's Counsel." This so took the man by surprise that he at once apologised and let Lockwood through, saluted by the guard. No embarrassing sequel followed as on the earlier occasion when Lord Brougham had driven through in his coach on the way to a Drawing Room at the Palace. The officer of the guard, having stopped the Lord Chancellor, tried to explain to him the delicate distinction which allowed the Speaker of the Commons to go that way but not the Speaker of the Lords. Brougham duly gave orders for the coach to turn back, but owing to a misunderstanding the coachman whipped up his horses and drove into the Park. Questions were afterwards asked in the House of Lords as to whether the King's Guard had been forced by the Lord Chancellor, and Brougham, complaining bitterly of being thus "put on trial on the Woolstack," explained what had happened.—S. J., 1939, p. 541.

The Same for Rich and Poor.—That there was an enlightened Magistrate in the Mansion House 100 years ago, who realised that the "same law" for rich and poor was not quite equal, appears from a report reprinted in the Times. For the like offence should there not be a graduated scale of fines, in accordance with the income and super-tax assessment of the wrongdoer?

"A man of very respectable appearance, named Priestley, of Hyde Street, Bloomsbury, a descendant, we understood, of Dr. Priestley was brought up (at the Mansion House) charged with having been blind drunk in a cab. . . . The Inspector said that in a private pocket of the drunken gentleman the person who took his clothes to be cleaned found 140*l.* in bank-notes and a bundle of railway shares.

Defendant : It is quite true, I had the property about me.

Sir P. Laurie : It was well you fell into the hands of our police; if you had not probably you would have lost all the money.

Defendant : I should have deserved it for allowing myself to be led to drink myself into such a brute.....

Sir P. Laurie : I believe that the Magistrates will soon have the power of sending drunkards to prison for seven days for each detected offence of the kind. It is too hard that a rich man, to whom this fine of 5s. is nothing, should be punished in no other way, while the poor man, to whom that sum is a great deal, should be subjected to the same penalty. Take care of a week's imprisonment.

Defendant : I never will drink again.

Sir P. Laurie : Very well ; pay the penalty, and pay the cabman and the police for taking care of you."—S. J., 1939, p. 32.

Lord Chancellor Chelmsford.—In the course of his recent miscellaneous reading the present writer has met with various references to Lord Chelmsford which greatly interested him and piqued his curiosity to know more regarding him and his career, which began in the Navy but was soon transferred to the law, in which he was destined to rise to the highest position it can offer to its votaries. At the same time, the writer was much struck in reading the notice of this famous lawyer in the pages of the Dictionary of National Biography to observe the small space allotted to him—three columns—although the contributor was no less distinguished a writer than the late Lord Sumner, at that time merely J. A. Hamilton, as compared with the space devoted to another distinguished man some pages earlier in the same volume, namely, William Makepeace Thackeray, who is given no less than twenty-nine columns. We may leave the nice question as to these relative appraisements and be content to follow in imagination the career of Frederick Thesiger, who was eventually to be ennobled as Lord Chelmsford.—L. T., 1939, p. 29.

Lawyer and Wit.—Thesiger's legal youth was spent in the chambers of George Sowley Holroyd, who later became a Judge of the King's Bench, and who apparently was able to indoctrinate his pupil to some purpose. According to his own memoranda, the pupil was exceedingly diligent in his studies, regaling himself on such appetising fare as Fearn on Contingent Remainders and Shepherd's Touchstone, and other equally fascinating volumes. Called to the Bar in 1818, he joined the Home Circuit, of which he was to become the life and soul, delighting all with his wit, except, perhaps, those who were its occasional victims. Serjeant Robinson, who belonged to the same circuit, tells us in his chatty volume that of the jokes that passed among its members, if it was respectable it was attributed to Thesiger, whereas if it was not sufficiently clothed it was fathered upon Serjeant Murphy, while if it savoured of conceit or self-complacency Samuel Warren was sure to become the recipient. At Warren Thesiger appears to have loved to poke his fun, as, for example, on the occasion when Warren, in boasting of his intimacy with members of the peerage, mentioned that while dining lately at the Duke of Leeds, he was surprised at finding no fish of any kind served. "That," interposed Thesiger, "is easily accounted for. They had probably eaten it all upstairs"!!—L. T., 1939, p. 29.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX ACT by Mr. A. N. Iyer, Advocate. Published by The Company Law Institute, Thiagarajanagar, Madras. 1939 Edn. Price Rs. 15 per set.

Mr. A. N. Aiyar is so well known to the public as the Editor of the "Federal Law Journal of India", "Company Cases" and "Income-tax Reports" that he needs no introduction from us. We are in receipt of his "Commentaries on the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922" published in two volumes. The first volume covers nearly 600 pages and has a neat introduction appended to it explaining in a short compass the changes introduced by the Amendment Act of 1939. In the first volume the Amending Act of 1939 is given separately and next the Income-tax Act of 1922 as amended by the Act of 1939 is given. The amendments are printed in italics for easy reference. The Enquiry Committee Report, a summary of the abstracts of proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State, and the report of the Select Committee are also printed. It is in the second volume that we get a neat commentary on the sections of the Act running to about 730 pages and fairly full extracts of the Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State. The rules made by the Central Board of Revenue in exercise of the power given to it under S. 59 are also given, so that the compilation of Mr. A. N. Iyer is full and complete. The commentaries also are carefully written under appropriate headings and the case-law has been well digested and brought up-to-date. We do not find much of the editor's own views on points where there is a conflict in the case-law; but the conflict is well analysed and presented. But considering the hurry with which the book had to be published to serve the immediate need of the profession, one could not expect the author to have the leisure to indicate his own views. We have no doubt that very soon another edition will come up and that there the author will indicate his considered opinions on such conflicts. The get up of the book is good and the type also bold.

LAW AS AN INSTRUMENT AND MEASURE OF SOCIAL PROGRESS.*

My initial duty is to convey to the authorities of the University my profound thanks for extending to me the invitation to deliver this lecture under a foundation associated with the name of a great ruler respected throughout the whole of India. Though the stress and strain of professional work and my official duties leave me very little time for the pursuit of an academic study of law, I have hazarded this undertaking mainly because I have come more and more to realise the need for the approach of the study of law from a sociological point of view and the need to impress upon my younger friends in the profession the importance of such a study. In delivering the address on the topic of Law as an instrument and measure of social progress, I need hardly say I make no pretensions to any originality as my lecture is largely based upon a study of the leading writers on Jurisprudence and legislation and such experience as I have gathered in the practice of the profession. In the short time at my disposal I can only touch on the fringe of many a topic calling for a detailed and fuller treatment. If to the student of zoology the growth of life in different forms is of absorbing interest, if to the sociologist the development of society from rudimentary beginnings has a fascination and if the growth of the nation State, the need for the federation of communities and the growth of international unions make a powerful appeal to the student of history and politics, the interrelation between law and society—law stimulating and bettering the growth of civic society and individual life and a changing society in its turn shaping legal institutions—has a peculiar attraction for the lawyer and a student of historical jurisprudence. The legal world is under an immeasurable debt of gratitude to the great analytical, historical and sociological jurists who have rendered incalculable service in the promotion of a scientific knowledge of the subject. The one important lesson that is learnt by the lawyer in the course of his studies is that the source of all law is to be found in the seething life of the people, that the course of legal development is determined by the progress attained by the nation in the several spheres and that the legal system in its turn has shaped progress. While law may, to some extent, be the result of the sociological forces operating in any civilized society, it is beginning to be realised more and more that social progress may also be controlled and regulated, and law can be made a more efficient instrument for individual and social well-being, through conscious effort. It is a familiar experience to every lawyer that sometimes a new rule of law enunciated by a Court may work a thorough metamorphosis and give a new direction to social progress even to the extent a scientific invention may sometimes make and has made a new world of our planet. Decisions of Courts have set standards as to the degree of care required in dealing with one's own property and the degree of care required of a person to whom the management of another's property is entrusted, as to the point of approach in dealing with, say, the problem of contributory negligence, as to what constitutes an actionable nuisance in the changed conditions of town and country life, as to the limits of liability of corporate and public bodies for non-feasance and misfeasance and even as to the standard of honour required in the pursuit of a profession. Is there any doubt that in the approach to such questions the Court is to take into account the social forces at work at a given time? The standards themselves are variable in their nature and content. The development of the law of wrongs in the complex conditions of modern society is a striking illustration of the working of the above rule. Social dynamics is not a constant factor, as the principles of reason, morality and social utility, on which all law rests, can no more be static than society itself. As recent decisions have shown, even such a question as the liability, say, of a hospital authority for the negligence of a surgeon employed in a hospital under public control cannot be decided as an abstract legal question. It is largely the balancing of social considerations that will determine the issue whether the proper analogy to be applied to the case is that of the liability of a master for the wrongs of his servants or that of a public authority whose only duty is to choose a skilled doctor. The hardening of institutions into a shell, as Bagehot and Maine have illustrated, is the greatest hindrance to life. The functional approach to the study of legal problems has received special attention in America in recent times. Maitland and Holmes—two of the greatest names in Anglo-American Jurisprudence—owe not a little of their juristic eminence to the sociological method of approach to legal problems. In his book on “The Nature of Judicial Process” Justice Cardozo has also described the great transformation in the legal view of property and liberty in the latter part of the 19th century and more so in postwar Europe and America and the reactions of the sociological school of jurisprudence to the changed conceptions of property and rights. In the process of adjusting law to the changing conditions of society or of law shaping and helping social change, there is bound to be frequent maladjustment as the law of social dynamics cannot by its very nature be exact.

With your leave may I attempt a very brief survey of the history of law and legal institutions from this standpoint? One may start with the traditional sources of law according to the classification of jurists in the pre-legislative period—custom, responsa prudentum of jurists, and judicial precedent. Without going into the academic controversy connected with the nature of customary law, whether custom had its origin even prior to the evolution of the modern State, whether customary law is traceable to the practices of the elite or the select section of the people and was unconsciously adopted by the rest, whether in the later stages of its growth it had a sanction of its own or whether its sanction as law depended on the enforcement by the duly constituted tribunals in the State, there can be no doubt that customary law, while it may have a sociological origin, has been largely shaped by jurists and judges—it may be by jurists under the ancient Roman and Hindu Law; it may be by judges under the English system of jurisprudence. The skilled interpreter has largely moulded customary law, much like a potter moulding clay or any plastic material in his hand. That does not of course involve that the interpreter is working in a vacuum. He has necessarily to work in the surrounding atmosphere and with the material that is available. At the minimum he gives a new direction to the forces at work. There may be no difficulty in tracing what may be termed 'a rule of customary law' to the influence of a jurist or a particular judge. One cannot pass over this topic without alluding to the great part played by the commentators in Hindu Jurisprudence.

It does not require a deep knowledge of Sanskrit literature to realise the great changes effected in the law of the Smritis by the commentators. Even a cursory perusal of the different commentaries in the available translations will convince a reader of the dexterous skill displayed by the interpreters in moulding law and custom to suit the tendencies of the age and of the particular tract of country to which a law has to be applied. The result may have been achieved in various ways—sometimes by insistence on a literal reading of the original Smriti text, sometimes by emphasising the religious principle involved in a particular rule, and sometimes by the very opposite process of stressing the secular aspect of the right involved. It not infrequently happens that the whole conclusion of the commentator occasionally rests upon a philological dissection of an ancient Sanskrit verse or text. Who can ever decide the extent to which the commentator was influenced by the social forces at work in the particular age or how the social tendencies were in their turn moulded and given shape to by the ingenuity of the commentator. Those were days when the springs of civilized life were in active operation in Hindu society and were not dried up.

I shall now take up the second main source vis. judge-made law. The most forcible and erudite exposition of this topic is found in Professor Allen's book on "Law in the making." In English jurisprudence, the judge occupies very much the same place, as has been frequently pointed out, as the professional jurist in the early history of Roman jurisprudence and the commentator in the Hindu system. The English law, as is well known, is largely judge-made law and in the field of what may be termed "private and personal law," continues to be so even at the present day, excepting to the extent modified by recent statutes, as a result of the labours of the Law reform committee, constituted with a view to remove certain anachronisms and anomalies of English law entirely out of tune with modern conditions. While the English system of jurisprudence has been the theme of unstinted and incessant praise generally by English lawyers, it is common knowledge that it has been subjected to a good deal of adverse criticism not merely by foreign jurists but by the reforming school in England from the days of Jeremy Bentham. On the one hand it is urged with a feeling of pride that the English system stands as a vindication of the pre-eminent and rooted sense of justice of Englishmen and that it has stood the great changes in English society after the Industrial Revolution and even in the post-war period. On the other hand, the defects of the English system have been catalogued with equal vehemence and earnestness. One chief characteristic of the English system is the binding character of precedents, graded according to the relative position occupied by the Courts in the judicial hierarchy, though, as is pointed out by Professor Allen, it did not become an established principle of English law, until about the middle of the 19th century, and was not so even during the days of Lord Mansfield. The most interesting question for a student of legal institutions is how the elasticity of the law has been maintained, consistent with the principle as to the binding nature of a judicial precedent, and how English law has been moulded by the judges to suit the needs of a growing and expanding civilization. Sir Frederic Pollock did not make an exaggerated claim for the Common law when he stated that it was capable of growing to the demands of the new times and circumstances, and that its conclusions in detail were not dogmas but flexible applications of living and expanding principles. The theory of the binding nature of judicial precedents has been got over in countries permeated by English jurisprudence, as every practising lawyer knows, by recourse to various expedients, by the rule that an obiter dictum is not binding but only its ratio, by limiting the scope of the decision to the facts in the particular case, by curtailing the operation and scope of a decision as a result of a meticulous examination of its content and reasoning, by the enunciation of the principle that a case is an authority for the actual point decided, by grading the relative authority of particular tribunals and sometimes by the rule that a decision must be reported in certain authorised publications, and so on and so on. The history of English law for the last 50 years and over has shown that these methods have not ceased to be unsuccessful and still continue to be fruitful, and that in spite of a vast growth of precedents, there is still room for judicial expansion.

of the law and the formulation of new principles. Nowhere is this tendency more noticeable than in the recent developments in the law of torts and also in certain departments of the law of contracts. The law as to public bodies and the law of conspiracy in its different aspects have opened up a new chapter in English law. Even on such a subject as the liability of a seller for the quality of the articles sold not merely to the immediate buyer but to successive buyers, there has been a vital change consequent on the present day conditions of modern society and the rapid passing of an article from hand to hand. An accepted theory like a corporation under the English law being a juristic personality is undergoing a change for some purposes. In the region of Income-tax law, in dealing with Foreign corporations under certain circumstances, there is an attempt to break through the conception of the theory of the juristic personality of a corporation for all purposes.

Without in any way minimising the claims made by English lawyers, one may easily group the apparent disadvantages. Under the English system, a wrong principle enunciated a hundred years ago in what may be termed a chance decision without any regard to principle or without any ratiocination may easily entrench itself as not being open to attack. The rule as to the doctrine of common employment is a glaring instance in point, though the other day the House of Lords, reversing a decision of the Court of Appeal, circumscribed the doctrine within the narrowest limit with due regard to the changed conditions in modern industry and the absence of any kind of link between an employee in one sphere and an employee in another sphere of a large business organisation. There are other stereotyped rules of a similar character which have no essential basis in the fundamental principles of justice and fair play. Compare (1) the rule as to actio personalis, (2) the law relating to married women, (3) the doctrine relating to common employment, and (4) the rights of third parties to contracts.

Some of these archaic principles have either been totally abrogated or modified by recent legislation.

Again, whereas certainty is the very soul of law, the English system may easily lead to an uncertainty in the determination of law, necessitating as it does a trained practitioner to wade through a whole mass of Case-law to ascertain a simple rule of law or conduct it may be. It has also been urged against the English system that of necessity it makes the administration of justice a most expensive affair to the litigant whereas the pre-eminent consideration to be borne in mind in regard to any legal system is the expeditious and cheap remedy it affords for the redress of wrongs. The criticism has also been expressed by Professor Laski and others of his school—a criticism in which I do not share—that the judiciary in England, while maintaining a high standard of independence, has not been altogether free at any rate from unconscious class bias, due, it may be, to the recruitment of the judiciary from the middle and the higher classes trained in particular schools of thought. The decisions on the Workmen's Compensation Act and on Trade Union Law are instances cited in support of this criticism.

Without going into the merits of the criticisms against the system of judge-made law, it may be of interest to note that the discontent with the existing judicial technique, a dissatisfaction of being tied to judicial precedents and a growing impatience with the existing order, have led to the rise of a new school, especially in America, the jurisprudence of which is similar to the English jurisprudence. The main theme of this school is to free law from the trammels of judicial precedents, the cardinal principle of this school being that the proper functioning of a rule is its only title deed to recognition and nothing else. It is impossible to subscribe in its entirety to the views of this school as that may lead to a sacrifice of all rules of certainty and would leave the fate of litigants entirely in the hands of an individual Judge or Judges. Some of the greatest American Judges in recent times, such as Holmes, Cardozo, Brandies and Jurists like Maitland in England have been largely influenced by this school, though they would not subscribe to the extreme view of countenancing a law for each case. Without sacrificing the rule as to certainty being a cardinal principle in the administration of justice and conceding that a precedent is a starting point to work from, these jurists are for the highest Court in the land at any rate abrogating a principle when the same is unsuited to the times or when a precedent is proved to be radically unsound and indefensible. The theory of the absolute in law has no attraction for these jurists. If a Judge cannot consciously assume the role of a legislator, neither can he consciously or unconsciously ally himself to a particular economic or social order and arrest the growing currents of active social life. It may be of interest to note that there is nothing very surprising in the attitude of this school or even of the realist school, if only one remembers, as is pointed out by Professor Frankfurter now Mr. Justice Frankfurter in his recent book on Holmes, the work of Lord Mansfield in the formative period of English commercial law. As he says there is high authority to support the view that Lord Mansfield in assimilating the long-established custom of merchants into English commercial law wrought havoc with symmetry: "He earned no doubt the reputation of being dangerous to the kingdom but imbued the Common law with a vitality for which it has reason to be grateful."

While on the subject of judge-made law I have not alluded to the part played by the judiciary in the shaping of the federal constitution or the multiple State. A federal system necessarily involves the institution of a complicated machinery of government which demands the most delicate and flexible adjustment for harmonising the interests of national and provincial or State governments. Federalism itself is a form of government of varying content. In the delicate task of constitutional adjustment, the Courts under the British and American systems, even if not under certain Continental constitutions, have a very important part to play. The best illustration of this statement is found in the American system on account of the long history of the American democracy. One need not wade through the maze of sometimes apparently conflicting decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, say, on the commerce and the due process clause of the American constitution to come to a conclusion that the delicate task of harmonising national and State interests, of individual liberty and the rightful sphere of the intervention of government has, on the whole, in the different periods of history, been discharged in a unique manner by the Court, criticisms to the contrary notwithstanding. In the hands of the Court: "the constitution has become a plastic instrument to be adapted to a growing nationalism." As a recent writer puts it, "the constitutional document has been in the various pronouncements of the Court examined as critically and minutely as though it were verbally inspired." "No doctrinal confession in a church has suffered such a metamorphosis in meaning combined with an unimpaired respect for the letter as the fundamental law of the American constitution." In the result, a constitution which was designed when it was framed to serve the interests of an agricultural country with a population of 3 millions has wonderfully reacted to the changed conditions of American democracy in an industrial epoch and to an age which is profoundly affecting the relationship between the State and the individual and vice versa. That is a great tribute both to the fathers of the American constitution, and to the work of the American judiciary. It looked as if the other day during the post-war economic crisis the constitution was about to give way but the catastrophe has been averted and there has been a fresh accession of strength to the Supreme Court.

In evaluating the work of the Court, it is not as if I have not taken into account the criticisms that have been levelled against its work, its oscillations of opinion with a change of personnel in the Court, its sometimes ranging itself, as it is stated, with the forces of reaction, sometimes appearing to espouse American nationalism and sometimes state particularism, but giving full weight to these criticisms the verdict has to be on the whole in favour of the Court, which has functioned for nearly a century and a half and the claim made by President Wilson that the fundamental instrument is in the nature of a tap root from which has grown a constitutional system is largely due to the work of the Court. Similar influence of judicial interpretation is seen in the evolution of Dominion constitutions. Though the Judicial Committee has not subscribed to certain rules of interpretation which the Supreme Court of the United States has laid down, it is common knowledge that, as a result of the interpretation put by the Judicial Committee on the British North America Act, the constitution of Canada to-day has assumed in several respects a form different from what was expected or intended at the time. If to-day the Canadian Provincial Governments are not merely local governmental units but are in the position of States exercising what may be termed sovereign functions for this purpose, it is not a little due to the decisions of the Judicial Committee. Owing largely to the growth of nationalist feeling in Canada and a sense of its new-born status under the Statute of Westminster and the recent developments in Dominion autonomy, discontent has been expressed in several quarters with some of the decisions of the Judicial Committee. But that does not in any way affect the substance of my remarks.

Similar observations apply to the work of the High Court of Australia which is the final Court of Appeal in constitutional matters except when special leave is granted by the High Court which is seldom given. As a result of the work of the High Court of Australia, the constitutional balance has shifted from the States to the Centre in several respects contrary to the expectations of those concerned in the framing of the constitution. The diffusion of political power in a federal state is a major issue of politics at the present day, which may render a large scale economic reform difficult, if the Centre and the Provinces in India do not work in harmony with a single eye to national prosperity and consolidation. At the same time, as is pointed out in a recent book, federalism may afford a guarantee against the emergence of the totalitarian State. The success of a federal scheme, as I have already pointed out, would, to a very large extent, depend upon a co-operation between the Centre and the units, the prevention of unhealthy rivalry among the units themselves and the vesting of an overriding power in a responsible national government at the Centre in times of emergency.

By far the most important source of law in the present era is legislation. An ever increasing legislative activity is a special feature of the modern State, whatever be the form of government obtaining in the particular polity. According to a recent estimate, the output of legislation in the post-war period in England exceeds the output of legislation in the 19th century, and is far in excess of the legislative activity of the State in the centuries that preceded it. It is a common place of politics to state that the political ideal of the age and the prevalent social and economic tendencies give the necessary direction to the course of legislation. While it is true that in Europe the introduction of democratic government was, in the early stages, strangely enough, followed up by an emphasis upon the doctrine of laissez-faire in politics, very soon it came to be realised that laissez-faire could not be a sound working rule in a democratic polity, as, naturally, the enfranchised masses began to press for the betterment of their social and economic conditions. The movement towards social amelioration is a necessary concomitant of the democratic movement. In spite of the fact that English democracy is averse to effecting any convulsive changes in society, it is common knowledge that there has been "path-breaking" industrial legislation in England which made her the pioneer of industrial law, whose example has been followed in every other country. Even a cursory glance at the statute-book will reveal that legislation regulating the conduct of industry and agriculture is expanding enormously in volume and growing in complexity, and, in accordance with modern trends, there are a large number of statutes modifying in various degrees freedom of contract. As the Lord Chief Justice of England put it in a recent case, referring to the Factory and Workshop Acts, "A large purpose of these statutes was to save workmen from themselves." There is no school of politics which does not recognise at the present day the right of the State to intervene to regulate competition, to prevent exploitation, and to exercise control over working conditions. Even avowed exponents of individual liberty and property have come to realise the need for "the State checking the blind results upon the many, of economic actions which are undertaken for gain by the few, and the legitimacy of the demand for a strong government to control economic forces with the object of giving the many, economic security." A recognition of the growing functions of the State and of the regulation of economic conditions as a part of the accepted philosophy of government necessarily lead to the devolution of governmental functions upon administrative bodies and agencies under the authority of Government created for the purpose. This delegation, as is pointed out by Mr. Wade in his recent edition of Dicey, is not confined to government departments but extends to numerous statutory departments which cannot be regarded as departments of State directly responsible to the legislature.

In spite of the criticisms levelled against administrative and legislative delegation, the report of the Donoughmore Committee reveals that recent tendencies in legislative methods are inevitable and are bound to grow. All that can be expected is to give a proper direction to such methods and practices. In regard to administrative bodies exercising quasi-judicial functions, while the highest court in the land has necessarily to exercise a restraining influence to see that these bodies do not overstep their jurisdiction in the interests of sound and efficient administration, the bodies themselves will have to be given a latitude and freedom of action without any sacrifice of the fundamental principles of justice. While legislation in any modern State necessarily involves a certain degree of interference with even what may be termed 'liberty of person' in the larger sense of that expression, care has to be taken that the foundations of such liberty are not sapped.

Even the United States, whose constitution is based on the 18th century notions of individual property and sanctity of contract, have not been able to resist the tendencies of the age. The New Deal legislation has been actuated by the guiding principle of a pervasive governmental interference with all branches of private business. The legislative activity of the State has invaded every sphere—the reduction of private debt under the moratorium legislation, the inflation of currency, the banking system, and agricultural and industrial production. The need has been recognised for finding a rational compromise between individual rights, and public welfare, the security of the State being placed by every section of political opinion above the security of vested rights. There is an increasing realisation of the necessity of the laws being every day adjusted to a new environment and even the constitution being so interpreted as to meet economic realities.

The growing tendencies in England cannot but have their reactions on the Indian scheme of government. In spite of the essentially individualistic and family basis of Indian social organisation and the village-community system of local Government, from very early times, the State in India has taken upon itself the functions assumed by the modern State in European countries. In illustration of the above statement, I would only refer to such matters as irrigation, control of communal property, forests, and regulation of land revenue. Legislative interference for regulating and adjusting the different interests which have grown up in the land in the course of centuries has been a special feature of British Indian Administration. The democratic legislatures of India under the new constitution are confronted with the problem of large-scale legislation in regard to these matters. While the interests of agriculture, as the staple source of living for the large mass of people in this country, will have to be safeguarded and fostered, and while every effort has to be made also to help the cottage industries in villages and in the suburbs of towns, this country cannot be expected to keep pace with the civilized world, sustain its growing population and ensure a proper standard of living for it, unless every endeavour is made to help large-scale industrial enterprise of various kinds. A large-scale industry in industrial centres cannot but bring in its train the problem of adjustment of the relations between capital and labour according to modern ideas, the prevention of overcrowding and the ensuring of sanitary surroundings. The task before the legislator dealing with industrial problems is how to harmonise the interests of capital and labour and secure a fair deal for the labourer without destroying initiative and enterprise. In the process, the key industries of the country must necessarily come under the control of the State, if not under its direct management.

Meanwhile, the constitution itself is in the melting pot and the determination of legislative spheres takes up a good portion of the time and energy of the best minds in the country. The problems that await solution call for the exercise of the wisest statesmanship. They cannot be solved by dilating on a priori theories borrowed from the West or antiquarian researches into the state of society in ancient and mediæval India. There is no use of a too rigid insistence on sanctity of contract or inviolability of property. Nor will slogans copied from books which have no relation to the concrete facts of the Indian situation which may result in strife, discord and misery of millions, do any good. The politician, the lawyer, and the average citizen will have to strive for a new social harmony.

In the foregoing remarks I have not made any special reference to the need for change in the personal law of the Hindus, as the reform of Hindu Law including the law relating to women's rights, is merely a part of the larger problem of social and legislative changes. I am aware that in this matter your State has set an example, in many respects forestalling British Indian Provinces. The process of change by textual interpretation by commentaries of acknowledged authority is no longer available, as that source is, of necessity, dried up under modern conditions. The process of change by judicial construction is still available to some extent, but the very nature of judicial process, as has already been pointed out, imposes obvious limitations on the expansion and adaptation of the law. It must be admitted that in several branches of Hindu Law, the Judicial Committee and the Indian High Courts have recently given a proper direction to the development of Hindu Law, though now and then there have been decisions which have taken the profession and the public by surprise. Piecemeal legislation has in glaring instances set right some rules of law out of tune with modern conditions and the social consciousness of the people, though such legislation has occasionally resulted in making parts of Hindu Law an unintelligible jumble. A wholesale and radical change in the very concepts of Hindu Law is demanded by one school of social and legal reformers while another set is strongly opposed to any kind of legal change, though they easily reconcile themselves to even a chance decision revolutionising or making a serious inroad on our notions of the law.

Well-instructed opinion is decidedly in favour of changes in the joint family law in the interests of the growing commercial needs of the country, while, at the same time realising that in the larger interests of agriculture unless group property of some kind is recognized there may be total dismemberment of property and fragmentation of holdings in the villages. In any reform of Hindu Law, the interests of rural economy cannot of course be ignored.

The time also seems to be ripe for a codification of the Hindu Law of Succession on rational lines and on an intelligible basis without the Courts having to go through the process of calculating pindas which are never offered or a calculation of the particles of blood with reference to certain artificial rules laid down by our forefathers.

The law of adoption may be easily simplified without the lawyer having to dissect the pronouncements or dicta of the Judicial Committee in different cases on the problem of the nature of sapinda consent that is required for a valid adoption or the limits for the due execution of an authority to adopt.

The law as to the obligation of the different members of the family in regard to debts is still in an uncertain state and makes the task of the legislator working in new fields of social and economic reform exceedingly difficult.

The Indian law of procedure and limitation occupies too much attention of the Courts and a good deal of public time is wasted in unravelling a rule of procedure or the true import of a particular article of the Limitation Act. Procedure is intended to facilitate and ensure the administration of justice on sound principles and the law of limitation is similarly intended to prevent agitation of stale claims. When the earlier Codes of Civil Procedure were enacted, they were mainly intended to assist Indian Courts with ready-made and detailed rules in the conduct of trials with due regard to certain fundamental principles in the administration of justice according to British ideas. When the Code of 1882 was repealed and that of 1908 was enacted, a serious attempt was made to differentiate between what might be regarded as principles of procedure, which were embodied in the main sections of the Code, and certain other provisions of a less important character which were relegated to the schedule and the rules portion of the Code which might be altered by the different High Courts in India. It was hoped that a certain elasticity of procedure could or would be secured by recourse to this machinery. But the experience of the working of the Code for the last 30 years has shown that the hopes of those responsible for the Code of 1908 have not been realised to the extent anticipated. Litigation involving pure questions of procedure has not, to any appreciable extent, diminished, and the number of decisions on such questions is decidedly on the increase. It does not require a detailed investigation to come to the conclusion that the number of decisions in the English Law Reports on pure questions of procedure bears no proportion whatever to the vast mass of Case law on procedure in India.

The Indian law of limitation is another subject which may well occupy the attention of the law reformer. When the Limitation Act was arranged into sections and articles laying down the starting point of limitation and different periods of limitation for various kinds of suits and applications, it was hoped that the Act would furnish ready-made answers to mofussil courts dealing with questions of limitation, and that the enactment would prevent the agitation of stale claims by litigants. The hopes have been baffled and the arraignment has only served to encumber the Law Reports and increase their size and volume. Experience of the working of the Limitation Acts of 1871, 1877 and 1908 makes one feel that possibly a Limitation Act on the lines of the Act of 1859 and the English Limitation Acts is more likely to achieve the objects of a proper limitation law than a too detailed enactment of the kind similar to the Indian statute. It is easy enough to get into a groove but very difficult to get out of it. Anyhow, it ought to be possible for the law reformer to devise a simpler Code of Procedure or rules of limitation without in any way sacrificing the paramount interests of justice.

The law of evidence in force in British India, while resting on pre-eminently sound principles, is too antiquated and is capable of being improved in the light of recent developments in England. There is no reason also why an easily understood procedure should not take the place of ancient writs, as has been done in England, without in any way sacrificing the true spirit and principle underlying these writs.

To carry out all these reforms, it is necessary to infuse a new spirit in the lawyers and legislators—lawyers, who think not in terms merely of reported decisions and antiquated rules of a bygone age but in terms of a living and progressive society, and legislators with a sociological bent of mind. There must be a standing committee in every law association which would approach the study of these problems in a broad and catholic spirit and which would make suggestions as to legal changes. The Government, in their turn, ought to invite the sympathetic co-operation of the Profession. That, of course, does not involve that the Government are to sacrifice the interests of the public or the fundamental and ultimate aims of the party which, for the time being, is in power under a democratic form of Government.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

ROBERTSON v. PETROS M. NOMIKOS, LTD., (1939) A.C. 371 (H.L.).

Marine Insurance—Insurance on hull and freight—Damage to ship before charter voyage due to fire—Ship repaired and insurance as on partial loss claimed—Charterparty not performed—Claim on insurance on freight as on constructive total loss—Maintainability.

A marine insurance policy was for "4110l. on freight chartered or otherwise in and/or over" and was a time policy for twelve months. It was expressed to be subject to the Institute Time Clauses—Freight, which were set out in a slip attached to the policy. It also incorporated the hull and machinery policies. The vessel was chartered to a Belgium Company to load a cargo of crude oil for ports in the United Kingdom. While repairs were being executed before the starting in ballast on the voyage, there was an explosion on board followed by a fire resulting in damage. The owners had the ship repaired and claimed for partial loss up to the full insured value of 28,000l. for it. The charterparty was never performed; and the shipowners claimed under the freight clauses from the insurers the full freight as on a constructive total loss. The insurers contended (1) that there was not a constructive total loss of the vessel because there had been no notice of abandonment by the owners who on the contrary had elected to retain the vessel and claim as for partial loss and (2) that the claim was excluded as being consequent on loss of time because the repairs took so long as to make it impossible to perform the charter party.

Held (on a construction of S. 61 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906), that there was a constructive total loss and the shipowner was entitled to the amounts claimed.

(1938) 2 K.B. 603, affirmed.

PRATT v. PRATT, (1939) A.C. 417 (H.L.).

Divorce—Desertion—Refusal by deserted spouse to allow a meeting to discuss resumption of marital relation in spite of request—Effect on desertion.

Where the deserting spouse writes letters which indicate a genuine and honest desire to see and discuss matters with her husband in the hope that this would result in their "coming together" in their making "a new start" and "a home together in the future" and the husband refuses to allow a meeting to take place, her continued absence thereafter cannot without an utter misuse of language be called a desertion.

Decision of Court of Appeal in (1939) P. 117, affirmed.

FARLEY v. WESTMINSTER BANK, (1939) A.C. 430 (H.L.).

Wills—Gift for "parish work"—If valid charitable bequest.

A will contained a bequest to vicars and churchwardens "for parish work."

Held, "parish work" are words of such vague import as to go far beyond the ordinary meaning of charity in this case in the sense of being a religious purpose. The words are so wide that on no construction can they be brought within the limited meaning of "charitable" as used in law. The gifts therefore failed.

(1938) Ch. 482 (C.A.), affirmed.

BUCHANAN WOLLASTON'S CONVEYANCE, In re: CURTIS v. BUCHANAN WOLLASTON, (1939) 1 Ch. 738 (C.A.).

Joint tenants—Purchase of land jointly—Covenant not to sell without unanimous consent of all—Application by one to order sale—Sale if to be ordered—Practice—Appeal—Evidence that could and ought to have been put before trial Court—If to be admitted on appeal for the first time.

Several persons who had purchased land as joint tenants entered into a mutual covenant whereby the land was not to be parted or dealt with except with the unanimous consent of all. Where one of the parties applies to the Court to order a sale, the Court will not aid that party to break his contractual obligations.

(1939) 1 Ch. 217, affirmed.

An application for admission of fresh evidence was rejected on the ground that it was evidence that could quite easily have been and ought to have been put before the Court below if it had any relevance to the appellant's case.

MACLENNAN, In re : FEW v. BYRNE, (1939) 1 Ch. 750 (C.A.).

Deeds and wills—Construction—Principles—Annuities of clear sums after deduction of income-tax—Reliefs recovered by annuitants under Income-tax Act—If to be returned to trustees of estate.

In construing documents, each word used by the settlor, or the testator, as the case may be, must be given its true and proper meaning in the context, and it is not legitimate for the purpose of construction to treat phrases used in the document as though they had been differently expressed. The precise language of the document is to be examined and the proper construction placed on it in relation to the particular subject-matter it deals with.

Under a will the testator bequeathed certain annuities each to his wife, children and wife's brother (not free of income-tax) and the residue to his wife. By a subsequent family arrangement they charged the residue of the annual income of the residuary estate (after providing for the annuities under the will) with the payment by the will trustees of "such an annual sum as together with the annuity under the will (£ 250) would (if such annual sum and annuity respectively were payable to the annuitant absolutely) after deduction of income-tax but not sur-tax leave the sum of £ 500 clear of all deductions for income-tax but not sur-tax." The annuitants were entitled to some reliefs for refund under the Income-tax Act.

Held, on a construction of the deed and will, that the reliefs to which the annuitants might become entitled under the Income-tax Act should be returned to the trustees of the estate.

In re BEALE : Ex parte THE BOARD OF TRADE, (1939) 1 Ch. 761.

Bankruptcy Act (1914), S. 19—Election of trustee by creditors—Trustee elected, a member of firm of accountants who had acted for debtor proving for debts for professional services—Objection to appointment.

On a receiving order against a debtor the creditors elected an accountant (a member of a firm who had acted for the debtor and was a creditor in respect of debts for professional services) as trustee. On objection taken by the Board of Trade under S. 19 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act, that because of his connection with or relation to the bankrupt or his estate it will be difficult for the proposed trustee to act with impartiality in the interests of the creditors generally.

Held, the objection must be upheld.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

The Long Vacation.—The vacation which has now begun well merits its title of "the long," although in fact it is considerably shorter than it was not so many years ago. At one time it extended to practically three months, from 8th August to 2nd November; later it was curtailed to ten weeks from 13th August to 23rd October; while more recently it has been again abbreviated. Foreign observers have often commented adversely on its length. The Grand Duke of Weimar—Goethe's Grand Duke—in a conversation with Crabb Robinson "expressed his disapprobation of the English system of jurisprudence, which allowed lawyers to travel for months at a time," and Robinson had to admit that the Grand Duke was right. No doubt from the purely business point of view it seems highly anomalous to close the courts for so long a time, but the good sense of the English race seems early to have recognised the practical benefit of a cessation of litigation for a considerable period, and as one of the old judges, who doubtless appreciated the rest which came to him during "the long," once declared, it was absolutely essential that there should be a lengthy truce in litigious warfare to give the needed recovery from the contemplation of human nature not always at its best.—S.J., 1939, p. 613.

Sumneriana.—In each generation there is usually some member of the Bench who stands out in bold relief as possessing certain qualities which distinguish him from his colleagues and give him a title to remembrance which is denied to the judge, however eminent in many respects he may be, who is without that element of character or idiosyncrasy which stamps him as distinctive. To the former class of judges Baron Parke in a past day certainly belonged. That distinguished judge simply revelled in law, and nothing pained him so much as to find the record not drawn in what he considered the orthodox style; but although his decisions are still quoted and treated as authoritative, perhaps his chief title to diuturnity are the stories which quaintly reflect his passion for law, as exemplified in the story which, if not strictly true, should be, of his taking a "beautiful demurrer" to the sick bed of a professional friend to cheer him into convalescence. Not very many of Parke's successors on the Bench have left their mark quite so distinctive as he did, but the late Lord Sumner ran him very close. Lord Haldane once described him as "a consummate lawyer"; but he was something more, possessing as he did the gift of rapid decision and the gift of expressing it in pointed language seasoned with wit.—L.T., 1939, p. 99.

At the Bar.—Like a good many others who were to achieve fame in the law, John Andrew Hamilton, afterwards to be ennobled with the title Lord Sumner, did not spring into professional fame all at once; but he was never idle, his pen, pointed with causticity, was busy in the columns of the now long extinct Academy, and later, in the writing of something like 300 articles for the Dictionary of National Biography into which he would slip a caustic comment eminently characteristic of him. In those early days he also wrote a short biography of Dan O'Connell, wherein we find this little jibe at his predecessors in the same biographical field: "O'Connell's biographers do not agree as to what Inn he studied at; his son John says Lincoln's Inn; Daunt says Gray's Inn; and Shiel, the Middle Temple. All these may be presumed to have had means of knowing the truth. Fagan follows Daunt, and Huish, Shiel; Mr. Shaw Lefevre puts him at the Inner Temple. There are no more Inns of Court." Occasionally this vein of humour would find expression even in the pleadings which came from him in his early days. Thus he was once called upon to draw a defence to an action for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff's statement of claim contained the usual allegations; the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff; the plaintiff was always ready and willing to marry the defendant; but the defendant refused or neglected to carry out his promise, whereby the plaintiff suffered damage in respect of which she claimed. As it came from Hamilton's hand the defence was a model of brevity, simplicity and wit. This it was: "The defendant admits that the plaintiff was always ready to marry the defendant, but save as aforesaid the defendant denies each and all of the allegations contained in the statement of claim."—L.T., 1939, p. 99.

As a Leader and Judge.—When Joseph Walton became a judge, Hamilton took silk, and till his promotion to the Bench there was scarcely an action of commercial importance in which he was not engaged. It is not easy to be amusing about charter-parties and bills of lading, but even to these prosaic documents Hamilton could impart a fascination. Many were the great forensic combats he waged against his most formidable opponent, Thomas Edward Scrutton, an equally great lawyer, but not quite so witty, and who ere long was to follow him on to the Bench. As a judge, Hamilton established a record for the rapid despatch of business. Never once as a puisne did he reserve judgment. Although his judgments were at times a trifle long, they were models of lucidity and punctuated with caustic comment. In Attorney-General v. Reynolds (104 L.T. Rep. 852), a complicated case as to common rights in the New Forest, he had to consider whether a particular structure, sometimes called a "garden house," sometimes a "bungalow," and sometimes a "cottage," was a dwelling-house in respect of which certain rights could be claimed. In reading the judgment the student's interest is not lessened when in the midst of much technical detail he alights upon the following pleasant touch: "In summer time, with a house full of guests, I have no doubt that a bachelor guest might consider himself very tolerably lodged there; I think it is possible, in an emergency, even a manservant might consent to occupy it." In a later case, where a schoolmaster unsuccessfully sought to maintain an action for certain words alleged to have been spoken of him, Lord Sumner, as he had now become, said that "if a change of the law is desired, it is from the Legislature, as it was in 1891, that relief must come. It could be simply obtained . . . by enacting that a schoolmaster should be deemed a woman within 54 & 55 Vict., c. 51, S. 11"—L.T., 1939, p. 99.

All in Public.—At the Manchester Assizes recently, Mr. Justice Croom-Johnson, after condemning a man to six months' imprisonment, cancelled the sentence on further reflection and bound him over. "Although I could have altered your sentence behind the scenes," he said, "I thought it better that you should come before me in public and that I should indicate why I am doing that which I am about to do." Some judges prefer to be merciful by stealth, others have mercy secretly thrust upon them. Of the former, Mr. Baron Martin, after passing a severe sentence would sometimes modify it in favour of the prisoner before signing the calendar. Of the latter, that William O'Brien whose behaviour on the Irish Bench aroused so much criticism used to pass the most erratic sentences, sometimes ferocious, sometimes sentimentally lenient. Some of the more farcically heavy punishments inflicted by him appeared upon the Crown Book with the spoken word discounted by as much as 80 per cent.—S.J., 1939, p. 638.

Behind the Scenes.—In the sentencing of prisoners, Mr. Justice Day had a system all his own. The heavy punishments he distributed in open court struck terror into the hearts of the members of the criminal classes listening in the public gallery. Then, having produced the desired effect of frightening them out of their wits, he would revise his sentences without any publicity when he came to sign the calendar. Once public indignation was thoroughly roused when at Carlisle Assizes he condemned a man to five years' penal servitude for stealing a waistcoat. "Faith," said an Irish member of the Bar, "if the fella had stolen a suit of clothes he would have hanged him." The storm reached the House of Commons and the Home Secretary was asked a question about this exploit of Day, J. To everyone's surprise he answered: "It is not a fact that John Jones was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for stealing a waistcoat." There was consternation in the House as the questioner had been in court at the time. Then the Home Secretary continued: "I hold in my hand the calendar, and it appears that John Jones was sentenced to six months' imprisonment."—S.J., 1939, p. 638.

Home-made Wills.—All lawyers are at some time or another confronted with the layman who demands to know why he should pay to have a will drawn up for him when he can do it perfectly well himself and save his guineas. "I am certainly capable," he says, "of stating clearly what I wish to happen to my money." For such the case of Re Smithers: Watts v. Smithers and Others (The Law Journal, August 5, 1939, p. 101) is useful ammunition. The testatrix obtained a printed will form, and when her "securities" had been converted into cash, she made bequests of two-thirds of the proceeds, and the "remainder of the money." She did not know upon what a quaking bog of judicial interpretation she was walking. "Securities" has a primary and a legal meaning, so that there was no doubt that certain money belonging to the deceased passed under that heading. But the testatrix also possessed shares in industrial companies. Could it be said that those stocks and shares were included in the term "securities"? Crossman, J., held that they could not, and to include them would only be guessing the testatrix's intention. It is no disrespect to the learned Judge to say that had he permitted himself to guess he would almost certainly have come to the opposite conclusion, especially in view of Re Scorer: Burt v. Harrison (94 L.J. Ch. 196). The testatrix was making her own will, and as she almost certainly did not know the strict meaning of the word "securities" she could only have used it in the colloquial sense. Those interested in her estate have now had to pay many times what she originally saved in lawyers' fees.—L.J., 1939, p. 108.

The Great Seal.—In view of the forthcoming visit of the Lord Chancellor to Canada, the announcement at p. 644 of last week's issue that His Majesty the King has appointed Commissioners to have the care and custody of the Great Seal while Lord Maugham is absent from the Kingdom, is a reminder of the fact that the Great Seal, to which an almost mystical significance attaches as the sign and symbol of the highest authority, cannot be taken outside the realm, seeing that it may at any time be required to be used. With its custody, we naturally associate the Lord Chancellor for the time being, and indeed its transfer to him invests him with the manifold powers attaching to his high office. A recent writer tells us that in early times, the Lord Chancellor was the King's Chaplain and the Keeper of his conscience, and remains the Keeper of the Great Seal. Considering its official importance, the Great Seal has always been carefully conserved, though not always in the precise fashion waggishly asserted by Dickens who made one of his characters declare that it was guarded night and day by two men in bag wigs and with drawn swords. Even all the care bestowed upon its safe custody has not, however, always conferred immunity upon it, for at least on one occasion it was stolen from the house of the Lord Chancellor. In an old report relating to the Court of Chancery occurs this curious item: "For sixteen yards of woollen cloth at 8 s. a yard to use about the Great Seal at the time of sealing, for one whole year, £6 3s." When a new Great Seal is made, the old one is "damasked", that is, tapped slightly with a hammer, which is assumed to deprive it of its former virtue, and then it becomes the perquisite of the Lord Chancellor for the time being.—S. J., 1939, p. 645.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE WORKING CONSTITUTION OF INDIA, by S.M. Bose, M.A., LL.B. (Cantab.). Published by Oxford University Press, B. I. Building, Nicol Road, Bombay. Price Rs. 20.

This is only a commentary on the Government of India Act, 1935, as the sub-title of the book shows. The Act is of great importance to the practising lawyer, to the student of Indian Constitutional History and to politicians and legislators. Each of these may have different needs and desire a different type of commentary. The practising lawyer may require a citation of cases decided by the Judicial Committee on similar questions arising from the Canadian and Australian Constitutional Statutes. The student may require historical treatment and the politician and legislator may not require much of either for his limited purposes. Many Editions of the Act with and without much commentary are bound to be brought out to serve all three groups in varying degrees. This book is intended primarily for the lawyer but the other two groups will find it useful. A commentary may run into minute details of decisions and become diffuse or may deal with principles and furnish guidance for the student and lawyer without running into any great detail. The commentary of the author is sharp and pointed. It is needless to add that the neatness of the printing assists in making the book attractive, notwithstanding a few errors here and there.

A supplement of the Orders in Council may be required to complete the usefulness of the book for the lawyers in particular.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT with INDIAN BAR COUNCILS ACT, 1926, by Kshitish Chandra Chakravarti, M.A., B.L., Advocate, Federal Court, Delhi, Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Published by M.C. Sarkar & Sons, Ltd., 14, College Square, Calcutta. Price Rs. 3-8-0.

We have great pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of the commentaries on the Legal Practitioners' Act by Mr. Chakravarti. This is the latest commentary on the enactment. The book opens with an introduction which gives a historical account of the law on the subject from the earliest times. The various enactments bearing on the subject from time to time in the several provinces are noticed and their effect summarised in the introduction. Then follow the provisions of the Act with a full commentary giving all the decisions in their appropriate places and explaining the scope of the sections. The appendices give the other enactments bearing on the topic, the most important of which is the Indian Bar Councils Act. The rules relating to legal practitioners framed by the High Courts are also given by way of appendices. Thus no effort has been spared to make the book a comprehensive guide on the subject. We hope that the book will meet with the popularity which it deserves.

COPARCENER'S RIGHT TO SUE FOR SEPARATE MAINTENANCE

BY

S. VENKATARAMAN, B.A., M.L., Advocate, Madras.

Non-existence of right assumed

It is somewhat strange that the competency of a suit by a coparcener for separate maintenance has seldom come up for examination by Courts of law in the past. It seems to have been more or less assumed generally that among the male members of an ordinary undivided Hindu family a suit by one member against another for maintenance is not sustainable.¹ Adverting to the view that where a member could have sued for partition he could not sue for maintenance, the criticism has been made:

"But it is difficult to see why a coparcener, who is willing to continue as a member of an undivided family should be driven out of it by what must be wrongful conduct on the part of the manager in refusing him his proper support out of the family funds."²

The question arises whether there is any basis at all to warrant the view referred to.

Nature of coparcenary

According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu law, no individual member thereof can predicate of the joint and undivided property that he has any certain and definite share therein. The proceeds of the undivided property must be brought into the common chest and applied for the purposes of the family.³ Until the joint status is disrupted each coparcener has a right to common possession and enjoyment of the coparcenary property.¹ If any coparcener is excluded from joint possession he need not sue for partition but he can sue for a declaration of his right to such possession.² He may also obtain an injunction to restrain the manager from obstructing him in the joint enjoyment of the property.³

Participation in income

No coparcener is entitled to any definite share of the income of the family property.⁴ Nor is there any obligation on any member of the family to stir a finger if he does not feel so disposed, either for his own benefit, or for that of the family; if he does do so he gains thereby no advantage; if he does not do so he incurs no responsibility; nor is any member restricted to the amount of the share which he is to enjoy prior to division.⁵ A coparcener has no right to demand an account of the family income; even where it exists it is only as incident to the right to require a partition.⁶ His interest, however, carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action of partition and that until partition is de facto accomplished he has a right to maintenance. This is an inherent quality of the right of coparcenary—that is, of common property. The individual enjoyment of the common property being ousted by the management of the head of the family, the coparceners have a right, till they exercise their right to divide to be maintained out of the property which is common to them, who are excluded from the management, and to the head of the family, who is invested with the management.⁷

Remedy on infraction of right

The right being so declared, the question arises as to the remedy available to a coparcener for its enforcement should there be an infraction of it. The resort to an action for partition being a drastic remedy can only be thought of as a last step. Still, it has been stated that a son who can sue for partition cannot sue for maintenance, but where he cannot sue for partition he is entitled to sue for maintenance.¹ If a right to maintenance is an inherent right of every coparcener it is difficult to perceive why he cannot enforce that right by suit and what paramount or compelling reason there can be to make it desirable that he should sue for partition only. The proposition rests on the authority of a decision of the Bombay High Court referred to in Himmatsingh v. Ganpatsingh.² According to it a suit by a coparcener against others for maintenance will not lie unless he were indeed illegitimate, or suffering from some other disability to enforce partition. In Himmatsingh v. Ganpatsingh,³ the property out of which maintenance was sought was impartible and there was no possibility of partition. It was held that a suit for maintenance would be competent. Adverting to the earlier case⁴, the Court merely observed:

"We say nothing as to the right of a son to sue for maintenance where he might sue for partition," thereby leaving the point open. In Ramachandra v. Gopal Vaghs, under the impression that *Himmat Singh's case*² allows a suit by a coparcener for separate maintenance to be brought generally, Pinhey, J., observed:

"I think it not at all improbable, that in some future case, when the point is further considered and exhaustively argued, . . . the authority of *Himmatsingh v. Ganpatsingh*² will be shaken. And I should be glad to see that case overruled, for the rule which it lays down appears to me to be subversive of Hindu society and very injurious. I can conceive nothing more fatal to the happiness of Hindu family life than for this Court to affirm the principle that a Hindu father is liable to have to provide for each of his sons a separate maintenance, while the sons may choose to live a life of idleness and probably in consequence . . . a life of vice."

The criticism fails to notice that there is no obligation whatsoever on any coparcener to exert himself⁴, and that his right to maintenance is an inherent quality of his coparcenership.⁵ It is also unduly swayed by the theory of parental authority over children. In Bhupal v. Tavanappa,⁶ it was held that inasmuch as under the Bombay law a son cannot sue for partition, he can sue for maintenance on being driven out of the family. The decision does not state that if he could have sued for partition he could not sue for maintenance. In a still later case,¹ the Bombay High Court has laid down, on an application by a District Magistrate under S. 88 of the Indian Lunacy Act, for separate maintenance for a lunatic son, that such maintenance should be decreed, that a father as manager of the joint family is bound to maintain the son, and that the obligation is independent of any consideration whether on account of the son's lunacy the father should maintain him as a person disqualified to sue for partition. This decision does not lend countenance to the view that a suit for separate maintenance will be competent only where a suit for partition will not lie.

In *Bhagwan Singh v. Mst. Kewal Kaur*², a coparcener's widow sued for separate maintenance for herself, her infant son and daughter. The suit was decreed on the ground that the manager's obligation to maintain was absolute. The point, however, does not seem to have been raised whether it is not a suit for partition on behalf of the son that should have been brought. In Harendranath Avasti v. Shibo Sundari Debis, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that an adult coparcener cannot bring a suit for separate maintenance. The learned Judges observed:

"The only other question is whether he can claim a monthly sum by way of maintenance. We are clearly of opinion that he cannot. No authority has been cited for the proposition that a male member of a joint family who refuses to remain joint in food is entitled to separate maintenance out of the family funds."

Here again the decision rests on assumption and the absence of authority to the contrary.

So far as Madras is concerned, in *Subbayya v. Marudappa*³, Varadachariar, J., observed:

"It is doubtful if a son can maintain a suit for maintenance against the father when he could as well sue for partition."

The reasons for the doubt raised are not given and probably it was engendered by the statement of the position in the text-books. In Cherutty v. Nagainparambil Raru,⁴ the plaintiff sued for separate maintenance for himself, his minor son and others against the manager of the joint family. It was held by the High Court in the first instance that the suit was incompetent, that so far as the adult coparcener was concerned his remedy on denial of maintenance was to sue for partition, and that as regards the minor coparcener the suit should have been in the alternative either for partition or for maintenance, as the Court may decide. This decision has however been recently reversed in Letters Patent Appeal and it has been held that even an adult coparcener can sue for separate maintenance.¹ As a direct and authoritative exposition the decision is invaluable. The manager occupies a position analogous to that of a trustee.² He may in fact be compared to a quasi-trustee subject under Ss. 95 and 96 of the Trusts Act to obligations similar to those of a trustee and as such enabling the beneficiary to compel him to perform his acts of duty under S. 61 of the Act. It is also true that there is no reason founded on sound principle, why a Hindu coparcener who is excluded from the enjoyment of his rights should against his will be driven to sue for partition, to secure relief.³ This will however be a double-edged consideration. If to keep the family unbroken the coparcener is allowed to sue for separate maintenance, it may be that the manager will find the family discipline undermined and a lack of co-operation and team work—which are the ideals of a joint family—promoted, making his position difficult and compelling him to sever himself from the family.

Right to sue for separate maintenance should not be absolute

It is desirable that the coparcener's right to sue for separate maintenance should not be construed as an absolute right, but one depending upon the facts of each particular case. If the coparcenary property is impartible or if the coparcener is disqualified from enforcing a partition or is a minor there is no dispute that a suit for maintenance will be competent. It is only in the case of an adult coparcener that the necessity for a limitation will arise. Where he is excluded or driven out of the family there will be justification for allowing him to sue for separate maintenance. But where maintenance is not in fact denied or joint family life has no attractions for a coparcener it is difficult to see why he should not be asked to sue for a partition.

Quantum of maintenance

Where separate maintenance is allowed a question may arise as to its quantum. Obviously this will depend upon the resources as well as the needs of the family as a whole. The liability to maintain the coparcener is not however limited to the income of what would have been his share on a partition of the family property.¹

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

WRIGHT v. NEW ZEALAND FARMERS CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION OF CANTERBURY, LTD., (1939) A.C. 439.

Guarantee—Continuing guarantee applicable to "the balance that is now or may at any time hereafter be owing"—Limitation—Commencement—Contract of sale by mortgagee in pursuance of his powers under mortgage—Rescinding from contract and re-sale at a lower price to new purchaser—Mortgagee if accountable for purchase-money under first sale.

Where a guarantee is to apply to the balance which at any time thereafter is owing, the question of limitation could only arise in regard to the time which had elapsed since the balance guaranteed and sued for had been constituted, and the number of years which have expired since any individual debit was incurred is immaterial.

There is no legal or equitable principle upon which can rest the proposition that a mortgagee who has contracted to sell in exercise of his power of sale, and who (the land not having become vested in the purchaser) rescinds the contract, is accountable to the mortgagor for purchase money which he has never received.

MAURICE v. GOLDSBROUGH MORT & CO., LTD., (1939) A.C. 452.

Insurance—Goods held on commission by bailee—Insurance by bailee—Loss by fire—Extent of insurance—Respective rights of wool grower and wool broker in the insurance money.

The appellants were wool growers who consigned 123 bales of wool to the respondents, wool brokers, in whose store they were detroysed by fire. The respondents had paid the expenses of the road and rail carriage to the store and in their name insured the wool along with that of other clients. After the fire the respondent claimed to deduct from the insurance moneys collected by them, commission which they would have earned on sale and charges which they would have been entitled to make for receiving, weighing, lotting, appraising value, etc., if the wool had not been destroyed. The appellant disputed the claim on the ground that the commission had not been and could not be earned and the other charges were deductible from the insurance moneys only as to services actually performed. The policy stated that loss or damage was not to include profit of any kind.

Held, the policy does not cover profits but only the wool. The position in the event of loss must depend on the terms of the contract and similarly the apportionment of that value between the appellant and the respondents must depend on the respective rights of property which the parties had at the date of the fire. The appellant was entitled to the whole of the insurance money and the respondents were not entitled to deduct the commission and other charges they would have been entitled to make if there had been a sale.

LADORE v. BENNET, (1939) A.C. 468.

Constitutional Law—British North America Act, 1867, Ss. 91 and 92—Provincial legislation to amalgamate four insolvent municipalities and make consequential provisions—Infringement on power of Dominion legislature—Effect on validity.

By 1935 four adjoining municipalities in Ontario each of which had raised loans for local purposes on debentures not charged upon municipal properties, were in acute financial difficulties and defaulted in payment of debenture interest and maturing principal. Various public utility corporations associated with the municipalities also were unable to meet demands on debenture issued by them. The Government of the province in its legislature passed the impugned statute, the City of Windsor (Amalgamation) Act, 1935, amalgamating the four municipalities into one, as the corporation of the City of Windsor. By S. 7 the Finance Commission was to arrange for the funding and refunding the debts of each of the municipalities by the imposition of rates on the rateable property in the area comprised in the respective old municipalities. By amending Act of 1936 the Finance Commission was abolished and its duties transferred to the department of municipal affairs, Ontario. Similar provisions were made for the public utility commissions. Some of the debentures were held by persons outside the province. The plaintiffs attacked the provincial legislation and the authority conferred in connection with the municipalities, as ultra vires as they invaded the field of Dominion legislature as to (i) bankruptcy and insolvency [S. 91 (21)] and (ii) interest [S. 91 (19)] and (iii) were not within the exclusive powers of the province as they affected private rights outside the province.

Held, the province has exclusive legislative power in relation to municipal institutions in the province [S. 92 (8)]. If for strictly provincial purposes, debts may be destroyed and new debts created, it is inevitable that debtors should be affected whether the original creditors reside within or without the province. The pith and substance of the Ontario Acts are that they are passed in relation to municipal institutions in the province and so they are intra vires. As to their affecting the public utility companies, they will be justified as having been passed in relation to local works and undertakings under S. 92 (10) of British North America Act, 1867, and it was no encroachment on exclusive power of Dominion legislature over "interest" as it is directed bona fide to the effective creation and control of municipal institutions.

BUTLER v. THE KING, (1939) A.C. 484.

Constitution of Colonial High Courts—Trinidad and Tobago—"Acting Judge" if "Puisne Judge" of the Supreme Court capable of being member of Court of Criminal Appeal—Effect of ordinances.

By the Judicature Ordinances of 1880 the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago consists of a Chief Justice and three Puisne Judges. There was provision in the ordinance for appointment of acting Judges as substitutes in case of vacancy. An ordinance of 1931 established a Court of Criminal Appeal the Judges of which were to be the Chief Judge and Puisne Judges of Trinidad and the ordinance contained no power to appoint an acting Judge to the Court of Criminal Appeal. The Court of Criminal Appeal consisting of the Chief Justice and two acting Judges appointed by the Governor to hear the appeal dismissed an appeal against a conviction for sedition. On appeal to the Privy Council, Held, an acting Judge appointed by the Governor (not as a substitute for any individual) was not a Puisne Judge and cannot be a member of the Court of Criminal Appeal. As the Court of Criminal Appeal was not properly constituted the order dismissing the appeal against conviction should be declared void and of no effect.

REGIER v. CAMPBELL-STUART, (1939) 1 Ch. 766.

Principal and agent—Agent for purchase of house—Purchase by agent in name of another and re-sale to himself at higher price—Subsequent sale to principal at a further profit—Accountability of agent for secret profits.

In December, 1937, plaintiff's son who became friends with the defendant asked and the defendant agreed to find a house and from time to time sent particulars of houses. In January the defendant heard of and inspected a certain house, a leasehold having some years to run, at a ground rent of £125 and the price, as stated in the particulars by the house agents was £4,250. In the particulars sent to the defendant was a note that £2,500 would be accepted. The agents who had not been able to sell it in an auction early in 1937, had it in their hands to dispose of at the best price but had not received any serious offers. When the defendant through his wife inquired if the price of £2,000 would be accepted, they accepted it. On 10th January, 1938, a contract was entered into by the defendant in the name of his brother-in-law for purchase of the property. On 16th February, 1938, a contract was entered into between the defendant and his brother-in-law by which the defendant purported to buy the property from his brother-in-law for £4,500. On 19th January, 1938, the plaintiff returned to England from Russia and together with her son and defendant visited the house. The plaintiff's son was anxious to buy the house and the defendant said he had purchased it and his wife was unwilling to let it go. When plaintiff and her son pressed, it was finally agreed that defendant will sell the house to plaintiff for £5,000. Defendant told the plaintiff that the house had cost him £4,500 and wanted £500, partly as profits and partly as remuneration for services. On 24th February, 1938, a contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendant for the purchase of the house for £5,000 and a deposit was paid. Defendant then borrowed from his bank on the security of the contract a sum of £3,000 to pay off the original vendors, etc. Ultimately the plaintiff discovered the true facts, but without repudiating the contract for fraudulent misrepresentation, accepted the bargain and claimed damages and an account of the profits which the defendant had made as a result of the transactions.

Held, up to the sale, the defendant was the agent of the plaintiff and it is the duty of every agent to act honestly and faithfully to his principal, and if the agent conceals most material facts from his principal and by a fraud obtains an advantage to himself by purporting to sell, or by selling, property which is his own the duty which lies upon him is not ended by such contract and he remains liable to account for any secret profit which he has made as the result of his transactions between himself and the principal.

In re CAREW : CHANNER v. FRANKLYN, (1939) 1 Ch. 794.

Wills—Legacies and annuities in the nature of settled legacies—Estate insufficient—Abatement.

The testatrix, over-estimated the value of her estate which was quite inadequate to provide the legacies she had given, subject to her sister's life interest and also the capital sums necessary to provide two annuities. On a construction of the will, held that the annuities were settled legacies of a capital sum adequate to provide the annuities, of which the annuitant was to be regarded as a life tenant, and are subject to abatement in the same way as any other legacy.

Mines—Flooding of plaintiff's mines by water accumulating through artificial tunnel which has ceased to be under the control of the defendant—Liability.

Assuming that a mining lessee in the course of working his mine, artificially diverts a flow of water, whether in his own or a neighbouring mine by a work constructed solely for that purpose, with the result that the diverted water would, but for a precaution taken by the lessee, for example pumping find its way into a neighbour's mine and if the precaution is afterwards abandoned so that the water does invade the neighbour's mine, he is liable. The defendants committed no wrong towards any one in making a tunnel and bringing water through it during the period they had control of the tunnel. But if the flooding of the plaintiffs' mines takes place by water accumulating by the flow through the tunnel, after the defendants have ceased to have any control over the tunnel, if the plaintiffs have a remedy against any one it is not against the defendants.

Wills—Secret trust—Revocation of will except regarding bequest to trustees on trust and increasing that bequest—If valid trust constituted in respect of the increased amount.

A subsequent will revoking an earlier one contained this clause :—
“The sum of £5,000 bequeathed to my trustees in the will now cancelled is to be increased to £10,000 they knowing my wishes regarding this sum.

Held, if a testator is minded to make use of the machinery of a secret trust, there must be communication to the trustees, acceptance by the trustees and the execution of the will or codicil in reliance of that acceptance. As these essentials were absent in the present case the gift as to the additional sum of £5,000 failed.

MARGINSON v. BLACKBURN BOROUGH COUNCIL, (1939) 2 K.B. 426 (C.A.).

Res judicata—Third party proceeding by defendant against plaintiff in an earlier action—Subsequent suit by plaintiff in another distinctive capacity—Res judicata—How far applicable—Procedure—Recourse to shorthand notes in earlier suit not included in formal judgment—Propriety.

In an earlier action in the County Court by owners of some premises for damages due to the collision against both the plaintiff and defendant, both denied liability and each alleged that the accident was solely caused by the negligence of the other. By third party notice they claimed against one another for indemnity or in the alternative contribution. In addition the present defendant claimed against the plaintiff damages in respect of damage done to their omnibus. It was held, both were to blame for the accident. The present action was brought (1) in respect of injuries and damages which the plaintiff alleged he had received by a collision (in which his wife was killed) between the plaintiff's motor car driven by his deceased wife and the defendant's omnibus driven by their servant due to the alleged negligence of the defendants' servant; (2) as personal representative of his wife's estate for loss of expectation of life under Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934; and (3) under the Fatal Accidents Act on behalf of himself and his daughter as partial dependants of the deceased.

Held, in deciding a question of res judicata the Court is entitled to have recourse to information which is to be derived from reading a record of the proceedings in the earlier suit to find out what was actually decided in the earlier trial. The action can proceed so far as it is founded upon the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, and the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, but there is res judicata with regard to the claim for damages in the plaintiff's personal capacity.

UNION COLD STORAGE CO., LTD. v. SIMPSON, (1939) 2 K. B. 446 (C.A.).

Income-tax Act (1918), Sch. D, Cases I and II, rr. 6 (2), 6—Wear and tear of machinery held on lease—Deductions—If lessee company entitled to.

By a lease deed dated, December 29, 1921, two persons who had the voting control of the appellant company demised to the company for a term of 21 years the whole of the assets consisting of lands, freezing works, cold storage, factories, mills, etc., all over the world at a rent of £9,60,000 payable to 3 persons in Paris. The lease contains a full repairing covenant under which the lessees take the burden and undertake at the end of the lease to deliver up the whole demised premises with all additions and improvements. The com pany claimed a deduction under Schedule D, Cases I and II, r. 6 in respect of the machinery and plant and that they were entitled to allowance for wear and tear. Reversing the decision of Macnaghten, J., the Court of Appeal upheld the claim of the company to the deduction.

Workmen's Compensation Act (1925), S. 11 (3)—Compensation to disabled workmen based on agreed pre-accident average weekly earnings—Increase in average rate of wages—Review—Matters for consideration.

COPEMAN v. COLEMAN, (1939) 2 K.B. 484.

Income-tax—Finance Act (1936), S. 21 (1) (g) (b) and (c)—Disposition in favour of children by allotment of shares in company—When a settlement under S. 21 (g) of the Finance Act, 1936.

In 1935, a company was formed with a capital of £1,000 in £1 shares held by the respondent and his wife to take over the respondent's business. At an extraordinary meeting on March 18, 1937, the capital was increased to £6,000, and it was provided that 25 preference shares should be created of £200 each entitled to a 10 per cent. preferential dividend and to participate with the ordinary shares equally in the surplus. The shares were allotted in consideration of £10 each in cash. Two such shares were allotted to the respondent's two children. On March 31, 1937, a dividend of 20 per cent. was declared free of tax, i.e., each child received £40. Then a resolution was passed to call for £40 per preference share.

Held, this was not a bona fide commercial transaction and was a disposition or an arrangement in the nature of a disposition within the meaning of S. 21, sub-S. 9 though the settlements are made through the interposition of the company.

Income-tax—New partnership exercising option to treat trade of old partnership as discontinued—Loss in old trade if can be set off against profits of new trade.

A new partnership exercised the option under the Income-tax Act (1918), Sch. D, Cases I and II, r. 11 (1) to have the tax computed as if the old trade had been discontinued and a new trade set up. In a claim by the new partners to set off the loss in the last year of the old partnership against profits in the new one,

Held, the right to set off losses against profits is only in respect of the trade in which the loss was sustained and the right cannot be claimed as against the profits of the new trade.

CAMPBELL v. SHELBOURNE HOTEL, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 534.

Tort—Invitees—Liability of owner of premises for negligence causing injury to invitees.

The plaintiff booked a room in the defendant's hotel on April, 24, 1938, proposing to stay there that night, the following day and the following night. He slept in the bedroom allocated to him on Sunday night and on the morning of Monday made his way to the lavatory but he did not notice the features on the way. He was out of the hotel during the day and returned at 7 P.M. for dinner and went out again and returned at 11-20 P.M. After reaching his bedroom he had to go to the lavatory. There was no light in the passage leading to the lavatory. Plaintiff went to the other side of the passage and came by feeling, to a door, thinking it to be the door of the lavatory opened it and immediately fell into the basement below and was injured and suffered damage for which he sued the defendants. Originally his claim was based on negligence and by amendment was added alternatively a claim for breach of warranty. The defence was that there was no duty to plaintiff, there was no negligence on defendants' part and that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence himself and that his negligence was the sole cause of the accident and that plaintiff accepted the risk by going somewhere where he had no right to go and was therefore a trespasser.

Held, the plaintiff was an invitee and defendants owed the highest duty to take reasonable care that the premises were safe. Here there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed upon either on the ground of negligence or on the ground of warranty.

KAWASAKI v. BANTHAM STEAMSHIP CO., LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 544 (C.A.).

Charterparty—Liberty to cancel "if war breaks out involving Japan"—Construction.

The fact that diplomatic relations had not been severed did not compel the arbitrator to find that no war had broken out between China and Japan. The word "war" in the charterparty must be construed having regard to the general tenor and purpose of the document in what may be called a common sense way and not by obscure and uncertain technicalities of international law.

Decision of Goddard, J., affirmed.

SWAIN v. SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO., (1939) 2 K.B. 560 (C.A.).

Railway Company—Duty to maintain road on bridge and approach thereto—Liability for accident due to negligence or default—Public Authorities Protection Act (1893), S. 1—If railway company a public authority.

The defendant Railway Company obtained Parliamentary powers to make the line, which they made hoping to derive profits for shareholders. As one of the terms upon which they obtained their franchise, there was imposed upon them the duty of erecting and maintaining bridges and their approaches. The plaintiff who sustained injuries from a fall from his bicycle by reason of the fact that the wheels got into a rut in the road, on a bridge claimed damages on the alleged negligence of the defendant company to fulfil their obligation to maintain the roadway.

Held, the railway company is not a public authority and is not placed in the position of a surveyor and the suit does not fail by reason of its not having been commenced within six months of the neglect or default complained of. The principle that a road surveyor or a local board or a public corporation responsible for the repair of roads is not liable to a person injured in respect of non-feasance has no application to a company carrying on its business for profit and the defendant is liable for non-feasance also.

HOWELLS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, (1939) 2 K.B. 597.

Income-tax—Income-tax Act (1918)—All Schedules Rules, R. 21—Mortgagee acting as solicitor for mortgagor in a sale—Retention of money out of sale proceeds for interest due to him—If solicitor agent of mortgagor bound to pay the tax for the interest within the meaning of all Schedules Rules, r. 21.

All Schedules Rules, r. 21 provides: "upon payment of any interest of money.....the person by or through whom any such payment is made shall deduct thereout a sum representing the amount of the tax thereon at the rate of tax in force at the time of the payment." The appellant, a solicitor, who was also the mortgagee, acted for his mortgagor in a sale and retained out of the sale proceeds some money in respect of the interest due to him.

Held, the appellant received the purchase money as solicitor for the mortgagor and in appropriating it to his own debt against the mortgagor was the person through whom the money was paid to the mortgagee. The appellant was bound to deduct the tax thereout and to account for it.

BARROWFORD HOLDINGS LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, (1939) 2 K.B. 607.

Income-tax—Finance Act (1922), S. 21 (6)—Subsidiary of foreign company—If "subsidiary company" within S. 21 (6)—Direction as to "undistributed income" of such company.

The subsidiary of a foreign company is not a subsidiary company within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1922, S. 21 (1) as amended by the Finance Act, 1927, S. 31 (3) and a direction as to undistributed profits can be made.

MAYER AND SHERRATT v. CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE SOCIETY, LTD., (1939) 2 K.B. 627 (C.A.).

Workmen's Compensation Act (1925), S. 1 (1)—Date of disablement in a case where workman dies without obtaining a certificate of disablement—Date of death, if date of accident—Insurer—Liability to indemnify—S. 1 (1) of the Act—Effect.

A workman after nearly a year's illness died from lead poisoning (found only on post mortem examination) in the course of his employment. Compensation to the defendants was awarded by the arbitrator against the employer who claimed that the defendant Insurance Company were bound to indemnify them under a policy of insurance. The Insurance Company contended that the workman must be deemed to have contracted the disease which caused his death on the day when he died, eight months after the policy had expired and so not liable under the policy. The contention was negatived and the Insurance Company was held liable. The Court of Appeal affirming the decision, held, the injury by lead poisoning was one sustained during the currency of the policy and the insurers were liable to indemnify under the policy. The proviso to S. 1 (1) that the employer shall not be liable under the Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for at least three days has no bearing on the construction of the policy (which indemnified against all sums for which the employer shall be liable in respect of any personal injury by disease as described in the Act, sustained by the workman whilst engaged in the service of the insured).

Divorce—Husband and wife—Separation deed—Effect on petition for divorce based on desertion.

Where a deed of separation has been entered into in a bona fide spirit between the parties, the Court cannot go behind the deed to inquire into facts which brought about the real division between the spouses, and where the spouses are living apart under a deed of separation the relationship begun by consent cannot be changed into desertion by a mere refusal of one party to resume co-habitation or by breach of the covenants of the deed. Such change can be effected only by repudiation by one and acceptance as such by the other in circumstances from which the inference can be drawn that the spouse accepting the repudiation is both in a position to insist on and is in fact re-asserting conjugal rights.

GREEN v. GREEN, (1939) P. 309.

Divorce on ground of insanity—Person under care and treatment in house maintained by Mental After Care Association—Period of detention—If interrupted.

On the facts the association was acting as agents of the London County Council in looking after the patient and the absence on trial of the patient from the institution did not have the effect of interrupting the period of detention and the wife was entitled to a decree nisi for divorce.

WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, (1939) P. 315.

Divorce—Desertion—Insanity of deserting respondent—Effect on period of desertion.

In May, 1933, the respondent deserted his wife the petitioner. On June 26, 1934, respondent was certified under the Lunacy Act (1890) and put under restraint. The present proceedings were started on January 21, 1938.

Held, desertion such as will constitute a matrimonial offence must be wilful and no man who is without a mind can be said to form an intention, and thus be guilty of a wilful act.

PARKINSON v. PARKINSON, (1939) P. 346.

Divorce—Dissolution of marriage on the ground of presumption of death—Absence under deed of separation—If a bar—Burden of proof.

In a petition by husband for a decree of presumption of his wife's death and dissolution of marriage, where the party has merely disappeared for a period of 7 years or upwards the fact that the wife was absent under a deed of separation does not debar the petitioner from claiming a decree. It was for the petitioner to satisfy the Court that he had no reason to believe that his wife was living within the 7 years and on the facts the husband had produced evidence which entitled the Court to give a decree nisi.

LYNCH v. LYNCH, (1939) P. 355.

Divorce—Desertion—Existence of prior petition for nullity of marriage—Enjoyment of consortium by the spouses in the belief that petition had been dismissed—Effect on period of desertion.

Where the existence of a prior petition for nullity of marriage did not affect the husband's conduct and even if he did know of it, he disregarded it for the purpose of enjoying the society of his wife, that will not constitute a bar to the wife's suit based on desertion and even if it did constitute a bar, it was a mere technicality and the Court should not exercise the discretion in favour of a deserting spouse.

EAVES v. EAVES, (1939) P. 361.

Divorce—Desertion—Deed of separation—Abandonment of deed by resumption of co-habitation—Effect.

Where (by the abandonment of a deed of separation by resumption of co-habitation) the Court comes to the conclusion that there was an intention by both parties to come together again, there would be an end of the deed and the wife is entitled to a decree for divorce on the ground of desertion.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

The Late Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar.—It is with regret that we record the death recently of Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar who was for about fifteen years a reporter of this Journal. After taking his degree in Law in the Madras University, he was apprenticed to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Aiyar and then worked for some years as a junior under Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri. He appeared in some very important cases with Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar. He was one of the reporters of the Law Weekly at its inception and joined as a reporter of the Madras Law Journal in 1915 and he continued as one till 1930. When the reportership of the Indian Law Reports, Madras Series, came to be filled up in 1931, he was appointed to one of the reporter's places. His work as a Law Reporter was marked by great care and thoroughness and his equipment both literary and legal was shown to its best advantage in the discharge of his duties. The learned Advocate-General and the Chief Justice of Madras paid eloquent tributes to his qualities and we respectfully join them in echoing those sentiments.

Sir John Astbury.—Time passes so quickly that it is difficult for an older reader to realise that 10 years have elapsed since Sir John Astbury, who died this week, was a Chancery Judge. Yet so it is. Astbury was a Manchester man and combined the attainments of the first-rate academic lawyer with the hard fibre and shrewd good sense of his native county. It was only just over 20 years after the date of his call that he went special on the Chancery side. His attainments in the realm of patent law made him a match even for the great Fletcher Moulton. On the Bench he was not distinguished, but will always be remembered for his decision in 1926, that a strike designed to coerce the Government is not a strike at all so as to claim the protection of the Trade Disputes Act (National Sailors, etc. v. Reed, 1926, Ch. 536). This bold decision was confirmed by Parliament the next year. Away from work Astbury was good company at after-dinner talks. Though at times inclined to overbear other talkers, his quick reply and versatile knowledge made him the pivot round which the wheel of conversation turned.—L. J., 1939, p. 191.

BOOK REVIEWS.

INDIAN STATES AND RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT by K. R. R. Sastry. Published by the author, Allahabad University. Price Rs. 5—Inland, 7 sh. 6 d.—Foreign.

Mr. Sastry's book is a useful addition to the literature concerning Indian States. His statements that these are mostly medieval autocracies, whom nemesis will overtake should they persist in their folly, that they still exist owing to the might of the Paramount Power, that it is highly desirable that the fundamental civil rights of the people should be placed beyond jeopardy and that a minimum standard of civilised administration should be ensured for them, will find hearty approval. He is however on debatable ground when he says that he is not in favour of their abolition and that a federation alone can solve the Indian political problem. His conclusion that the Indian states have a sovereign status, quasi-international in character is not invulnerable. It is true that their territory is not British territory, that their subjects are not British subjects, that the laws of England do not apply to them and that the Indian Legislature can neither legislate for nor even discuss them. But is there not on the other side the fact that the Paramount Power has assumed power to create, abolish and abridge states, to control their external relations, protection and defence, to isolate them from one another, to exercise various kinds and degrees of extra-territorial jurisdiction within their states, to impose limitations on the powers of the latter regarding customs, salt, opium, currency and coinage, posts and telegraphs, employment of foreigners in service, etc., to control succession to states and take charge of minority administration, and to interfere in their internal affairs for the benefit of the states or their citizens, or of British India or of the Empire as a whole? To ascribe in the teeth of these facts a quasi-international status to the states as sovereign entities seems questionable. It is obvious that for sovereignty there must be a certain amount of independence, though it is quite consistent with sovereignty that the sovereign may in some respects be dependent upon another power and that there may be treaties or agreements limiting the powers of the sovereign even in internal affairs. It is curious that in the case of the Kelantan state, on facts almost parallel to those obtaining in the case of Indian States, the British Government should have regarded it as an independent and sovereign state—see Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government (1924) A.C. 797—whereas, in the case of Baroda they have regarded it as “not independent” but exercising various attributes of sovereignty—see Statham v. Statham, (1912) P. 92. Does not the declaration of Lord Canning in 1858, that the Crown stands “as unquestioned ruler and Paramount Power in India” suggest that it is military strength and not cession or agreement or treaty that is the source of its power and that the states exist only by sufferance of the Crown. In the light of these facts it is certainly futile to argue with "remorseless logic in a purely legalistic vein" about the status of the states.

Apropos the treaties Mr. Sastry remarks that they are not personal (97); that they are not conveyances (99) but have the character of a contract (99). He adds that the actual relations arising thereunder have to be estimated in the light of the conditions prevailing at the time of their interpretation and not at the time when they were made (104). Will that not imply that it will be competent to the Paramount Power to enlarge their powers of interference in the internal affairs of the States, by giving an extended interpretation to the words "in the interests of the Ruler or his subjects or of British India or of the Empire as a whole"?

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—Order returning an execution petition for compliance with some conditions—If a 'final' order—Later execution petition, within three years of order—If in time.

An earlier execution petition was returned for compliance with certain conditions but the conditions were not complied with. A fresh execution petition was filed within three years of the order returning the earlier petition and the earlier execution petition was also re-presented with the fresh execution petition.

Held, an order merely returning an execution petition could not be construed as a 'final' order within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act and an execution petition filed within three years of such order is not saved from bar of limitation.

Meaning of 'final order' in Art. 182, cl. (5), discussed.

A reading of S. 1 and proviso 3 to S. 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act shows that when a ryotwari holder takes water for a second crop (though the land was registered as single crop wet) from authorised sources, water cess should not be levied at all. Co-owners—Encroachment by strangers on a common lane—Co-owners all of them not parties to suit—Suit whether in the form maintainable—Injunction.

The plaintiff (appellant) filed a suit for injunction against defendants 1 to 4 alleging that they were encroaching upon a lane belonging exclusively to himself. The main defence was that the lane was a municipal lane. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff had not made out his exclusive title to the lane. The lower appellate Court in appeal found that the suit lane belonged to the plaintiff and certain other owners on the eastern side, and the defendants who were owners of plots on the western side of the lane had no right to encroach on the suit lane. Nevertheless that Court dismissed the suit because the plaintiff based the suit on his exclusive title and the other co-owners were not made parties to the suit and observed that the plaintiff could succeed only in a properly framed suit.

Held, that an injunction could be issued against the defendants.

Held, further, that a co-owner has got a right to restrain strangers from encroaching on the common land even in the absence of the other co-owners as parties to the suit and the direction of the lower Court to the plaintiff to come again with a properly framed suit would only lead to multiplicity of actions.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938)—Decree against father, manager of a joint Hindu family—Subsequent partition with sons—Liability of father under decree—Father insolvent—Dividend declared in insolvency—Execution against properties in the hands of the sons—Application by son under S. 20 to stay execution—Son, if entitled to apply—Son, if a debtor.

The receiver appointed in execution of a decree applied for execution of the decree against properties in the hands of the son of the 29th defendant in the suit. In the suit, the first Court by its preliminary decree decreed a particular share to the 29th defendant but on appeal the share was reduced. Pending the appeal, certain amounts in Court were permitted to be drawn by the 29th defendant on furnishing security. In passing the final decree the Court ordered that the excess amount drawn out by the 29th defendant should be repaid by him and created a charge therefor on the properties allotted to him. The 29th defendant in 1925 had pending the suit entered into a partition. The charge was also made on the properties in the hands of the sons. In 1926 the 29th defendant became an insolvent and on 30th November, 1937, a dividend had also been declared in the insolvency before the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act had come into force. One of the sons of the 29th defendant applied under S. 20 of the Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938, to stay execution of the decree to enable him to apply under S. 19. The District Judge dismissed the application on the grounds (i) that this is not a debt of the son but of the father and (ii) that as a dividend had been declared in the father's insolvency, the son cannot hereafter apply.

Held in revision (i) that this is a debt within the meaning of S. 3 (iii) of the Act as under the Act any liability in cash or kind, whether secured or unsecured whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil or Revenue Court is a debt and it does not say by whom it should be payable. The Act is not confined to personal liability but applies to any person who becomes liable by virtue of his possession of property.

In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must prove absence of reasonable and probable cause and also malice. Absence of reasonable and probable cause does not necessarily mean malice. Where it is found that defendant honestly believed that plaintiff was a party to a fraud on him there is no malice, even though it is found that he had no reasonable grounds to launch the prosecution.

Pending a suit in ejectment by a Hindu father, the suit property fell to the shares of his sons. Subsequently the father's suit was decreed. Pending an appeal by the defendant in the ejectment suit, one of the sons to whom the property fell under the partition decree applied under O. 22, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to be added as a party respondent.

Held, O. 22, r. 10 has no application to the case as the son's right was created pending the ejectment suit in the first Court and the application should have been made pending the suit and it ought not to be made pending an appeal in the suit.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), S. 36—Power of Provincial Government to control the action of Municipal Councils—If Courts have power to issue writ of certiorari against the Government exercising the power.

A Municipal Council decided to reduce the size of a tank opposite a temple which they considered insanitary; the trustees of the temple moved the Provincial Government to interfere under S. 36 of the Madras District Municipalities Act and direct the tank to be restored to its original size. The Government varied the order of the Municipal Council, and directed the reduction of the tank to a smaller extent. Then the Government after hearing the Municipality cancelled its previous order. Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), S. 87—Alteration of dates in promissory note—Plaintiff's minority enabling suit to be maintained even without the alteration—If makes the alteration immaterial—Plaintiff not guilty of any complicity—If S. 87 still applicable—Right of plaintiff to fall back on original consideration—Indian Contract Act, S. 65—Applicability.

The suit pronote was executed in favour of the minor plaintiff's deceased father and the next friend of the plaintiff was the mother an ignorant woman. The natural father appeared to have tampered with the pronote by altering the date of the pronote from 5th October, 1928 to 15th October, 1928 and the date of payment of interest from 2nd October, 1931 to 12th October, 1931. The plaintiff's claim was resisted on the ground that there was a material alteration under S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Held, if integrity of a contract has been broken and its identity changed either by a party to the contract or by one who is entitled to sue on it or with their connivance and possibly even when their negligence has contributed to the alteration, the instrument incorporating such a contract must be held to have been vitiated. In order to decide the material character of the alteration one will have to confine himself to the alteration and the effect it is shown to have produced on the document itself. If the legal identity of the character of the instrument have been affected or if the liability has been attempted to have been extended by the alteration it must be held to be material and this would be so irrespective of the fact whether the alteration is to the prejudice of the promisor or the executant of the instrument or not. The rule is intended to prevent persons from tampering with valuable securities under the penalty of not being able to found the claims on them if the alterations are found to be material.

But S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act refers to a deliberate alteration by a party to the instrument or by one on whom his interest had devolved and not by a stranger particularly when no conduct can be imputed to the party in whose interest the alteration has been effected or from which either his complicity laches or negligence may be inferred. (Corresponding provision of English Bills of Exchange Act and case-law reviewed.)

Even though the pronote may be declared to be void under S. 87 it is not inadmissible in evidence as would have been the case if the document were not duly stamped. Whatever the effect may have been if the alteration had been fraudulently made by the plaintiff himself, the plaintiff in this case could fall back on the original consideration as the pronote was originally valid. The Court can act on the principle embodied in S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act. The plaintiff was allowed to amend his claim and get a decree.

Defamation—Libel—Proof that words complained of were only ill-suited to the dignified position of plaintiff—Reputation of plaintiff in no way damaged—Court's view that suit ought not to have been brought—Award of one pie as damages—Absence of plaintiff from witness-box—Effect.

An untrue assertion in a pamphlet issued by a councillor criticising the administration in a municipal council ran as follows:—"A party bound to one or two individuals has taken a vow to oppose my propositions solidly". The pleading contained no innuendo and the plaintiffs did not go into the witness-box.

Though the statement is defamatory of the President and Vice-President of the Council the evidence only showed that witnesses thought those words were ill-suited to the dignified position of the plaintiff. When the leaflets were published nobody paid any attention to them and no action was taken to stop the distribution of the leaflets.

Held, in an action for libel when a plaintiff claims damages for loss of character the Court is entitled to attach the greatest importance to the absence of the plaintiff from the witness-box. As the plaintiffs' reputation has in no way been damaged, the action ought not to have been brought at all and the damages can safely be valued at one pie as indicating the Courts view that the suit ought not to have been brought at all and each party should bear his own costs.

A obtained a decree against B and C who were father and son. In execution he attached their properties and sought to bring them to sale. After the attachment B, the father put in a petition to declare himself an insolvent and an interim receiver was appointed. Thereupon A put in a petition to bring the half-share of C in the family properties, to sale. The Munsif held that he had no jurisdiction and stayed execution and directed the creditor A to have the question settled in the Insolvency Court. On appeal to the District Court, it was held that no appeal lay and that the Munsif was right in deciding that he had no jurisdiction.

Held, that the lower Courts were wrong in staying execution, that the District Munsif's Court had jurisdiction to proceed with the execution and that it should have directed that such right, title and interest as the son had in the properties should be sold, since the attachment put an end to the rights of the father over the son's interests in the properties.

There were two suits, an earlier suit for partition and a later suit on a promissory note filed by a creditor against the members of the family which was to be partitioned. In both suits there was a common issue as to the binding nature of the promissory note debt upon members of the family who were not parties to the note. The two suits were by consent tried together, the creditor being a party also to the partition suit and it was found in the trial Court that the promissory note debt was binding on all the coparceners. An appeal was filed only against the decision in the partition suit and the decree of the trial Court was reversed in so far as it declared that certain debts including that on the promissory note were binding on the family and the appellate decree was confirmed on second appeal. The creditor sought to execute his decree against all the members of the family including those who had been exonerated in the partition suit. The Courts below held that the decree could be executed in spite of the appellate decree in the connected suit. On appeal,

*Held:—*To allow the creditor whose rights have been restricted by the partition decree to which he was a party, to execute the connected decree without regard to those restrictions is to acquiesce in the perversion of justice and in spite of the absence of an appeal in the promissory note suit the creditor should be allowed to execute only to the extent decided in the appeal in the partition suit.

letter despatched from Madras—If "part of cause of action" has arisen in Madras—Leave to sue at Madras for breach of contract—If to be granted.

A contract for sale of goods (skins) F. O. R. Hyderabad was entered into by the acceptance by telegram from Hyderabad by defendant (sellers) of a counter-offer by telegram from Madras by the plaintiff (buyers) in reply to an offer by telegram by sellers despatched from Hyderabad. The plaintiffs for their convenience arranged for the forwarding of the goods via Karachi to Madras and on arrival at Madras rejected them as of inferior quality. The defendants denied that the goods were of inferior quality and refused to take them back. The plaintiff obtained leave to sue and filed a suit for damages for breach of contract on the original side of the Madras High Court. In an application by the defendant for revocation of the leave,

Held, that the posting of an offer or the despatch of a telegram of an offer from a particular place cannot be regarded as part of the cause of action. An offer is made at the place where it is received and the place of despatch of an offer by letter or telegram is not a material factor.

The rejection does undoubtedly form part of the cause of action but if the place of rejection is material (but it is not) it was not at Madras. It was at Madhavaram where the goods were sent for examination. Posting the letter of rejection at Madras did not make Madras the place of rejection. In this case notice of rejection must be taken to have been given in Hyderabad where the letter was received.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—Execution against judgment-debtor barred—If execution against his surety (who had given a bond when the judgment-debtor was arrested in prior execution) a step in aid of execution which will save limitation against principal debtor.

In a previous execution against the judgment-debtor a surety gave a bond binding himself that if judgment-debtor did not file an insolvency petition within a specified time he would produce the debtor before the Court or failing that he would render himself liable for the amount of the decree; and there was default and execution petition against the surety. Subsequently execution proceedings were taken against the judgment-debtor who pleaded that it was barred by limitation.

Held, in substance there is only one decree against the judgment-debtor. Under that decree the surety has by his bond fastened on himself a liability. Therefore an execution petition against the surety should be treated under the strict terms of Art. 182 (5) as an application to take some step in aid of execution of the decree.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Ss. 40 and 67 (2)—Rule promulgated in Coorg province embodying restrictions on sale of land in execution—If applicable to Coorg decree transferred to Court in Madras Presidency for execution.

Under S. 67 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code the Chief Commissioner of Coorg has promulgated a rule to the effect that "lands, houses and other buildings and all immovable property shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of decrees of Civil Courts in Coorg with the execution of such immovable property as shall have been mortgaged or otherwise specifically pledged as security for the debt which is the subject-matter of the decree sought to be executed".

Where a decree from Coorg was transferred to the Court of the District Munsif of Cannanore for execution, the question arose if the Coorg rule was applicable.

Held, the Local Government of Coorg had not the power nor is it likely to have intended to frame rules to restrict the execution of its decrees when transferred to a Court in the Madras Presidency. The rule embodying the restriction upon sales of land in execution of decrees of Civil Courts, applies only to sales of land within the jurisdiction of the Local Government of Coorg. Therefore a decree-holder can execute his decree in the Madras Presidency by the sale of land situated there in spite of the restrictions under the special rule upon its execution within the province of Coorg.

It is well established that the mere settlement of the terms of a proclamation when no dispute between the parties as to their rights or liabilities is decided judicially cannot be deemed to be an order under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, from which an appeal would lie. But it is equally well settled that when at the stage of settling the terms of the proclamation the parties put into issue a question affecting their relative rights and liabilities with regard to execution and this matter is heard and decided that decision, is a judicial decision and the parties will not be allowed in the Court of execution to canvass the same matter again.

When the vacant ground included in the mortgage is a part of the compound of the house property which the mortgage covers and there is a compound wall round the vacant ground and the well serving the houses included in the mortgage, the mortgage is a debt contracted on the security of house property alone. Where one of the two daughters (joint tenants) and heirs of a deceased mortgagee sued on the mortgage, objection was taken that she was not entitled to sue solely and exclusively on the mortgage bond. Pending the suit the other daughter died.

Held, the provisions contained in O. 1, r. 9 are clear enough and made it incumbent on the Court to deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. In exceptional cases Court would refrain from passing a decree in favour of a plaintiff when it finds that all the parties interested in the subject-matter of the suit have not been impleaded. But because of the death of the sister pending suit, plaintiff was the only person entitled to recover the whole amount at the time of passing the decree and a decree for the full amount ought to be passed, as the Court was justified in taking Sub-r. 2 of r. 6 is quite clear that when an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale, shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of.

A.I.R. 1932 All 551, dissented from.

The Court has no discretion in the matter of granting or refusing stay, though it has discretion in the matter of imposing terms. Refusal of stay and sale thereafter is a clear illegality and the sale must be set aside. Executing Courts have to note that O. 21, r. 64 provides that no more of the judgment-debtor's property ought to be sold than is sufficient to realise the amount due under the decree. It is also desirable to sell the property in small parcels if that will fetch a better price,

Will—Codicil—Mahomedan testator—Intimation to solicitors of terms of codicil—Death of testator before codicil was executed—Final instructions to solicitors—Effective codicil—Mahomedan Law—Mode of creating will or codicil.

The testator who was a Cutchi Memon executed a will by which after granting certain legacies he provided that the income of the properties should be devoted to the education and marriage expenses of his descendants by certain sons. Subsequently when he was ill he caused a telegram to be sent to his lawyers as follows: "Since my grandson A died I have decided to omit all schoolfees." He also wrote a letter to his solicitor stating that he had decided to cancel his allowances provided for schoolfees. The solicitors wired back and wrote asking for specific and clear instructions regarding the codicil. The testator however died without giving any further instructions.

Held, that the telegram and the letter forwarded by the testator to his solicitors were not mere instructions to submit a draft codicil for consideration and that they amounted to an effective codicil inasmuch as no particular form was necessary to the execution of a will or codicil under the Mahomedan Law.

Mortgage—Receiver appointed in a suit on a single mortgage—Amount due to the government from mortgagor in respect of Kudimaramath—Priorities.

In a suit on a simple mortgage a receiver was appointed over the mortgaged properties. An amount was due from the mortgagor to the Government in respect of Kudimaramath which had accrued due before the appointment of the receiver. In a claim for directions to the receiver to pay the amount due to the Collector, Held, in India at any rate a simple mortgage does not bind the rents and profits of the hypotheca. The appointment of a receiver in a suit on a simple mortgage does not really enlarge the scope of the mortgage. The mortgagee has no charge over the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver.

Case-law considered.

Though the Court recognises an equity over other simple creditors, the claim of the Crown is paramount. And quite apart from the fact that it is a debt due to the Crown, it is a legitimate expense which the receiver should pay as an incident of his management of the property.

Mortgage—Clause that principal and interest was "payable by 10th September, 1928"—Meaning of—Notice on 29th June, 1927, offering payment—Mortgagee declining to receive payment under misapprehension as to effect of the clause—Effect.

A clause in a mortgage deed made the principal and interest "payable by 10th September, 1928". On 29th June, 1927, the mortgagor sent a registered notice to the mortgagee in which he repeated his previous offers to discharge the debt by paying the amount left with him and repeated the offer. The mortgagee in his reply relied on the stipulation that the principal and interest due under the deed was "payable by 10th September, 1928" and declined to receive payment before the stipulated time.

Held, to the extent to which words are ambiguous they should be read so as not to be a clog on the equity of redemption. The meaning of "payable by a certain date" must be taken to be "payable on or before a certain date". The refusal to accept payment, though bona fide made under a misapprehension of the effect of the instrument, was wrongful. No formal tender is necessary. There has been a valid tender and the mortgagor is not liable to pay interest subsequent to the tender.

Case-law examined and principles as to "tender" enunciated.

An insolvent died in jail and his son moved the Court for annulment of the adjudication on the ground (1) that no application had been made for discharge within time allowed and (2) that the debts had all been satisfied. After notice to one creditor an order was made annulling the adjudication under S. 43 and directing that the property should vest with Receiver until payment of the active creditor. Three years later two other creditors applied to the Receiver for directions to pay them dividends out of the estate. The applications were rejected. The creditors then applied for the modification of the order under S. 37 so that the properties might vest in the Receiver until all the unpaid creditors had been paid under the insolvency law.

Held, when the Court has passed a particular vesting order, restricted in a specific way, it does not retain the power on some future date to pass a fresh order removing those restrictions and providing for an entirely new scheme for the distribution of the assets.

Will—Disposition in favour of widow—When absolute—Powers to give the properties to whomsoever the widow liked "at the time of her death"—Exercise of power by deed inter vivos—Validity.

A testator provided that 2/3rd of the remainder of his estate should be taken by the son to be adopted by his widow and 1/3rd to be taken by the widow. The provision in favour of the widow was as follows: "The remaining 1/3rd share shall be taken by you after the adopted boy ceases to be a minor and the same shall be enjoyed during your lifetime. Whenever necessary you shall take a sum of Rs. 2,000 for your share out of the common funds and spend the same according to your pleasure. Out of the share of the property you might get for your share a sum of Rs. 5,000 shall be utilised by the executors. Excluding these amounts the property remaining out of your share of property has been given away to you with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc., so that you might give it to whomsoever you like at the time of your death".

N. R. C.

Held, in the circumstances the testator intended to confer on his widow an absolute estate and not a mere life estate with a power of appointment. Assuming the will confers a mere life estate with a power of appointment, it is open to the widow to exercise the power of appointment by a deed inter vivos.

The general rule that would apply to cases where the plaintiff sues on the basis of his title and the defendant raises a plea of benami would not apply where the question has been gone into once by an execution Court on a petition of objections under O. 21, r. 58 and directed against the claimant. *Negotiable instruments—Letter of guarantee not stamped—
 When a negotiable instrument—Admissibility in evidence.*

A and B executed a promissory note in favour of a firm X on 28th January, 1930, agreeing to pay compound interest at Re. 1-0-6 per cent. per month. On the same day they also wrote a letter to the firm X agreeing to pay an enhanced interest at Re. 1-14-6 per cent. per month from 27th October, 1930, if the money borrowed on the security of the promissory note remained unpaid by the 26th October, 1930. In addition C also wrote to firm X an unstamped letter headed "Letter of guarantee written and given in favour of firm X by C, which after reciting the borrowing by A and B said "I shall pay the said amount of principal and interest inclusive of the chit interest wherever and whenever you demand without reference to the said A and B. This is the letter of guarantee written and given with consent". The promissory note was endorsed in favour of the plaintiff and the letter of guarantee was also assigned by a separate document to the plaintiff who sued A, B and C. As to C's liability, Held, the letter of guarantee cannot be held to have been intended by the parties or regarded by businessmen in general to operate as a promissory note. It was a letter of guarantee and could be admitted in evidence on payment of a penalty and C was liable under it.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), S. 17, cl. 2—Receipt by original mortgagee accepting a lesser amount in full satisfaction (portion of it paid immediately and a small portion to be paid shortly) and "waiving" the claim for the balance due—Want of registration—Effect on admissibility in evidence.

A mortgagee entered into an agreement with the purchaser of the mortgaged properties to the effect that he would accept a certain amount (portion of which was to be paid shortly after) in full satisfaction and "waived" the balance of the sum due "out of grace" and executed a receipt incorporating the terms of the agreement. The receipt was not registered. The portion of the amount was not paid as agreed and the mortgagee assigned the rights to a third person who assigned it over to the plaintiff. In a suit on the mortgage the purchaser of the properties relied on the receipt relinquishing the balance due under the mortgage.

Held, which a document is not a receipt of money but something more, and does not come within the ambit of exception (xi) to cl. 2 of S. 17 of the Registration Act, it would require registration to be admissible in evidence for the simple reason that it is a document which purports or operates to limit or extinguish either in present or in future a right, title or interest of the value of more than Rs. 100 to or in the mortgaged property. There is a distinction between a receipt of money and relinquishment of a claim by a creditor.

Private International Law—Foreign adjudication—Vesting of movables—Attaching creditors—Rights of—Civil Procedure Code (II of 1908), Ss. 64 and 73—Effect.

In the case of a foreign adjudication, the receiver of the foreign Court is entitled to the free assets of the bankrupt. The free assets must include assets which are not required to meet a charge or an attachment in existence at the time of the adjudication. Ss. 64 and 73 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot override this rule of private international law. As the foreign receiver is entitled to all the movable assets of the insolvent which were free at the date of the adjudication and the free assets must be deemed to be the moneys left over after the satisfaction of the claim of the creditors who had attached before the adjudication appellants are not entitled to anything by reason of their attachment, after adjudication. The adjudication prevented the attachment having any validity and they were left merely with the right to prove in the insolvency.

Hindu Law—Family business—Debts—Coparcener's liability—Nature and extent.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), S. 6 (d) (ii) and (iii)
—Act of insolvency by managing member of Hindu family business.
—Adjudication of other coparceners—When valid.

In the case of a family business those members only are personally liable for the debts of the business who are in control and management of it or who have acquiesced in the course of the business in which the particular contract was entered into, so as to warrant their being treated as parties to the contract. In the case of other members business debts are on exactly the same footing as other family debts. If they are lawfully incurred for the benefit of the family or for the necessary purposes of the family then to discharge them the family property may be sold without excluding the interest therein of the coparceners who were not parties to the contract. But they cannot be levied from the latter in any other way.

Case-law reviewed.

So where the only liability of the coparceners sought to be adjudicated insolvents arises out of the fact that the debt was contracted in the course of a family business and assuming property of the family may be sold to discharge it without excluding the coparcener's interest in that property.

Held, the relation of debtor and creditor did not exist between such coparcener and the petitioning creditor and he cannot be adjudicated insolvent. If for the debts lawfully incurred by a family manager in the ordinary course of business the other members are not personally liable much more are they exempt from the consequences of acts done by the manager which amounts to acts of insolvency.

Plaintiff claiming Rs. 992-8-0 on a mortgage bond executed by defendant sued to recover only Rs. 500 relinquishing the balance. Defendants' plea of discharge for Rs. 230 with interest was accepted by both lower courts. Still a balance of Rs. 312-9-3 was left under the suit claim made up of Rs. 64-4-0 principal with interest thereon from date of bond. Both the lower courts negatived the right of plaintiff to adjust this amount of Rs. 312-9-3 from the amount relinquished by plaintiff and dismissed the suit.

Held, in modification, on appeal, that plaintiff was entitled to so adjust, but in as much as he specifically relinquished interest as such in plaint, he is entitled to a decree for the principal of Rs. 64-4-4 only and dismissed the rest of the plaintiff's claim.

S. 152, Civil Procedure Code, does not empower a Court to rectify a decree merely because that decree is wrong or unfair or because the parties have not realised their rights and put them before the Court in such a way as to enable a correct decree to be passed. The powers given under S. 152 relate only to arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from an accidental slip or omission. It is impossible to hold long after the event (18 years after the decree) that when there is an apparent omission of an important term from a judgment proceeding on the consent of parties this term has been omitted by an accidental slip. Ordinarily the High Court will not entertain a revision petition when a remedy by way of appeal is available but in very special circumstances if there is a clear error relating to jurisdiction it may at its discretion do so.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 47—Decree for maintenance—Execution sale of charged properties—Surplus after satisfying decree—Order for disposal—If appealable under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code.

There was a decree for maintenance declaring a charge as against judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors subsequently created a mortgage upon which a suit was filed and the mortgagees purchased the property in execution of the mortgage decree. Thereafter the maintenance decree was executed by the sale of the same property and a balance was left over from the sale proceeds after satisfying the maintenance decree. The balance was claimed by an assignee from the original judgment-debtors and also by the mortgage decree-holders who had purchased the property. The latter was held entitled to the balance and the former appealed.

Held, the dispute is not one between parties arranged on opposite sides in the suit the decree of which was being executed. S. 47 therefore does not apply and no appeal lies.

Amendment—Suit for recovery of possession of property purchased at a court sale from defendant alleged to be trespasser—Defendant found to have purchased equity of redemption—Amendment converting suit into one for sale of the property—If to be allowed.

A suit was filed by plaintiff as purchaser in Court sale for recovery of property and mesne profits from defendant as trespasser. It was found that the defendant had purchased the equity of redemption in respect of the suit property. The lower appellate Court without going into the merits of the case gave leave to the plaintiff to amend the plaint in order that the suit might be converted into a suit for sale of the property in the possession of the defendant.

Held, that the order directing the amendment of the plaint to make it a suit for sale is not correct as it alters the cause of action in the suit.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), S. 117—Provision whether obligatory or directory—Test—Disregard of provisions as to sale—Effect—Absence of injury as result of irregularity—Effect.

Whether the terms of a statute are to be regarded as imperative or directory only turns upon a correct application of the scope of the Act itself and is not to be controlled by the consideration whether substantial injury has or has not resulted.

Where the selling officer whose duty it was to fix the date of the sale, settle the proclamation and cause the sale to be proclaimed, disregarded the provisions of the statute and he did not pass a single order and the orders which the selling officer should have passed were passed by the Collector who had no authority it is not a mere irregularity and the sale cannot be regarded as a sale lawfully held under the Act. There is no provision in the Estates Land Act which is similar to O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, which says that a sale shall not be set aside as the result of irregularity or fraud unless the applicant has sustained substantial injury as the result.

Where all that the plaintiffs seek is a declaration that the suit property is trust property and for the consequential injunction to prevent the trustees from treating it otherwise, the suit cannot be said to fall within S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where the plaintiffs seek to assert no personal or individual rights which they share with others and they are seeking to assert for the community as a whole rights enjoyed jointly by that community, the proper procedure is laid down in O. 1, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code. If the plaintiffs in spite of objection taken took the risk of refusing to adopt that procedure they cannot complain, if the Court rejects the suit for failure to implead all those on whose behalf the relief is sought. The fact that one plaintiff is the son of a deceased trustee gives him no special rights in the absence of evidence that the trusteeship is hereditary. The fact that some of the other plaintiffs were amongst the members of the community who established the trust will not put them in any better position than those others who may be numerous who shared in the foundation.

Within one year, plaintiff filed a regular suit in the District Munsiff's Court to set aside the order in the claim proceedings and to declare his title and give him possession. Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 144—Reversal of decree for possession of immovable property—Amounts drawn by party in possession—Remedy of appellant by way of restitution—Proper procedure.

Plaintiff sued to recover an estate as the son of the last holder of the estate. Suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge. But plaintiff's claim for mesne profits both before and after suit till the date of delivery was disallowed. Both plaintiff and defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending disposal of appeal a receiver was appointed and he took possession. The High Court allowed the defendant's appeal and dismissed the suit. Pending an appeal to Privy Council the defendant was handed over possession on furnishing security. Plaintiff's appeal to the Privy Council was successful and judgment of the Subordinate Judge was restored and defendant was ordered to pay costs of the plaintiff both in the High Court and the Privy Council.

Plaintiff executed the decree restored by the Order in Council and got possession of the estate. Then the plaintiff put in a petition for restitution and impleaded the defendant's widow and legal representatives and also the sureties who had executed the security bonds in the High Court and claimed (1) the restoration of amounts drawn as allowances by the widow, (2) restoration of amounts wrongly appropriated by the defendants, (3) return of records and accounts from the receiver to the plaintiff, and (4) that the sureties might be ordered to pay the plaintiff the sums covered by their security bonds.

The appeal came on before Burn and Stodart, JJ., and prayers 1 and 3 were not pressed. Burn, J., was of opinion that in proceedings under S. 144 no order for restitution can be made against sureties, though there is no objection to their being made parties in such proceedings.

As to restoration of amounts drawn and for mesne profits Burn, J., was of the opinion that the proper remedy lay in a suit for accounts and not in an application by way of restitution. Stodart, J., however was of opinion that the plaintiff could recover under S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, the sums which the defendant received as profits of the estate during the time she was in possession under the decree which has been reversed.

Owing to the difference of opinion on the question of applicability of S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, and the liability of defendant to make restitution the case was laid before Wadsworth, J., who held agreeing with Stodart, J., that S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, was applicable and the case is covered by the decision in I. L.R. 7 Pat. 319, and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim restitution of any profits realised by the defendant's legal representative which can be called properly consequential upon the wrong decree, unless the defendant's legal representative is entitled to resist the claim either by showing that she has a superior claim to those profits or by showing that the plaintiff's claim is barred by reason of the failure to establish his right to future profits in the trial Court.

As to the extent of the liability of the defendant's legal representatives, held, that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. The correct procedure is to award the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongly received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof. There is no bar to the plaintiff's claim by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits before the trial Court.

No relief was granted against the sureties.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), S. 125—Mortgage executed after passing of Act to pay off mortgage created before the Act—If mortgage created before Act by reason of right of subrogation.

It will be stretching the language of S. 125 far too much to hold that by reason of a right of subrogation arising out of it a mortgage should be deemed to be an encumbrance created before the passing of the Act, although in fact it was executed subsequent to the Act.

Where a tenant takes water for the second crop from the estate tank the solum of which is vested in the landholder, the tenant must pay for it. The fact that the Government water flowed into the landholder's tank did not mean that when the water got there it remained Government water. It mingled with the landlord's water and must be deemed to be his. The right of Government to levy water cess depends not upon the water belonging to the Government but upon its coming from a source belonging to the Government. Per Wadsworth, J.—Where a ryot entitled to take water for irrigation from a particular government work, stores water flowing from that work on his land in a private reservoir does not justify the imposition of a penal water rate. The charge is leviable not by reason of the detriment to others caused by taking the water but by reason of the source from which the water is taken: The impounding of the water in the private reservoir cannot be held

Hindu Law—Convert to Christianity—If can come back to Hinduism without performance of formal expiatory ceremonies.

Per Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—A Hindu having renounced Hinduism once can revert back to it. As to need for the formal expiatory ceremonies, held, emphasis is to be laid on the prevailing sentiments and usages of the community and it is its approval or disapproval which should be the governing factor. The absence of a ceremony of reconversion or any other expiatory ceremony does not render a return to Hinduism and marriage with a Hindu woman invalid and at the time of his death for purposes of succession he is governed by Hindu law.

Per Mockett, J.—There is no warrant for holding that it is necessary to have a formal renunciation of religion and proof of performance of expiatory ceremonies for the validity of a return to Hinduism.

The respondent, another decree-holder against the same judgment-debtor had attached before judgment the amount originally standing to the credit of suit B. The respondent's decree was dated 28th September, 1935, three weeks after transfer of the money to credit of suit A had been made. Respondent on 17th October, 1935, made an application for execution and for rateable distribution of the amount standing to credit of suit A.

Held, the respondent's attachment before judgment conferred no rights and as there was no application for execution or for rateable distribution in suit A before the date of the receipt of the assets (7th September, 1935), his claim to rateable distribution is unsustainable.

The Subordinate Courts should as far as possible, in passing orders on interlocutory applications and granting temporary injunctions, avoid expressions of their opinion which may lead the parties or higher Courts to apprehend that they have finally made up their minds on the main points of controversy which have to be determined in the suits and have been thus committed to a view from which they would find it difficult to extricate themselves at the time when they are disposing of them finally. The person who comes to Court and asks for a temporary injunction is not required to make out a legal title before the Court orders it to be issued but he must satisfy the Court (a) that he has a bona fide claim and that there is a serious question to try in regard to the existence of the legal right which he asserts; (b) that he has a strong prima facie case in support of the title which he sets up, or in other words, that there is a probability of his success; (c) that the balance of inconvenience caused to the party asking for an injunction will be greater if the injunction is not granted than if it is; and (d) that it is necessary for the Court to interfere and protect him from a grave or irreparable injury or serious damage before a suit is heard and finally decided.

A mortgage was executed for Rs. 7,000 on 4th November, 1914, the whole of the mortgage debt being the price payable by the mortgagors for lands purchased by them from the mortgagees and subsequent to the mortgage there was a partition among the mortgagors and after the partition the mortgage debt was split up and a subsequent mortgage for Rs. 2,500 of other ancestral properties was executed by the new mortgagor for the portion of the debt that fell to him and a decree was passed on that mortgage. When it was sought to be scaled down under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938, Held, that S. 10, sub-S. 2, (2) of Act IV of 1938 is a sufficient answer to the petition for scaling down. In view of the scheme of the Act the giving of other property as security did not affect the applicability of the clause in S. 10 as to the lien for unpaid purchase-money.

The effect of the rules is that in ascertaining the crop basis of a particular estate you work it out in accordance with the pre-existing rules under the 1933 Act and to that figure you make an addition which is arrived at by taking the appropriate figure for the locality in Schedule I to r. 4 and deducting therefrom the young clearings allowance (which has already been in the crop basis as calculated under the old rules) and also the yield from young areas which has contributed to the figure for the production of their estate (taken into consideration in arriving at the crop basis under the old rules).

In the present suit the estate which is almost entirely made up of young tea gets no addition at all, for the two deductions in rule 4 (b) (1) and (2) together exceed the amount of young clearings allowance to which the estate would be entitled with reference to the figure in Schedule I. It was contended that this rule is ultra vires in so far as it provides for deductions from the figure of young clearings allowance laid down in Schedule I.

Held, there is no reason to hold that the provision in the rule for making these deductions in arriving at the figure of additions is ultra vires. Nor is it possible to hold that it is possible to treat the schedule to r. 4 as something apart from r. 4 which can operate without regard to the provisions of the rule of which it forms an integral part.

Held, the objection is not tenable as the endorsement was found to be without consideration.

The petitioner claiming to be an agriculturist applied for the amendment of the decree against him under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938. The District Munsif dismissed the petition on 4th May, 1939. The petitioner then filed the present petition under S. 115 of Civil Procedure Code for revision of the Munsif's order. The respondent raised the objection that the petition for revision does not lie because the amended rules under the Act dated 27th October, 1939 provided an appeal against the orders under S. 19.

Held: The amended rules cannot have retrospective effect and do not govern the present case.

On the merits held, where the certificate issued under S. 27 of the Act (of assessment to house-tax) showed that the petitioner was an agriculturist for the purposes of the Act and the respondent did not insist on the assessment register being produced, and unless the certificates were incorrect the Munsif had no right to refuse the petitioner's claim that he was an agriculturist, the decision of the Munsif is clearly perverse and must be reversed as it was a material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

NOTES OF INDIAN CASES.

DEHONDO NARAYAN SHIRALKAR v. ANNAJI PANDURANG
KOKATNUR, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 66.

The question in this case related to the right of an appellant to withdraw his appeal and the learned Judges have held that he is entitled as of right to withdraw his appeal provided that the respondent has not acquired any interest thereunder. If the respondent has obtained any rights under the appeal, the learned Judges have held that the appellant can withdraw the appeal only with the permission of the Court. The rules as to withdrawal of suits in this country from the time of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 are so dissimilar to those of the old English rules as to non-suit at common law and the plaintiff's right to have his bill dismissed in equity and the rules of the Supreme Court under O. 26 of the English rules which have superseded them that no useful purpose can be served by looking for light from the English law on the point. So far as this country is concerned, O. 23, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code only applies to suits and does not deal with withdrawal of appeals and Sir John Beaumont, C.J., has observed in this case that any reference to S. 107 of the Civil Procedure Code will not improve matters as it can only enable an appellant to withdraw the suit and not the appeal. In this connection it was observed as early as *Ram Pershad Ojha v. Bhurosa Koonwar*¹, that the corresponding provisions of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1859 entitled the appellant to withdraw his appeal as of right. The Madras High Court however in an old case in

1. (1868) 9 W.R. 328.

Kareem Bee v. Beegam Bee held that there was no provision in the Code of 1859 to enable the appellant to withdraw his appeal as of right and that he could do so only with the leave of the appellate Court in all cases. The Allahabad High Court in the recent case of *Kanhaya Lal v. Partab Chand*¹ has however held that under the present Code reading the provisions of O. 23, r. 1 along with S. 107 (2), the appellant can withdraw his appeal unconditionally, his only liability being to pay the costs of the respondent. This view is opposed to what the learned Judges have laid down in the case under notice and the learned Judges have not in their judgment dealt with this Allahabad case. If this view of the interpretation of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code is correct, it is doubtful whether any leave of the appellate Court is necessary for the appellant withdrawing his appeal even though the respondent may have obtained some rights as in this case, because the terms of O. 23, r. 1 (1) are clear in requiring no leave or permission of the Court. If, on the other hand, the correct view is that there is no provision in the Code relating to this matter and it has to be dealt with under the inherent powers of the Court, there is every justification for the appellant not nullifying the rights of the respondent, if any, in the appeal and his being allowed to withdraw the appeal only with the permission of the Court. We are not sure whether the learned Judges will regard the right of the respondent under O. 41, r. 33 of the Code to relief even though he has preferred no memorandum of cross-objections to be such a substantial right which will prevent the appellant from withdrawing the appeal without the permission of the Court. If, however, the respondent has been completely successful in the first Court and can get nothing more, the appellant even according to the learned Judges in this case, can withdraw his appeal without any permission from the Court.

TUKARAM GANPATRAO SURVE v. ATMARAM VINAYAK GONDHALEKAR, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 71.

We had occasion to consider the retrospective operation of S. 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act in commenting on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mahammad

1. (1867) 3 M.H.C.R. 368; 2 Mad. Jur. 332.

2. (1931) A.L.J. 232.

Hosain v. Jamini Nath Bhattacharjya at p. 41 of the Notes of Indian Cases in (1938) 2 M.L.J. The decisions which had appeared till then will be found collected in that note. This decision which has been given since then takes the same view as the one taken in Mahammad Hosain v. Jamini Nath Bhattacharjya and holds that the section is retrospective in its operation. This case cannot put an end to the conflict on the question. The authority of this decision is to some extent weaker because the two decisions on which the learned Judges have relied, namely, the decisions in Mahammad Hosain v. Jamini Nath Bhattacharjya and *Wakefield v. Kumar Rani Sayeeda Khatoon*² have since been dissented from in *Jagdamba Prasad Lalla v. Anadi Nath Roy*³ which we have noticed in the note referred to above. Further, even the Calcutta High Court in a later case in *Mohendra Narayan Roy Chowdhury v. Profulla Kumar Guha*⁴ has held that the weight of authority is against retrospective effect being given to the section. Reference may also be made in this connection to the latest case of the Patna High Court in *Baldeo Singh v. Sheikh Muhammad Akhtar*⁵. The learned Judges in the case under notice have observed that there is no difference between the retrospective operation of S. 53-A and S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended and referred to *Tota Ram v. Ram Lal*⁶ in support of the retrospective operation of the latter section. With reference to S. 92, we would refer to the latest case in *Srinivasulu Naidu v. Damodaraswami Naidu*⁷, where all the relevant points are considered and the decisions referred to and the conclusion arrived at that S. 92 is not retrospective in its effect. Under these circumstances, nothing but a decision of the Privy Council will settle the question finally, unless the legislature sets the conflict at rest.

tered firms in respect of causes of action existing prior to the coming into force of the Indian Partnership Act has been the subject of conflicting decisions. It was held in *Surendra Nath De v. Manohar De*¹ that such suits were not saved by the provisions of S. 74 (b) of the Act which were held to be confined to proceedings pending at the date when the Act came into force. This view was held to be confirmed by the terms of S. 1 (3) of the Act which gave one year's time for the provisions of S. 69 coming into force, thus enabling existing firms to register themselves or bring suits in the meanwhile. This view was followed by the Madras, Patna and Lahore High Courts in *Parinchu v. Ravi Varma*², *Sundararaja Aiyangar v. Mannar-swami (Firm)*³, *Firm of Syed Ibrahim Sahib v. Gurulinga Aiyar*⁴, *Shasad Khan v. Darbar Baber Kuchhis, (Firm)*⁵, *Krishan Lal-Ram Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan*⁶ and by Bennet, J., in *Danmal Parshotamdas v. Baburam Chhotelal*⁷. This view proceeded on a narrow view of S. 74 (b) that it referred only to pending proceedings and not subsequent proceedings on pre-existing causes of actions as well. That this view is incorrect was pointed out by Sir Shah Sulaiman, C. J., in *Danmal Parshotamdas v. Baburam Chhotelal*⁸ and has since been followed in *Girdharilal Son & Co. v. Kappini Gowder*⁹, *Soonoiram v. Junjilal*¹⁰ and the case now under notice. After this decision was reported in *Revappa v. Babu Sidappa*¹¹, it has been followed by the Madras High Court in L. P. A. No. 74 of 1937 (16th March, 1939), (1939) 1 M.L.J. 35 (Notes of Recent Cases) which has not yet been fully reported. We venture respectfully to submit that the fuller examination of the terms of S. 74 (b) in these decisions will have the effect of changing the course of decisions in the Calcutta, Lahore and Patna High Courts.

MURADAN SARDAR v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 425.

The main point decided in this case is whether the period of three months fixed in S. 9, sub-S. (1), cl. (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act can be extended with reference to S. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act by virtue of the provisions of S. 78 of the former Act. The learned judges have held that the period prescribed in S. 9, sub-S. (1), cl. (c) is not a period of limitation and so cannot be extended thus taking the same view as the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in *Chenchuramana v. Arunachalam*¹.

In coming to this conclusion, one of the learned judges has relied on the marginal note to S. 9 as showing the drift of the section and quoted the authority of Collins, M.R., in *Bushell v. Hammonds*². Within two months after the case in Bushell v. Hammonds, the question of the value of the marginal notes in Indian enactments came up before the Privy Council in *Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh*³ and Lord Macnaghten delivering the opinion of the Privy Council said that it was well settled that marginal notes to the sections of an act of Parliament could not be referred to for the purpose of construing the Act and that the contrary opinion originated in a mistake which was exploded long ago. His Lordship also said that there was no reason for giving the marginal notes in an Indian Statute any greater authority than the marginal notes in an English Act of Parliament. This decision of the Privy Council is binding on the Indian Courts and has been since generally followed. (See *In re Syamo Maha Patro*⁴ and *Sir Dhunjabhoy Bomanji v. Ganpa Khandu Goli*⁵.) The Allahabad High Court however in a Full Bench decision in *Ram Saran Das v. Bhagwat Prasad*⁶, canvassed this proposition and observed that marginal notes were the subjects of discussion and resolution in the legislative councils and were therefore useful guides in construing the sections. It must however be noticed that even King, J., who delivered the leading judgment in this case observed at page 425 that when finally the bill was taken into consideration in the Council, the marginal notes were not ordinarily read out and formally passed by the Council along with the clauses. This seems to indicate that they are not parts of the enactments but are considered in the discussions of the legislature. It is well settled that discussions in the legislature alone are not to be referred to in construing the enactment. This was laid down by the Privy Council in *The Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick*¹ and *Krishna Aiyangar v. Nallaperumal Pillai*². Rangnekar, J., followed the view regarding the value of the marginal notes of the Allahabad Full Bench in *Emperor v. Sayad Esmail*³, but subsequently retracted from the same in *Dharwar Urban Bank, Ltd. v. Krishnarao Anantrao Konur*⁴ and followed the view of the Privy Council in *Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh*⁵ that marginal notes should not be referred to in construing Indian enactments.

Even in England the weight of authority is against referring to the marginal notes in construing Acts of Parliament, though the reason that is given is that they are not considered by the Parliament and are not part of the Act. It is difficult to see the force of the observation of Collins, M.R., in *Bushell v. Hammonds*⁶, when he says that marginal notes do not form a part of the Act, but still they can be used to show the drift of the Act. In fact, in England the question has been discussed and it has been held in later cases that marginal notes cannot be referred to for construing Acts of Parliament in *Thomas v. Jones*⁷, *Wilkes v. Goodwin*⁸ and *Nixon v. Attorney-General*⁹ following *Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Railway Company*¹⁰.

MADHAB CHANDRA GHOSH v. NIRODE CHANDRA GHOSH,

In this case, a false report was made to the police which was followed by two other reports of a similar nature as a result of which the police started investigation and launched prosecutions which failed. The persons who made the reports to the police deposed in support of their reports in the prosecution. The accused who was acquitted brought a suit for damages based upon the statements made to the police and the depositions in the judicial proceedings. The learned judges have held that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed, as the suit was one for defamation and the defendants were absolutely privileged.

On the question of absolute privilege, this decision is reminiscent of the old controversy whether in a suit for damages for defamation in this country the defence of absolute privilege is available to parties to proceedings as distinguished from the witnesses. It was held in one line of cases that the privilege was only of a qualified nature and not absolute. Reference may be made in this connection to the decisions in *Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha*¹, *H. P. Sandyal v. Bhaba Sundari Debi*², *Raghavendra v. Kashinathbhat*³ and the view of Beachcroft, J., in *C. H. Crowdy v. L. O. Reilly*⁴. The weight of authority, however has been the other way and it has been held that parties no less than witnesses are entitled to absolute privilege. (See *Pachaiperumal Chettiar v. Dasi Thangam*⁵, *Chunni Lal v. Narsingh Das*⁶, *Satish Chandra Chakravarti v. Ram Doyal De*⁷ and *Ram Kirat Kamkar v. Biseswar Nath*⁸.) The learned judges in the case under notice have followed the course of authority in the latter cases and held that parties to proceedings also enjoy absolute privilege and not merely a qualified privilege. The Madras High Court at one time went to the length of saying that the rule as to absolute privilege was a defence not only to civil proceedings but also to criminal prosecutions for defamation in *In re P. Venkata Reddy*⁹. The fallacy underlying this view was however brought out in *Satish Chandra Chakravarti v. Ram Doyal De*¹ after an exhaustive review of the decisions and the principles underlying the same by Mookerjee, A. C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Special Bench in that case. The decision of the Madras High Court in *In re P. Venkata Reddy*² has since been overruled in *Thiruvengada Mudali (Accused) v. Thirupurasundari Ammal (Complainant)*³ so far as criminal proceedings are concerned.

There is however one observation of one of the learned judges in the case under review where the learned judge observes as an objection to treating the present suit as one for damages for malicious prosecution, that the prosecutor was a Sub-Inspector of Police and the present defendants were not the prosecutors. This observation of the learned judge ought not to be understood as meaning that in no case of police prosecutions an action for malicious prosecution would lie against a private individual. It is not a principle of universal application that if the police act upon an information given by a private individual, that individual does not become the prosecutor. It is a question of fact in each case as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh. On the other hand, as observed by their Lordships in Balbhaddar Singh v. Badri Sahu, the giving of information to the authorities by an individual which naturally leads to the starting of a prosecution will amount to prosecution by the person who gave the information and will ground an action in tort for malicious prosecution against him. JOHN MINAS APCAR v. LOUIS CAIRD MALCHUS, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 389.

In cases of innocent as well as fraudulent misrepresentation, the mere existence of the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence by the representee is not a defence in English law to any action based on the misrepresentation whether for damages or for the rescission of the contract. The only defences available are actual knowledge of the truth,—not merely constructive or imputed knowledge, as through an agent—and an agreement by the representee to waive enquiry as to the truth of the representation. It is settled in England that apart from a definite agreement to waive enquiry as to the truth of the representations, the mere existence of means of discovering the truth is not a ground which would disentitle the representee from rescinding the contract. The reason for the English rule has been stated to be that no man can complain that another has confided in a misrepresentation made, even if innocently, much less if fraudulently, for the purpose of inspiring that very confidence or plead as an excuse that he whom he has misled was wanting in sagacity or diligence in not testing the statement by enquiry. The English law and the cases on the subject will be found mentioned in Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition, Volume 23 at pages 84 to 88 and at page 108 of the same volume. This being the English law on the point, the Indian law has effected a complete departure from it by enacting the exception to S. 19 of the Indian Contract Act to the effect that the existence of the means of finding out the truth is a defence to an action for avoiding a contract on the ground of silence which amounts to fraud within the meaning of S. 17 and on the ground of misrepresentation. This is what has been pointed out by Sir Frederick Pollock and Sir Dinsha Mulla in their commentaries on the Indian Contract Act at pages 128 and 129 of their sixth edition. Though in the opening sentence, they say that there is a departure from the English law, they are not so positive as they proceed in commenting on the exception. It is difficult to see any ambiguity in the language of the exception to S. 19 to warrant the view of the learned judges in *Niaz Ahmad Khan v. Parshotam Chandra*¹, that the English law has been kept up in this country. To this extent, the observations of Lord Williams,

1. (1930) I.L.R. 53 All. 374.

J., in the case under notice about the statement in Nias Ahmad Khan v. Parshotam Chandrai seem, with all respect, to be well founded.

On the main point in the case whether the words "fraudulent within the meaning of S. 17" qualify not merely "silence" but also "misrepresentation", the learned judges follow the reasoning and the conclusion of the decision in Nias Ahmad Khan v. Parshotam Chandrai to the effect that they only qualify "silence" and not "misrepresentation". It may be observed that this view was expressed as early as Morgan v. The Government of Hyderabad, though the point was not discussed so fully by the learned judges in that case.

SHIVAPPA BASAPPA KATTI AND MAHADEVAPPA BASAPPA KATTI v. RAO SAHEB VIRAPPA ANDANEPPA MANVI, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 271.

The interpretation of the expression "assignment by operation of law" in O. 21, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to execution of decrees has led to a conflict of opinion by reason of the practical difficulties in its working. As early as 1876, in Abedoonisa Khatoon v. Ameeroonissa Khatoon, it was held by the Privy Council when a decree was obtained by a widow as representing the estate of the deceased husband, a posthumous son who claimed an interest in the decree could not come in under S. 208 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 corresponding to O. 21, r. 16 of the present Code. Their Lordships held that no incident had occurred on which the law could operate to transfer any estate from his mother to him. In the words of their Lordships, there was no death, no devolution or succession from the mother to the posthumous son of any interest in the decree. This decision of the Privy Council has led to a restrictive interpretation of the expression "assignment by operation of law" in O. 21, r. 16 as comprising only cases of strict assignment from the decree-holder, such as by death, insolvency or an execution sale of his interest, see Mahadeo Baburao.

*Halbe v. Anandrao Shankarrao Deshmukhi*¹, *Sankaranarayana Menon v. Vasu Menon*² and the case under notice. On the other hand, a more extended meaning has been given to the expression, as including cases where it was declared that the decree really belonged to another, though it did not stand in his name and therefore it was held that he was entitled to execute the decree in *Ramaswami v. Anda Pillai*³ and *Sreepada Brahmayya Pantulu v. Parasuramayya*⁴. Where a decree was obtained in the name of an executor and the probate was subsequently revoked, the heir of the deceased was held to come under the terms of O. 21, r. 16 in *Umasoondury Dass v. Brojonath Bhuttacharjee*⁵. It was also held that where a trustee obtained a decree the beneficiary could come in under that provision. (See *Gobind Singh v. Gopal Saran Singh*⁶.) Reference may also be made in this connection to *Manorath Das v. Ambika Kanta Bose*⁷, *Purmananddas Jiwandas v. Vallabdas Wallji*⁸ and *Khanderao Rayajirao v. Ganesh Shastri*⁹. These decisions are based on the obvious practical difficulty to the real owner realising the money, if the person in whose name the decree stands should deprive him of the fruits of the decree by taking them himself or colluding with the judgment-debtor. These are not considerations which should be lightly discarded in doing justice. It has sometimes been said that "the holder of a decree" within the meaning of O. 21, r. 10 is wider than the term "decree-holder" as defined in S. 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code and that a person for whose benefit also a decree has been obtained can execute the decree under O. 21, r. 10, though the decree may not stand in his name, even without resorting to O. 21, r. 16 (See *Akhori Ramsewak Prasad v. Saran Singh*¹⁰.) But this view has not been accepted in (1939) 2 M.L.J. (Notes of Recent Cases) 16. It is however necessary to protect the interests of the real owners from any misconduct on the part of the nominal decree-holders. It is thus a matter for the High Courts in the exercise of their rule-making power to see whether O. 21, r. 16 may not be suitably altered to meet the needs of the real persons entitled to the benefits under the decree. SHAMARAO G. DHAIRYAWAN v. RAGHUNANDAN NANTU KOTHARE, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 228.

The question in this case relates to the proper interpretation of S. 1 (2) of the Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act II of 1929, whether the Act applies to cases of inheritance of Hindu females in respect of their stridhanam properties. It is well known that succession to stridhanam properties devolves in default of certain specified heirs on the heirs of the father of the deceased woman or on the heirs of her husband. S. 1 (2) of the Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act enacts that it applies in respect only of the property of males. The question therefore arises whether it applies in cases of the stridhanam properties of females where the succession devolves on the heirs of the father or husband, whether they have to be fixed with reference to the provisions of the Act or without reference to the same as the Act does not apply to succession to females. The learned Judge has held that in finding out the father's or husband's heirs for this purpose the order has to be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Act and that therefore the father's sister's son would take the stridhanam properties in preference to the father's distant sapindas. The reasoning of the learned Judge is that in such cases we have to find who the heirs of the father are and they have been fixed by the Act and that it is immaterial that the question is considered with reference to the succession to stridhanam properties. The same view has been taken by the Lahore High Court in *Mt. Charjo v. Dina Nath*¹ and the learned Judge in the present case has come to the same conclusion by his independent reasoning and it does not appear that the Lahore case was referred to before him. Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar in his edition of Mayne's Hindu Law (Tenth Edition) observes in the footnote at page 84 that *Mt. Charjo v. Dina Nath*¹ overlooks the provisions of S. 1 (2) of the Act; but this hardly seems to be correct, as Tek Chand, J., refers specifically to the sub-section and construes it in the way that he does. The case under notice is another direct decision against the view of Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar.

It is needless to add that in finding out the heirs of the father for this purpose it is immaterial that he died before the Act came into force, provided that the last owner died after the GUNDA SUBBAYYA v. THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 451: I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 404 (F.B.).

Though Tek Chand, J., hoped as early as 1930 in Muhammad Hayat-Haji Muhammad Sardar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab,⁷ that, considering the controversy in Courts, the legislature will take the earliest opportunity of redrafting and rearranging the clauses in S. 23 of the Income-tax Act, and the legislature also later amended and improved the Act in several important subjects, yet practically no change has been made in S. 23, cls. (3) and (4) regarding the scope of the two clauses. The exact scope of cl. (3) and cl. (4) of S. 23 with regard to the right of the Income-tax Officer to assess a recalcitrant assessee to the best of his judgment has been the subject of a wide conflict of decisions. The Division Bench in *Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax*⁸ was divided in opinion with the result the question was referred to Sulaiman, C. J., who agreed with Niamatullah, J. The view taken in the case under notice is practically that of the other Judge Bapjai, J., in *Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax*⁸.

Under the English Act in S. 121 both the cases covered by cl. (3) and cl. (4) are treated alike but for some reason the Indian Act has made a distinction between the two cases. A case under cl. (3) is appealable, while one under cl. (4) is not appealable. Cl. (4) empowers the officer to assess "to the best of his judgment" but cl. (3) says that he "shall assess the total income of the assessee" after hearing the evidence produced by the assessee and such other evidence as the Income-tax Officer may require on specified points. It is to be noted that the order under cl. (3) is to be in writing. The case under notice has tried to give due weight to these considerations and come to a workable solution by holding that where the assessee fails to produce evidence on which the officer can make a proper assessment of his income, the Income-tax Officer must himself take steps to procure material for the purpose if it is not already in his possession and he must consider such material and make an assessment to the best of his judgment on such material. But the benefit of this view is practically taken away by also holding that though the officer should disclose to the assessee the material which he has gathered behind the back of the assessee, he need not disclose the source of his information. It has been repeatedly held that the evidence on which the officer acts need not be evidence satisfying the technical rules of the Evidence Act but if the proceedings from the stage when the officer issues notice under S. 23 (2) calling upon the assessee to produce evidence in support of the return are treated to be judicial as held by Sulaiman, C. J., in *Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax*¹ the logical result of the view would seem to be that the evidence should be taken in the presence of the assessee or within his knowledge (see also the observations of the learned Chief Justice at the top of page 409 of 1939 I. L. R. (Mad.)). But the distinction drawn in the next observation at page 409, which is later incorporated into the judgment, between disclosure of the nature of the information and the disclosure of the source of such information seems, with all respect, to be more a distinction drawn from the practical difficulty to which the Income-tax Officer will be put to in gathering information.

The difference in the wording of cls. (3) and (4) and the difference in the effects of the orders under the respective clauses (by way of appealability or otherwise), coupled with the fact that though the officer is under cl. (3) acting judicially, yet he is not bound by the technical rules of evidence, has been responsible for the sharp difference of opinion between decisions like *Ganga Ram Balmokand v. Commissioner of Income-tax*² on the one hand and *Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax*¹ on the other. In cases falling under cl. (4) it has been held in *S. P. K. A. A. M. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax*³ and P. K. N. P. R. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, that the officer must make the assessment according to rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion, according to law and not humour and that it should not be arbitrary, vague or fanciful but legal and regular. It has also been held in: *In re Binraj Hukumchand*¹ and *Muhammad Sardar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab*², that the assessment can only be on the materials produced before the officer and not upon any figure of profits not warranted by evidence which they have before them. *Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax*³, draws attention to the fact that S. 23 (3) uses the word 'evidence'. *Ganga Ram Balmokand v. Commissioner of Income-tax*⁴, which takes the contrary view distinguishes these cases on the ground that they do not take account of the proviso to S. 13. But as rightly pointed out by the learned Chief Justice at page 414 in the case under notice S. 13 does not add to or take away anything from S. 23 (3) and has no bearing on the question under review. The decision in *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraja of Dharbanga*⁵ has only added to the difficulty.

In these two decisions the question raised was whether in the absence of an application to set aside the sale, the deposit of the sums required by O. 21, r. 89 alone is enough to set aside the sale or an application for the purpose is absolutely essential. In the Patna case there was a proper deposit in time but a formal application to set aside the sale was not filed till 45 days after the sale, though the fact of the deposit was expressly brought to the notice of the presiding Judge on the 32nd day when the chalan showing the deposit was put up before him. The Court held that the sale could not be set aside for want of an application. In the Allahabad case the judgment-debtor "came to the Court with a form of tender for deposit of the sale price and 5 per cent. as required by O. 21, r. 89" in time but the "form of tender did not use the actual words that the sale should be set aside" and there was no other application to set aside the sale. Yet the Court held that "it is clearly the intention of a person presenting this form to a Court for signature that the deposit is being made for that purpose", that is, for the purpose of having the sale set aside. This reasoning sounds like that of Ameer Ali, J., in Abdul Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitteri, where the learned Judge says that "the fact of his depositing the amount is a sufficient indication of his intention to seek the relief which the law provides. He brings in the money with what object? Surely for no other reason but to have the sale of his holding set aside". Abdul Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitteri, was a case under S. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and cl. 2 of that section also relied on by Ameer Ali, J., speaks only of the deposit and not of an application but that portion of the judgment may not apply to a case under the Civil Procedure Code as O. 21, r. 92 (2) speaks also of an application under r. 89. The view taken in *Mathiji v. Kondaji*¹ that the essential on which the action of the Court is to depend is the deposit within the 30 days period and not the fact of application within that period has not generally found favour with the Courts and it has also expressly been dissented from (see *Pechiayee v. Vallamuthi Velan*², *Venkata Narasimma v. Lakshmi Narasimham*³, Mahomed Akbar Zaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Pandey, *Venkatasubba Rao v. Narayana Rao*⁴, Nasiruddin Haider v. Hakim Muhammad Tahiri and *Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh*⁵). Some cases have therefrom gone to the length of holding that the lodgment schedule cannot be treated as an application (*Venkatasubba Rao v. Narayana Rao*⁶, *Chakrapani Padhi v. Krushno Naiko*⁷ and *Sarvi Begum v. Haider Shah*⁸). But it is uniformly agreed that no special form of application is necessary, and that it may even be oral (*Murugappa Asari v. Shanmuga Mudaliar*⁹, *Ramraj Singh v. Rabi Prasad*¹⁰ and *Maniappa Annaji v. Harihara Aiyar*¹¹) and it would therefore seem that it is a mere formality to insist on an application. In *Parat Veetil Seethi v. Ambalath Veetil Kolathur Ahmad*¹², even a formal prayer was not insisted on and when the petition was filed, the Court allowed the addition of the formal prayer. That is responsible for the decisions in *Ramraj Singh v. Rabi Prasad*¹; *Vannisami Thevar v. Periyasami Thevar*², where an oral application was presumed from the affidavit accompanying the deposit; *Abdul Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitter*³ and *Maniappa Annavi v. Harihara Aiyar*⁴; see also Banarsi Das v. Ram Chandras, where an application for permission to deposit was treated as an application to set aside sale. It cannot be denied that this is an indulgence to the debtor and a strict compliance with the requirements of the section is necessary. It has accordingly been held that even a day's delay in depositing cannot be extended. *Mahomed Cassim v. A. J. David*⁵, *Shashi Bhushan Banerjee v. Charushila Deb*⁶, Mahommad Din v. Sharampets and Rameshwar Misser v. Sureshwar Misser. The Patna decision under review relies on *Baoji v. Bansilal Narain*¹⁰ but in that case it is not clear if the judges relied for the decision on the absence of the application. There is no reference in the judgment to *Mathiji v. Kondaji*¹¹. There were several other considerations referred to in the judgment. A prior application for the purpose had been dismissed and not appealed against and the application before the Court was more than 3 years old. The other circumstance referred to in *Baoji v. Bansilal Narain*¹⁰ that the sale was confirmed may not matter, because if no application be necessary, then the confirmation after deposit may be treated as nullity. See *Murugappa Asari v. Shanmuga Mudaliar*¹², a case where an oral application had been made but the Court in ignorance of it had confirmed the sale. The Patna case evidently does not treat the chalan showing the deposit as an application, for otherwise the Court might have relied on that to give relief to the debtor. Though the chalan was put before the learned Munsiff on the 32nd day, the chalan must have been filed within the 30 days as it would have been filed with the deposit which was made in time and the delay of the Court to deal with the matter ought not to prejudice the party. T. L. WILSON v. HARI GANESH JOSHI, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 307.

This decision is one of more than ordinary interest to lawyers as it relates to the question of the legality of contingent fees being settled in the event of the success of a litigation. A firm of solicitors in England agreed with a poor client in India that they would do her work in a case before the Privy Council for a smaller remuneration having regard to her poverty and that if she should succeed before the Privy Council she should pay the ordinary higher remuneration for his services. The learned Judges upheld the legality of the agreement and the solicitor was awarded the higher remuneration as the client succeeded before the Privy Council.

The question was decided with reference to S. 63 of the English Solicitors Act of 1932, 22 & 23 George V, Chapter 37, which provided that "Nothing in the four last preceding sections of this Act shall give validity to:—(ii) Any agreement by which a solicitor retained or employed to prosecute any action, suit or other contentious proceeding stipulates for payment only in the event of success in that action, suit or proceeding." Those preceding sections relate to the agreement for remuneration between solicitors and clients. The provision referred to above relates only to cases where the solicitor agrees to payment in the event of success; and the case under consideration was not one of that sort. The learned judges go on to observe that the provision is only aimed at champertous agreements and there is no rule of common law rendering the agreement in the case illegal.

The application of the rule to the other branches of the legal profession in this country seems to be by no means clear. In America where the conditions of the bar seem to be more analogous to those in this country, where with very few exceptions all members of the bar can both plead and act in a cause, the system of a contingent fee based on the success in the cause is not regarded as illegal or even unprofessional. See the American authorities cited in Ganga Ram v. Devi Dast. In England, on the other hand the system of contingent fees has been looked on with disfavour both for the barristers and the solicitors. See *Earle v. Hopwood*², a case of a solicitor who agreed to take his remuneration by a certain percentage of the successful issue in the cause and *Morris v. Hunt*¹ and *Penrice v. Parker*². These decisions have been rested on the illegality of the agreements based on the rules against maintenance and champerty in England. In India, the English rules against maintenance and champerty as such have no force and it has been held an agreement cannot be held to be void merely for those reasons. (*Chedambara Chetty v. Renga Krishna Muthuvira Puchaiya Naicker*³, *Ram Coommar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee*⁴, Subhadrayamma v. Poosapati Venkatapatis and *Bhagawat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu*⁵.)

The agreements may be bad for reasons such as undue influence, coercion or fraud which are quite different considerations. It may also be having regard to the fiduciary relation between the legal adviser and his client, the burden may be on the former to make out that a prima facie unconscionable agreement was not brought about by undue influence, cf. S. 16 of the Indian Contract Act. Some Indian cases have gone further and held that such agreements are illegal as being opposed to public policy. Some of the judges who constituted the bench in *Ganga Ram v. Devi Das*⁶, took that view, while the other Judges in the same case held the contrary. Reference may be made to the following cases where no uniform rule has been laid down, in this respect. Achamparambath Cheria Kunhammu v. William Sydenham Gantzs, *Ramchandra Chintaman v. Kalu Raju*⁷, *Shivram Hari v. Arjun*⁸, *Parshram Vaman v. Hiranman Fatu*⁹, *In re Bhandara*¹⁰, *Radha Kishen v. Bakhtawur Lall*¹¹ and *In the matter of Moung Htoon Oung*¹². We are not sure whether the views of some of the judges in the above cases have not been tinged by the English rules against champerty and maintenance. The consideration that a legal practitioner may resort to improper practices to win the case to earn the higher fee in the event of success may apply with considerable force even for the original fee itself, which is not always paid in advance.

It is however one thing to say that such agreements are illegal and another to say that it is unprofessional for a lawyer to enter into such agreements. Recently the Madras High Court has held in *In the matter of Ramanujachariar*¹, that an agreement between an advocate and his client to take a certain percentage of the proceeds in a suit as a remuneration only in the event of success amounts to professional misconduct. The decision under review may, we venture to think, be taken to lend countenance to the view if a legal practitioner agrees to take a smaller fee having regard to the poverty of the client and that in the event of success to take the full regulation fee, it is neither illegal nor unprofessional.

DEVA DUTTA SAROGI & SON v. P. C. MITTER & SON,

This decision lays down what has generally been assumed in all the prior decisions that the word "assets" used in S. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be understood in the wider sense as including every kind of property but that it only means monies. This is made clear by the succeeding words in the section referring to its realisation and distribution among the money decree-holders. In *Ramanathan Chettiar v. Subramania Sastri*², "assets" in the corresponding section of the old Code of 1882 has been held to mean the proceeds of the sale of the properties sold in execution which can only be in money. A similar meaning was given to it by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in *Manilal Umedram v. Nanabhai Maneklal*³, referred to by the learned Judge in this case. The prior cases on the point were referred to and reviewed in *Umar Sharif v. Rodba*⁴. Consequently the learned Judge held in the case under notice that where the properties were only taken possession by a receiver appointed in execution and they were not sold and their proceeds were not received by him, there were no "assets realised in the course of execution or otherwise", within the meaning of S. 53 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act which uses words similar to S. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code in this respect. There can be no doubt that the same would be the view even under S. 51 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 where similar expressions are used.

ANWAR ALI BEPARI v. JAMINI LAL RAY CHAUDHURI,

In this case, the learned judge has held that a notice to quit is invalid because it was not served on the heirs of one of the joint lessees but was only served on the surviving lessee. The argument was advanced that on the death of one of the lessees his interest was not heritable and that the surviving tenant was the only person entitled to the leasehold and as the notice was served on him it was valid. This argument was overruled and the learned judge held that a leasehold interest was heritable. Even taking that the heirs of the deceased lessee were jointly entitled with the surviving tenant to the leasehold, the question will still remain whether the notice to quit should be served on all of them.

In England, it was held by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in the early case of *Macartney v. Crick*¹, that where a property was held by lessees jointly, service of notice to quit on one of them alone was a sufficient notice to quit. This decision has been referred to without disapproval or dissent in the leading English treatises on Landlord and Tenant. See Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 20th Edition, page 428. Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 5th Edition, page 605. In another case, it was held that service on one of the joint lessees was prima facie proof of the service on all of them until it was disproved. (See *Doe v. Watkins*².) In India, the requisites of a valid notice to quit have been enacted in S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and the question is whether it lays down a different rule on this point. It has been laid down by the Privy Council in *Harihar Banerji v. Ramshashi Roy*³, following the English cases referred to above, that the service of a notice to quit on one of the joint tenants is prima facie evidence that it has reached the others. This rule has no application where the rights of the other co-tenants have been ignored as in this case under notice. (See also *Bejoy Chand Mahatab v. Kali Prasanna Seal*⁴). If, on the other hand, the rights of the other joint lessees are not ignored, the notice served on one of the joint tenants will be prima facie proof of service on the other joint tenants as well. (See *Bodordoja v. Ajiuddin Sarkar*⁵, Rajoni Bibi v. Hafison-

If, however, it is proved that the notice did not reach the other joint lessees, the notice, it would seem, will be invalid both under the English and the Indian Law.

KRISHNADAS PADMANABHERAO CHANDAVARKAR v. VITHOBA ANNAPPA SHETTI, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 340 (F.B.).

This decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court which lays down that a judgment against an infant cannot be set aside by reason of the gross negligence of his next friend or guardian ad litem is at variance with the uniform current of later decisions on this point in all the High Courts including the Bombay High Court which have been referred to in the arguments and the judgment in this case. The learned Chief Justice gave expression to this view in a prior decision by him as a single judge in Auraj Joharmal Marwadi v. Dalpat Supadus, and the other learned judges who were inclined to think that the question required fuller investigation in their order of reference, finally agreed with him though with some hesitation.

In coming to this conclusion the learned Chief Justice has examined the English Law on this point and quoted the statements in the leading text books which are contrary to his view but held they are not correct. The passages in Simpson on Infants, 4th Edition, page 424, Seton on Judgments and Decrees 7th Edition page 939 and Halsbury's Laws of England 2nd Edition, Vol. XVII, page 708 and the observations of Lord Hardwicke as early as 1747 in *Gregory v. Molesworth*¹ and Malins, V. C., in *In re Hoghton: Hoghton v. Fiddey*², are sufficiently weighty authorities under the English Law that a judgment against an infant can be reopened for gross negligence on the part of his next friend or guardian ad litem. The fact that the question was not considered in those ancient cases in all its fulness or that the question did not arise directly for decision is sufficiently met by the fact that they have been recognised as laying down the law correctly by the leading text books of authority and there is no direct decision to the contrary in England to this day. Among other text books may be mentioned Macpherson on Infants, page 346, referred to in Brij Raj v. Ram

*Sarup*¹ and Trevelyan on Minors, 6th Edition at page 284. In the face of such a large body of legal opinion to the contrary, we are not sure that this decision of the Bombay High Court will start another course of unsettlement on the point. If it is recognised that a judgment against a minor can be reopened by reason of the gross negligence of the next friend or guardian ad litem, there can be no doubt that a suit will be a more appropriate and effectual means of vacating the prior judgment, than a review whose limits are strictly circumscribed by the Civil Procedure Code.

The question whether the Court in settling a sale proclamation is under a duty to arrive at and state its own estimate of the value of the properties to be sold furnished a fruitful source of conflict of decisions in the various High Courts and an additional ground was furnished to the judgment debtor for an application to set aside the execution sale and delaying the decree-holder from realising the fruits of his decree. The High Courts of Madras and Allahabad however held that the Court was not bound to arrive at and state its own estimate of the properties brought to sale, in the proclamation of sale. *Thiruvengadaswami Aiyangar v. Govindaswami Udayar*² and Muhammad Said Khan v. Muhammad Abdus Sami Khana, while the Calcutta and the Patna High Courts held the contrary. *Banbihari Chatterji v. Bhukhanlal Chaudhuri*³, and *Munshi Raghunath Singh v. Hazari Sahu*⁴. In the decision under notice, the learned judges have agreed with the view held in Madras and Allahabad and held that the Court is under no duty to arrive at and state the value of the properties to be sold in the sale proclamation and the learned Chief Justice has pointed out how the decision of the Privy Council in *Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuara*⁵ has been misunderstood as being an authority for the contrary view. In many of the provinces, the point is now only of academic interest as the High Courts of Madras, Patna, Lahore, Rangoon, Nagpur and the North-West Frontier Province have framed rules under their rule making power and added a further clause to O. 21, r. 66 or further words rendering it unnecessary for the Court to fix the value of the properties to be sold. After these alterations to the rule, it is sufficient if the value as given by the parties is stated in the sale proclamation. It is a matter for the consideration of the Bombay High Court if a similar alteration in the rule should not be made by that High Court also to obviate any different view being taken in the future by that High Court leading to a conflict of decisions.

The question in this case was as to the article of the Limitation Act that governs a suit by a mortgagee on the personal covenant contained in the mortgage-deed, when the mortgage is vitiated by reason of the doctrine of fraud on registration. The bond was registered at Tikari by adding in the description of land a piece of land at Tikari which entry was found to be fictitious and it was also found that the mortgagor and the mortgagee were parties to the fraud. The bond was therefore rightly held to be invalid as a mortgage but as the suit was within six years, the mortgagee claimed a personal decree against the mortgagor. It is here that there is a definite cleavage of opinion between the Madras High Court and the Calcutta High Court and the difference of view is largely based on the exact scope of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in *Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury*¹. The Madras High Court has held in a considered judgment in *Rama Rao v. Vissapragada Vedayya*², that though the document may be invalid as one obtained by a fraud on the registration law, yet the document is registered and falls within Art. 116 of the Limitation Act. It has uniformly been held that a claim to enforce the personal covenant contained in the mortgage-deed is a claim "for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered" and is governed by Art. 116, though Mr. Justice Mitter doubts the correctness even of this view in

*Sailendra Nath v. Keshab Chandra Chowdhury*¹. (See *Vasanji Kalianji v. Erachsha Dossabhai*², *Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Abdul Majid*³, *Chengalamnia v. Veeraraghava*⁴, *Ratnasabapathy Chettiar v. Deivasigamani Pillai*⁵, and *Radhakrishna v. Tej Saroop*⁶.) It has also been held that where a mortgage fails as a mortgage for want of attestation, or other causes, yet it is to be treated as a registered contract and is governed by Art. 116. (See *Dinkar Hari v. Chhaganlal Narsidas*⁷, *Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukherji*⁸, *Sonatum Shaha v. Dino Nath Shaha*⁹ and *Joginee Mohan Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal*¹⁰). But in *Sailendra Nath v. Keshab Chandra Chowdhury*¹ it is held that where the mortgage is invalid as in fraud of registration, then it is a case where the parties are guilty of fraud and a mortgagee who is a party to such fraud should not be allowed to take advantage of it. With all respect, this reasoning overlooks the fact that he is not seeking to take advantage of the fraud because the fraud consisted in trying to get a mortgage right over it. Logically pursued, the Court may have to hold that the document could not be sued on even in three years under Art. 66. As pointed out by the learned authors of the sixth edition of Mitra's Limitation "so far as the personal covenant on the part of the mortgagor is concerned the instrument may be considered as being duly registered, for under S. 29 of the Registration Act there is no restriction as to the place of registration with respect to persons executing or claiming under the instrument". The learned authors point out that in this view *Kalka v. Mathura Das*¹¹ is open to doubt. The Oudh Court has later held that *Kalka v. Mathura Das*¹¹ is not correctly decided. It was in this form that the argument was advanced in the case under notice by Mr. Sarjoo Prasad when he suggested that "it should be considered that there was no fraud in obtaining registration so far as the personal covenant was concerned, because if the bond had contained nothing but the personal covenant, the provisions of

S. 29 of the Registration Act would have applied and the document could have been registered at any registry office" but the argument has been negatived as having the effect of calling the document something other than what it is. In *Sailendra Nath v. Keshab Chandra Chowdhury*¹ and *Jogeshwar Prasad Onkar Prasad v. Mulchand*², the difficulty felt is that as the effect of fraud on the Registration Law affects the deed as a whole, it cannot be said that the deed is to be treated as an unregistered document for one purpose and a registered document for another. With respect, this assumes that fraud vitiates the whole deed and not merely the mortgage nature of it. As Mr. Justice Phillips points out at page 438 in *Rama Rao v. Vedayya*³, there was no fraud on the Registration Law in so far as the document evidenced a mere covenant to pay, and to extend the invalidity also to that part of it will be "to deprive a party of a right which he had not obtained by fraud as well as of the advantage gained by his fraud". A document may be invalid in some parts but valid in other parts, provided they are separable parts.

Apart from a priori discussions based on these general aspects of the question, the real difficulty is caused by the course adopted by the Judicial Committee in *Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury*⁴ and the view of the Madras High Court receives large support from the arguments in that case as extracted in the report of the case in *Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury*⁴. But the Calcutta High Court and following it, Nagpur and Patna High Courts do not agree with that interpretation of Biswanath Prasad's case.⁴

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—SIR ALFRED HENRY LIONEL LEACH, Chief Justice, MR. JUSTICE KRISHNASWAMI AIYANGAR AND MR. JUSTICE SOMAYYA.

Anumala Ankamma .. Appellant (1st Defendant)*

v.

Komaravolu Venkata Subbayya

and others .. Respondents (Plaintiff and Defendants 2 to 4).

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), Ss. 146 and 147—If retrospective in effect.

In providing that transferees should be bound to give formal notice to the landlords, the Act did affect substantive rights and cannot be regarded as being retrospective unless this is so stated or this is necessarily implied. There is nothing in Ss. 146 and 147 which indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to interfere with rights acquired before the Act came into force.

Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty, (1922) 17 L.W. 361, overruled.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Burn dated 2nd November, 1936 and passed in S.A. No. 299 of 1935 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Guntur in A. S. No. 96 of 1934 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ongole in O. S. No. 356 of 1929.

This appeal coming on for hearing on Monday, the 20th February, 1939, the Court (the Chief Justice and Somayya, J.) made the following ORDER.—In view of the decision in *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹, we consider that the case should be heard by a Full Bench and we direct accordingly.

V. Govindarajachari and B. V. Ramanarasu for Appellant.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The question which falls for decision in this appeal is whether S. 146 and S. 147 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, are intended to have retrospective effect. Before considering the provisions of the Act I will state how this question arises. The appellant is a ryot in possession of a piece of land known as Survey No. 191/1. The land forms part of a holding granted by the Rajah of Venkatagiri. There are five lots bearing survey numbers in this holding, the other four being in the possession of one Venkata Subbayya, the pattadar. Venkata Subbayya is the son of one Vobayya, who in 1903 sold to the appellant and two others the land described as Survey No. 191/1. The appellant's co-owners eventually gave up their interests in the land and he alone cultivated it. Venkata Subbayya failed to pay to his landlord the rent due by him for the years 1919, 1920 and 1921 in respect of Survey Nos. 246, 445, 679 and 305 which comprised the remainder of the holding. The result was the landlord instituted a rent suit before the Sub-Collector, Ongole, in 1922 and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree the land held by the appellant was sold as being part of the area covered by the patta. The purchaser was one Poluri Yellamraju, who on the 28th November, 1928, conveyed the land to one Komaravolu Venkata Subbayya.

The appellant was recognised by the landlord as the holder of Survey No. 191/1 after his purchase in 1903 and he continued to pay year by year the rent due by him in respect of it. It was held by the trial Court in the suit out of which this appeal arises that Venkata Subbayya had deliberately defaulted, knowing that a rent suit could be filed. His scheme was to induce the decree-holder to sell in execution the appellant's land as it formed part of the holding and thus give him an opportunity of buying it at the Court auction. Of course, a scheme of this nature could only be carried through with the connivance of the Subordinate Officials of the Zamindar. The present suit was filed in the Court of District Munsif of Ongole by Komaravolu Venkata Subbayya on the 29th April, 1929, six years after the Court auction had taken place, to recover possession of the property from the appellant. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the appellant's title was not affected by the sale, because he had no notice of the suit or of the sale, he was not made a party to any of the proceedings, he had been in possession of the land since 1903, and he had regularly paid his rent to the landlord, who had recognised him as his tenant. The District Munsif also held that Poluri Yellamraju and Komaravolu Venkata Subbayya were creatures of Venkata Subbayya. Poluri Yellamraju had bought the property at the Court auction on behalf of Venkata Subbayya and had transferred it to Komaravolu Venkata Subbayya, who was also his benamidar. The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Guntur who held that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the conclusion that the auction purchaser was a benamidar of Venkata Subbayya, although he appears to have accepted the finding that the plaintiff was. The Subordinate Judge set out the evidence on which the District Munsif had held that the auction purchaser was a benamidar and apparently did not dispute its accuracy. If true, the evidence was sufficient to support the District Munsif's finding that the auction purchaser was a benamidar. Accepting the evidence as true, there was no other conclusion really open. Holding that the auction purchaser was not a benamidar and relying on the decision in *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹, where it was held that the Madras Estates Land Act had retrospective effect the Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal and decreed the suit. The appellant then appealed to this Court, but in his memorandum of appeal he took no exception to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the auction purchaser was not a benamidar. He challenged the correctness of his decision on legal grounds and left the facts entirely alone. It is unfortunate that he did so because it was open to him to have challenged the decision of the Subordinate Judge with regard to the position of the auction purchaser. It is, however, too late in the day now for this question to be raised, and the Court is merely concerned with the question whether the decision of Burn, J., who heard the appellant's appeal which followed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, is right in law. Burn, J., dismissed the appeal on the ground that he was bound by the decision in *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹.

Before referring to what was said in that case I will set out the provisions of S. 146 and S. 147 of Madras Estates Land Act. S. 146 provides that whenever a holding or any portion thereof is transferred by the Act of a ryot, or in execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court passed against him, or by a sale for arrears of Government revenue or for any demand recoverable as arrears the transfer shall, subject to the provisions of S. 145, be recognised by the landholder if notice in writing be communicated to him by the transferor and transferee or a certified copy of a decree or order of a Civil Court establishing a transfer is produced, or in cases in which a transfer is effected by sale under the order of a Court or public officer the sale certificate or a certified copy is produced. On notice in writing given by the transferor and transferee or by the co-sharers, as the case may be, the landholder is required to enter into separate engagements with the holders of the sub-divisions from the revenue year next succeeding that in which the notice has been given. Therefore under this section the landlord is not bound to recognise a transfer unless he receives a notification in the manner prescribed by the section. S. 147 says that all acts or proceedings commenced or had under the Act against the transferor or the co-sharers prior to the giving of the notice under S. 146 or prior to the production of the copy of the decree or order or certificate of sale under S. 146 in so far as such acts and proceedings affect or purport to affect the land on which the arrear is due, the crops and the products, shall as against the transferee or co-sharer be as valid and effectual as if such acts and proceedings had been commenced or had against the transferee or co-sharer himself, and he had been the defaulter. In other words all proceedings which have been commenced before notice has been received by the landlord shall be effective against the transferee.

1. (1922). 17 L.W. 361.

In *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹, a Bench of this Court consisting of Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ., held that these two sections applied to cases where the transfer was before the Act. In other words they held that the Act had retrospective effect. Although the learned Judges seemed to have had some doubt as to what was the law before the Act came into force it was well settled that where a pattadar transferred his holding or part of his holding to another the transferee became the tenant and it was the duty of the landlord to find out the transferee and collect the rent from him. Proceedings for the recovery of the rent could not be commenced until notice had been given to the transferee. (See *Ekambara Aiyar v. Meenatchi Ammal*², *Peram Narasigadu v. Machireddi Butchireddi*³, *Kesavaswami Aiyar v. Narayana Chetty*⁴ and Muthukaruppa Pillai v. Annamalai Chettiars.) The decision in *Peram Narasigadu v. Machireddi Butchireddi*³ and that in *Kesavaswami Aiyar v. Narayana Chetty*⁴ had reference to a case where the pattadar had transferred only a portion of his holding. The decision of Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ., in *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹, that the Act had retrospective effect was based on the opinion which they had formed that the Act did not determine any substantive rights, but we are unable to share this view. Before the Act a transferee had a recognised status even without any notice being given of the transfer to the landlord. Therefore in providing that transferees should be bound to give formal notice to the landlords the Act did affect substantive rights and an act which has this effect cannot be regarded as being retrospective unless this is so stated or this is necessarily implied. That is not the position here. The wording of S. 146 is in the present tense, and there is nothing in that section or in S. 147 which indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to interfere with rights acquired before the Act came into force.

To give retrospective effect to the Act would cause damage to the appellant. In 1903 he acquired a valid title to the land which was sold in execution of the rent decree. He was not in default and throughout had paid his rent to his landlord, the Zamindar, who recognised him as being the holder of the land.

Leach, C.J.

The payment of the rent to the officials of the Zamindar and their acceptance of it means recognition by the Zamindar. The Legislature can take away rights which have become vested, but it can only do so by a measure which clearly expresses its intention. There is no indication here of any such intention on the part of the Legislature which passed the Madras Estates Land Act, and *Sri Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu v. Sarangapani Chetty*¹ was wrongly decided. It follows that in our opinion the appellant was not required to serve formal notice on his landlord and that he got a good title to the land by the conveyance to him in 1903.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the suit will be dismissed with costs throughout in favour of the appellant.

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), S. 13—Threat of unlawful ejection from office by official act—Suit to protect the office—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts to entertain—Board of Revenue Regulation (I of 1803), S. 5—Power of Board under where different machinery provided by statute for rectifying erroneous orders of subordinates.

When a Village Munsif lawfully appointed has been unlawfully threatened with ejection by an official act he can maintain a suit to protect his right of office, and it is a suit which the civil courts have jurisdiction to entertain.

Venkataramaiah v. Chenchu Subbaiah, (1930) 33 L.W. 294, followed.

S. 5 of the Board of Revenue Regulation does not give the Board the power to set aside a statutory order passed by one of its subordinates in cases where the statute provides a different machinery for rectifying an error.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff in a suit brought by him for a declaration that he is the legal holder of the office of village headman in a Government village and that the appointment of the second defendant in pursuance of the order of the Board of Revenue is illegal and for restraining the Government and the second defendant from interfering with his enjoyment of the office.

The facts are not in dispute. When the vacancy to the office occurred, the plaintiff was actually doing the work as a deputy. The second defendant is the son of a former dismissed occupant of the office and a cousin of the last actual holder of it. Both the Revenue Divisional Officer and the District Collector held that the plaintiff had a better claim to the office and the plaintiff was accordingly appointed and entered upon the duties of the office. I am informed that he is still the incumbent of the office getting the work done through a deputy. Against the Collector's order, the second defendant preferred what was called a second appeal to the Board of Revenue and the Board of Revenue passed an order, Ex. D, to the effect that it was in accordance with the spirit, if not with the letter of the Act, that the second defendant's claims should be preferred to those of the plaintiff who, if not an absolute stranger, had very much weaker connection with the office. The Board proceeded to make a reference to the plaintiff as one not likely to do the work himself and observed:

"The Board does not want a man of the plaintiff's type and considers it equitable to appoint the second defendant to the office."

The second defendant was accordingly appointed.

It has been held by both the Courts below that this is a suit relating to a claim to succeed to an office covered by the provisions of S. 13 and therefore under S. 21 of the Madras Act III of 1895, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted. It seems to me that this view of the case is erroneous. If the order passed by the Board of Revenue was one which the Board was legally competent to pass, then undoubtedly there would be an appointment of the second defendant to the office and a claim by any one else would be one which should have been brought by a suit under S. 13 in the Revenue Court. But the position taken up by the plaintiff in the present suit is that he is the legally appointed Village Munsif, that there has been no legal appointment of the second defendant and that the act of the Board of Revenue in trying to turn out the plaintiff from the office which he still holds and to put the second defendant into his place is an unwarranted invasion of the plaintiff's legal rights. If that case is made out, it is certainly not a case in which the plaintiff sued to establish his right to succeed to an office or to get the emoluments of an office. He already occupies the office and is still drawing its emoluments through his deputy. In fact the plaintiff's case is that having legal possession of the office, he seeks to avert a threat to that possession by the unlawful act of a powerful body. That, in my opinion, is a suit which the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain.

DuraiSwami

The only question therefore is whether the order of the Board of Revenue on this so-called second appeal by the second defendant is a legal order which would have the effect of putting the plaintiff in the position of one seeking to establish his right to succeed to an office, or is it an unlawful attempt to invade the established rights which the plaintiff has already acquired. The scheme of Act III of 1895 is that when there is a vacancy to an hereditary office, the Collector shall fill that vacancy in accordance with the rules of primogeniture and that any dissatisfied claimant shall have the remedy of a suit before the Collector to establish that he has a better right. The powers of the Collector are in fact wielded in the first instance by the Revenue Divisional Officer by virtue of a delegation under the Subordinate Collectors' Regulation VII of 1828, which expressly provides that the orders of the Subordinate Collector under the powers so delegated shall be subject to a revision by the Collector and that the Collector shall have the power to confirm or modify or annul those orders. It has been held in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Jagannadha Aiyangar, that this power of the Collector to modify the order of a Subordinate Collector is not in conflict with the machinery of Act III of 1895; so that in effect there is a right of appeal to the District Collector from the order of the Subordinate Collector passed under S. 10 of that Act.

Durai Swami

The only power which can be claimed by the Board of Revenue is based on S. 5 of the Board of Revenue Regulation (I of 1803), whereby the Board is given authority to superintend and control all persons employed in the executive administration of the public revenue. It is contended on the analogy of decisions relating to the High Court's powers of superintendence under S. 15 of the Charter Act and S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1919, that this power conferred on the Board by S. 5 of the Board of Revenue Regulation includes a power to set aside orders of a subordinate authority, passed under statutory powers, which, in the Board's opinion, are erroneous. In the first place I must observe that I am not aware of any decision which has gone so far as to say, under S. 15 of the Charter Act or S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1919, that the High Court had the power in revision to set aside an order, which could be modified by another machinery prescribed by statute, merely because that order was, in the High Court's opinion, ill-advised or erroneous. Decisions relating to the High Court's powers under its general power of superintendence have, so far as I am aware, always restricted the exercise of that power in judicial matters to interference in cases of grave dereliction of duty for which no other remedy is available and which would have serious consequences if not remedied. There is no suggestion in the Board's order in this case that the grounds for its decision are any more than a difference of opinion with the Collector as to the legal rights of the two rival claimants and the desirability of one rather than the other as a village officer. I do not wish to say anything which might be taken as indicating that in no circumstances can the Board of Revenue by virtue of its powers under S. 5 of the Board of Revenue Regulation set aside a statutory order of its subordinate in the case of a gross error attended by serious consequences for which no other remedy is provided by law. But I am emphatically of opinion that these general powers of superintendence did not authorise the Board of Revenue to arrogate to itself a power of interference in revision or in second appeal from a statutory order, when machinery of the statute itself confers no such power and contemplates the utilisation of another remedy which is accessible to the person aggrieved, more especially in a case in which the consequences of any error are purely personal to the rival claimants. So far as I am aware, there is no decided case in which it has been recognised that S. 5 of the Board of Revenue Regulation gives to the Board of Revenue the power to set aside a statutory order passed by one of its subordinates in cases where the statute provides a different machinery for rectifying any error. The decisions in *Subba Rao v. Secretary of State*¹ and *Secretary of State for India v. Subba Rao*², though not precisely on this point, do at least indicate that the powers of the Board of Revenue under S. 5 of this Regulation must be read subject to the statutory delimitation of their subordinates' powers found in other laws. Authority for the view that when a village officer lawfully appointed, has been unlawfully threatened with ejection by an official act, he can maintain a suit to protect his right of office, may be found in the case reported in *Venkataramiah v. Chenchu Subbaiah*³. In my opinion, the order of the Board of Revenue purporting to act in second appeal or revision and to decide a matter which according to the machinery of the Act should have been decided by a suit under S. 13 of Act. III of 1895, was an illegal attempt to invade the vested rights of the plaintiff and the plaintiff has a remedy by way of a suit for a declaration of his right to the office and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering therewith.

Duraiswami

The appeal is therefore allowed with costs throughout and there will be a declaration declaring that the plaintiff is the legal holder of the suit office and restraining the defendants by a permanent injunction from interfering with the plaintiff's enjoyment of that office, except in accordance with the law.

Venkataramana Rao, J.: Appeal No. 306 of 1936.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned District Judge of South Arcot modifying a scheme framed by the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Board in regard to the temple of Sri Sabanayakar alias Nataraja of Chidambaram. This action was filed as a representative suit on behalf of the Dikshitar (who are said to be over 200 in number) who claim to be trustees—archakas and poojaris of the said temple. Before the learned District Judge various questions as to jurisdiction were raised. It is unnecessary for us to mention all of them. It is sufficient for us to say that one of the main questions raised in this behalf was in regard to the non-applicability of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act and the consequent want of jurisdiction in the Board to frame a scheme. The contention of the Dikshitar is that the temple is only a private temple and not a public religious institution within the meaning of the Act and therefore the Board had no jurisdiction to frame a scheme. Another contention in regard to jurisdiction was that even assuming that the Board had jurisdiction, the provisions of Ss. 62 and 63 of the Act were not complied with, in that the Board could frame a scheme on its own initiative only if there was mismanagement and not merely because it would be proper to frame a scheme in the interests of efficient administration of the temple. The learned District Judge disallowed all the contentions on behalf of the plaintiffs and upheld the scheme of the Board but only modifying it in some particulars with a view to satisfy some of the objections raised on behalf of the plaintiffs. Mr. Rajah Aiyar on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants confined his objections mainly to the scheme, though incidentally he made mention of the two main objections which we have outlined in regard to the jurisdiction of the Board to frame the scheme. So far as the question of jurisdiction based on the non-applicability of the Act is concerned, the learned Counsel, we think, wisely refrained from pressing it because it cannot be seriously doubted that the suit temple is a public institution within the meaning of the Act and not a private temple as contended for. We agree that some of the grounds on which the learned District Judge purported to hold against the plaintiffs may not be valid, but having regard to the character of the temple it seems to us that it would be too much to contend that this is a private temple. So early as 1885 when the question was raised in a suit by the Dikshitar, Muthuswami Aiyar and Shephard, JJ., in their judgment dated 17th March, 1890, in A. S. Nos. 108 and 159 of 1888 observed that it was not denied that the institution was being used as a place of public worship from time immemorial and that there was no particle of evidence in support of the assertion that this ancient temple of Sri Nataraja was the private property of the Dikshitar. Even now it is not denied that this temple is held to be very sacred by all the Saivites in this Presidency and is resorted to as a place of public worship. The other contention of Mr. Rajah Aiyar with reference to the Board's jurisdiction to frame a scheme under S. 63 is that the Board could frame a scheme when it takes action suo motu only if it finds mismanagement. There is a finding in this case that there was mismanagement, but it seems to us that the Board can always take action if it has reason to believe that a temple is being mismanaged. In this case there was ample material on which it could take action on its own initiative. It accordingly instituted an enquiry and then proceeded to frame a scheme. Once the Board takes action suo motu, we think even though it may ultimately find that there was no mismanagement, nevertheless it can frame a scheme if it is necessary for the proper administration of the temple that a scheme should be framed. S. 62 imposes a restriction to taking action suo motu by confining it to a case where the Board has reason to believe there is mismanagement but once it initiates an enquiry, the power to frame a scheme is not restricted to a case of mismanagement. Under S. 63 it can frame a scheme on any one of the grounds mentioned therein, namely, mismanagement or improper alienation of endowed property or in the interests of proper administration of the endowment. When we put this aspect of the matter to Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, he very properly refrained from pressing this contention. His main complaint was that while the scheme was sub judice and while the question of jurisdiction was being agitated by the plaintiffs and while the Board's proceedings in regard to the scheme were stayed, the Board took action under S. 65-A for the purpose of notifying the temple. It seems to us very undesirable that the Board should have taken any steps in regard to the notification of this temple. The procedure in regard to notification ought not to be lightly resorted to, unless and until there is such serious mismanagement of a temple as would justify an ouster of the trustees in charge of a temple from their office. The scheme was framed in 1933 and proceedings relating to its modification were pending in the District Court and the scheme had not been given any fair trial. It could not possibly be said that the scheme was not worked satisfactorily by the trustees and that therefore in the interests of proper administration of the temple it was necessary for the Board to take the drastic step of having the temple notified. We trust and hope that the Board would drop all proceedings in the matter and allow the scheme as modified by the District Court and as modified by us to be given a fair trial and would give the trustees a fair opportunity to carry on the administration in accordance with the scheme.

Now coming to the actual scheme, so far as we can see it is a perfectly innocuous scheme and the Board has interfered as little as possible with the internal administration of the trustees. But the learned District Judge has out of regard for the sentiment of the trustees modified the scheme in certain particulars which we believe ought to satisfy a most scrupulous trustee. Even this however does not seem to satisfy the plaintiffs because for ages they have been going on with their traditional methods of administration and any slight variance naturally evokes some sort of hostility. We think that in the proper administration of the temple a scheme such as the one in question is absolutely necessary because the trustees are more than 200 in number and it would be impossible in the very nature of things to expect proper administration by such an unwieldy body. The main objections of Mr. Rajah Aiyar to the scheme as modified by the District Court relate to paragraph 4, paragraph 8 (f) and paragraph 10 of the scheme. Paragraph 4 relates to the appointment of nine trustees annually, six by election and three by nomination. This is objected to by Mr. Rajah Aiyar on the ground that the principle of election would introduce a factious spirit and that when there are nearly 230 trustees every one of them would not according to the principle proposed have the chance of participating in the management of the affairs of the temple in accordance with the time-honoured custom which prevailed among them. It was to satisfy this sentiment that the learned District Judge modified the clause by introducing the principle of nomination in regard to three of the trustees, leaving six to be elected by the Dikshitar among themselves. Even this would not satisfy the Dikshitar because every one of the trustees may not have a chance of participating in the management and therefore some method must be devised by which their wishes should be respected in regard thereto. We think that a provision by which all persons who have been appointed by election should be declared ineligible for office for a period of five years from the termination of their office would meet the justice of the case. We accordingly modify paragraph 4 of the scheme by adding that six trustees who will be appointed by election should not stand for re-election for a period of five years from the termination of their office. Paragraph 8 (f) relates to the duties of the manager in regard to the proper performance by the archakas, paricharakas and other internal servants of the devasthanam and the office establishment, of their work. What Mr. Rajah Aiyar objects to is the word "control," which may connote, that a servant like the manager can control the trustees some of whom happen to be archakas and paricharakas. We modify paragraph 8 (f) by deleting the words "immediate control" and by saying

"Do see to the proper performance of their duties by archakas, paricharakas and have immediate control over the internal servants of the devasthanam as well as over the office establishment in accordance with the usage."

In paragraph 10 the following sentence will be added:

"In regard to the putting up of sheds, the Managing Committee of Trustees may in their discretion select such sites as would be proper places for putting up temporary sheds for opening stalls during festival occasions."

The scheme shall come into operation from the 1st June, 1939.

The appeal is dismissed with costs of the first respondent (to come out of the temple funds) which we fix at Rs. 250.

The Letters Patent Appeals are not pressed. Dismissed. No costs.

Mortgages—Alienee advancing money—Money used for discharging two prior mortgages—If gives alienee priority over a mortgage omitted to be discharged.

The first defendant (a subsequent alienee of the suit property) contended that he having discharged the prior mortgages was entitled to priority in respect thereof. The plaintiff contended that the money was advanced by the first defendant for discharging the suit mortgage as well and having failed to discharge it is precluded from setting up any claim to priority.

Held, it would not be open now to the first defendant to set up the mortgages that had actually been discharged as a shield against the plaintiff's mortgage.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage dated 10th January, 1924, executed by one Ganji Guruva Reddi in favour of one Dhupam Gangakka. The said mortgage has now become vested in the plaintiff by two successive transfers. The interest of the mortgagor is vested in defendants 1 and 2 by purchase. The main question for decision in this appeal is whether the first defendant is entitled to have priority over the mortgage sued on in respect of two prior mortgage debts discharged by him, namely, one in favour of Kathi Chandra Reddi and another in favour of Dhupam Narayana Reddi. The learned District Munsif decided the question in favour of the first defendant, but the learned Subordinate Judge reversed his decision. It is against this decision that the first defendant has preferred this appeal.

Subbarama
Reddi
v.
Krishniah
Chetti.

The relevant facts are not in dispute. The owner of the suit property which formed the subject-matter of the several mortgages in question was one Ganji Guruva Reddi who effected the suit mortgage in favour of Dhupam Gangakka who transferred it in favour of her son Ramiah, who again transferred it in favour of the plaintiff. On the 17th September, 1925, that is, subsequent to the date of the suit mortgage, the said Guruva Reddi borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,200 from the first defendant partly by selling a portion of the mortgaged property and partly by mortgaging a portion of the mortgaged property to him. The transactions are evidenced by two documents, Exs. E and F. Ex. E purports to be a deed of sale for Rs. 800 and the purpose of effecting the sale is thus stated in the deed :

"Kathi Chandra Reddi having died, his heir and brother Venkata Reddi, the said Chandra Reddi's sons (1) minor Bhathi Reddi and (2) Yanadi Reddi, being minors, by guardian and junior paternal uncle the said Venkata Reddi, obtained a decree against me in O. S. No. 173 of 1924 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Tirupati and executed the decree in E. P. No. 374 of 1925. For paying the said decree amount and costs, etc., and for paying the mortgage-debts of Dhupam Gangakka and others, I have received from you this day Rs. 800 excluding the amount received under the hypothecation deed executed in your favour separately this day, and for this amount, I have this day sold to you the house and site, etc."

Ex. F purports to be a mortgage for Rs. 400 and the purpose for which the mortgage was executed is thus stated :—

"Kathi Chandra Reddi, having died, his heir and brother Venkata Reddi, and his minor sons, Bhathi Reddi and Yanadi Reddi, by guardian and junior paternal uncle the said Venkata Reddi brought O. S. No. 173 of 1924 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Tirupati, obtained a decree and is executing the decree in E. P. No. 374 of 1925. For paying the said decree amount, etc., and for paying the mortgage amount of Dhupam Gangakka and others, I have received this day in cash Rs. 400 excluding the amount received by my selling the house, etc., in your favour. I have become indebted to that extent."

It will thus be seen from the recitals in these two deeds that the same purpose is stated in both. It has been concurrently found by both the Courts that from and out of the sum of Rs. 1,200 advanced by the first defendant two mortgages were discharged, namely, (1) the mortgage in favour of Kathi Chandra Reddi which resulted in O. S. No. 173 of 1924 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Tirupati and (2) the mortgage in favour of Dhupam Narayana Reddi the discharge of which was one of the purposes for which the suit mortgage Ex. A was executed. The first defendant's plea is that the suit mortgage was a nominal transaction and the successive transfers including that in favour of the plaintiff were fraudulent and collusive transactions and therefore not binding on him and that he having discharged admittedly the prior mortgages was entitled to priority in respect thereof. The contention of the plaintiff is that the money advanced by the first defendant was for the purpose of discharging the suit mortgage as well and he having failed to discharge it is precluded from setting up any claim to priority. It is conceded by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended by Act II of 1930 would not apply to the case in view of some recent decisions which will be binding on me and that the law to be applied will be the law before the amendment. I therefore do not think it necessary to go into the correctness of the interpretation of S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act placed by my learned brother Varadachariar, J., and myself in the Full Bench decision reported in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹.

The mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If a person personally liable to pay pays it, it must prima facie be deemed to be extinguished. This will be the obvious case of the mortgagor because the mortgagor cannot set up his own encumbrance against any subsequent encumbrance which he himself has created. The principle underlying this is stated by Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in *Manks v. Whiteley*² thus:

"The two encumbrances were created by the mortgagor and embodied obligations on his part to discharge the two debts, and therefore he could not be allowed to set up the fact that he had fulfilled the one obligation to shield himself in any way from the performance of the other."

This principle is also extended to the case of a person 'who has assumed the duty of paying the debt either by a contract with the mortgagor or with those who have succeeded to his rights'. There may be an express covenant to pay the later mortgage also against which the prior mortgage is sought to be set up or it may be the case of the money being left in the hands of a purchaser or a mortgagee with directions to pay. In those cases the prior mortgage is deemed to be extinguished. Brown

v. *Stead*¹ and *Govindasami Thevan v. Doraisami Pillai*² are cases where a purchaser or mortgagee covenanted to pay the debts. *Narayanasami Naidu v. Narayana Rao*³ and *Chidambara Nadan v. Muni Nagendrayyan*⁴ are cases where the money had been left with a purchaser or mortgagee. It may be that in the case of such a purchaser or mortgagee the mortgages he discharged will be kept alive against an unknown encumbrance or a known encumbrance which he has not undertaken or was not directed to discharge. It is well settled that if the owner of an estate pays off a charge on the estate which he is not personally liable or under no obligation to pay, it is always open to him to extinguish it or to keep it alive and if no intention is expressed one way or the other, it is presumed that he intended to keep the charge alive. The intention to the contrary can be inferred from the terms of the purchase or mortgage-deed in cases where the purchaser or the mortgagee advances money for the purpose of discharge or from legitimate evidence. Tested in the light of these principles, the question in this case is whether the contention of the first defendant is sustainable. There can be no doubt that though a sum of Rs. 1,200 was advanced under two separate documents they formed part of one transaction. They were both executed on the same date for one and the same object, namely, for the discharge of mortgages existing on the property. In fact the recitals in the document clearly show that one document refers to the other. The two documents may therefore be treated as one deed. The substance of the transaction is that a sum of Rs. 1,200 was intended to be advanced by the first defendant and received by Guruva Reddi for the purpose of discharging specific mortgages including the mortgage sued on. It was intended that the first defendant should get in the one case property free from encumbrances and in another a first mortgage on the property for the amount advanced. Therefore the intention as appearing from the terms of the document is clearly to extinguish all the mortgages including the mortgage sued on. There is no distinction made between one mortgage and another. If at all an intention should be presumed in favour of the first defendant, it must be to the effect that all the mortgages must be deemed to be kept alive against any unknown encumbrance and not that one mortgage should be kept alive against the other mortgage. The case really in my opinion is governed by the principle enunciated by me in my judgment in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹, namely:

"Therefore, if as in this case, a person advances money or covenants to discharge three encumbrances, payment of two prior encumbrances cannot be availed of by him as a shield against the third."

The decision of the division bench of the Calcutta High Court reported in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persads is also in point. In that case a conveyance was executed for the purpose of discharging a mortgage in favour of one Narku Singh and also a mortgage in favour of the appellants therein. The evidence was that the mortgage in favour of Narku Singh was discharged but not the mortgage in favour of the said appellants. The question that arose was whether the vendees could claim priority in respect of the prior mortgages of Narku Singh. It was held that they could not. Mookerjee, J., after dealing with the case-law on the subject, proceeded to deal with the matter thus:

"The deed recites that the property was conveyed free of the encumbrances in favour of the appellants and Narku Singh and that the vendors had received in full the consideration and by payment to the encumbrancers would get the property released from the mortgages. There was no reason for keeping alive either of these charges, as there was no other incumbrance intermediate in date between them and the conveyance. The intention, on the other hand, of the purchasers was to acquire the property free from these charges, the existence of which had been ascertained, and the amount due upon each had been carefully specified. . . . Along with this circumstance, we must take the recital that the creditors were, under the terms of the conveyance, to be paid by the vendors and not by the purchasers Under these circumstances, I find it impossible to hold that there was any intention on the part of the purchasers to keep alive the security in favour of Narku to be used as a shield against the security of the appellants, should any occasion arise."

Mr. Somayya attacks the correctness of this decision and also my observations in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹, on the ground that it is only in cases where a person advancing money covenants to pay the debt, he will be deprived of the benefit resulting from the payment of an earlier charge and not in any other case. He strongly relied upon the observations in Govindasami Thevan v. Doraisami Pillai, namely:

"The rule as to subrogation only applies when the purchaser has not covenanted to discharge the previous encumbrance"

Subbarama
Reddi
v.
Krishniab
Chetti.

Mr. Somayya therefore argued that as the first defendant in this case has not covenanted to discharge any of the encumbrances and the obligation was undertaken by the vendors, it must be presumed that his client intended to keep alive the mortgages in favour of Chandra Reddi and Dhupam Narayana Reddi. Mr. Somayya relied also upon a number of other cases in support of his contention some of which I shall deal in the course of the judgment. In Govindasami Thevan v. Doraisami Pillai, the learned judges were dealing with a case where a person has covenanted to pay two mortgages but had only discharged one and in such a case they inferred that the intention could not have been to keep alive the first mortgage, the object being to discharge both. Any observations made by them must be understood with reference to the facts they were dealing with. In fact they approved the decision in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persada. The distinction contended for by Mr. Somayya has really no substance because the question in each case is what was the intention of the parties. In this case either the money with which Chandra Reddi and Narayana Reddi were paid may be taken to be the money of Guruva Reddi or the money of the first defendant. The decision in *Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das*³ will be an authority for the position that it will be Guruva Reddi's money and a payment by Guruva Reddi will be a discharge by the mortgagor and therefore it will not be open to him to say that he kept those mortgages alive. If it be viewed as the money of the first defendant paid through Guruva Reddi who may be treated as his agent for the said purpose, certainly when the first defendant paid Rs. 1,200 into the hands of Guruva Reddi, it was with the object of discharging both the mortgages. That the agent committed fraud upon him will not displace the intention of the first defendant in discharging the mortgages. Therefore if the facts do warrant an inference of an intention not to keep the charge alive, the charge cannot be treated as subsisting because as the events turned out, it would have been better to have kept it alive. Mr. Somayya strongly relied upon the decision in *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukhdas*¹ to show that *Toulmin v. Steere*² was considered to be wrong both in England and in India and therefore the legitimate inference is that if from the consideration money for a sale of property it was intended to discharge certain encumbrances and an earlier encumbrance was discharged but not a later one, the presumption must be that the earlier encumbrance should be deemed to have been kept alive as it would obviously be for the benefit of the purchaser. It seems to me that neither of the cases suggests this inference; on the other hand, the observations of Lord Herschell go strongly against the contention of Mr. Somayya. In *Toulmin v. Steere*², it was decided that a purchaser who took a conveyance purporting to be free from encumbrances could not set up a mortgage which had been paid off out of the purchase money against an encumbrance subsequent in date of which he had constructive notice. It will be seen from the terms of the transaction in that case that the parties intended to discharge two mortgages in favour of Welby and the annuity which was subsisting on the property was never intended to be discharged. The purchaser had neither covenanted to pay the annuity sued on nor was it intended that it should be discharged out of the purchase money. The Court could well have presumed an intention in favour of the purchaser to keep the discharged mortgages in force. But *Toulmin v. Steere*² decided otherwise. Lord Herschell in explaining *Toulmin v. Steere*², indicated that that case may be justified on a certain view of facts; that is, that the purchaser intended to discharge all the encumbrances including the annuity and if so, the discharge of an earlier encumbrance would not entitle a purchaser to keep it as a shield against a later encumbrance. Lord Herschell remarks thus:

"In *Toulmin v. Steere*², the owner of the equity of redemption had purchased the property with the intention of paying off all the mortgages upon it and thought all the mortgages had been paid off out of the purchase-money. One mortgage had been omitted; but so far from the intention there being to keep any of the mortgages alive, the intention was to extinguish all the mortgages and it was believed that such intention had been successfully accomplished." (*Thorne v. Canon*³.)

2. (1817) 3 Mer. 210; 36 E.R. 81.

3. (1895) A.C. 11 at 16.

Though in fact the annuity was not intended to be discharged Lord Herschell assumes that it must have been and on that view the decision may possibly be correct. If the above observations of Lord Herschell are applied to this case, it is clear that the first defendant had purchased the property and advanced money upon the mortgage with the intention of paying all the mortgages on it and thought that all the mortgages were paid off or would be paid off out of the purchase money, but the mortgage sued on had been omitted. Nevertheless as the intention was not to keep any of the mortgages alive, it would not be open now to the first defendant to set up the mortgages that had actually been discharged as shield against the plaintiff's mortgage. The case in Dinabandhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasi was relied on. It will be seen from that case that the amount was advanced to discharge both mortgages and both the mortgages were discharged but still both of them were kept alive as against an unknown encumbrance, an attachment which was subsisting in that case. That decision is no authority for a case where one of the mortgages which was intended to be discharged had not been discharged and the vendors had spent away the money intended for it.

The conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge is right whatever may be the reasoning on which it is based. I therefore dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Leave refused.

improvements on land with advances from private parties—Money advanced by Government paying off creditors—Priority of claim of Government whether subsisting—Construction of words of statute—Rules of construction.

A comparison of S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883) and S. 4 of the Agriculturists' Loans Act (XII of 1884) would show that if a loan would be granted under the Land Improvement Act, it would not be granted under the Agriculturists' Loans Act.

On a grammatical and ordinary construction of the words of S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act, the words are unambiguous and can only be held to apply to improvements which have not been effected at the time when the loan was granted and cannot be held to apply to improvements which had already been carried out at the time when the grant was made. Therefore the Government cannot be allowed to have priority in respect of advances applied for and made after the improvements was carried out with funds belonging to a private individual.

Abdur Rahman, J.

Abdur Rahman, J.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State for India and arises out of a suit filed by one Arunachala Mudaliar and his son on the basis of a mortgage deed (Ex. A) executed in their favour by Narayanaswami Naidu and his sons on the 19th of July, 1925. Since a priority was being claimed on behalf of the Secretary of State, in respect of a sum of Rs. 5,000 advanced to Narayanaswami Naidu on various dates between the 28th of September, 1925 and the 6th of May, 1926, he was also impleaded as a defendant in the suit. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's claim and overruled the plea of priority raised on behalf of the Secretary of State and the only question which we have now been called upon to decide is if the decision of the trial Court is correct.

The facts which have given rise to this litigation are simple and may be set forth here. It appears that Narayanaswami Naidu was desirous of installing a Suction Gas pumping plant on his land and intended to move the Government for an advance of Rs. 5,000, to effect this improvement. Before making a formal application, he seems to have approached the Assistant Industrial Engineer first and laid the proposed project before him for his consideration. The officer made two reports in this connection.

in April and May, 1923 (Ex. XII). In view of the uncertainty of result of the application which he intended to make and at all events of the inordinate delay which an application of this nature would take before it could be finally disposed of, he borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,000 on 26th May, 1923, from the plaintiffs for purchasing an oil engine and executed a promissory note in their favour (Ex. C). Narayanaswami then presented an application to the Supervisor of Industries on the 1st of June, 1923 (Ex. II) in which he asked for "an agricultural loan of Rs. 5,000." During the investigation which proceeded on this application, he made two statements on 23rd July, 1924 (Ex. XVII) and on 9th September, 1924 (Ex. XVIII) to which we shall advert later. This application was rejected on 23rd October, 1924, although Narayanaswami made another attempt to secure the loan and addressed a letter to the Director of Industries on the 26th of February, 1925 (Ex. G) which was referred to the Collector. He was again examined by the Tahsildar on the 10th of April, 1925 (Ex. XIX) who recommended the loan to be advanced to him (Ex. XXII) and this was finally sanctioned by the Director on the 13th of July, 1925, and communicated to Narayanaswami by means of a letter dated 16th July, 1925 (Ex. XXI). The plaintiffs at this stage appear to have been approached for another loan of Rs. 1,000 or so and found an opportunity to have a deed of mortgage for Rs. 7,500 executed by Narayanaswami and his sons in their favour (Ex. A). This deed was executed on the 19th July, 1925, in consideration of the two prior promissory notes (Exs. B and C) and of a sum of Rs. 1,007-11-0 which is stated to have been advanced at the time of the execution of the deed.

There is no doubt that the action of the plaintiffs in getting their simple money debt converted into a secured debt at this stage when the Director of Industries had sanctioned a loan for Rs. 5,000 six days earlier excites one's suspicion against the bona fide nature of this transaction but in the absence of any other evidence, it is impossible to rest our decision on a surmise and a conjecture. They may have been duped by Narayanaswami and his sons in the manner as the Secretary of State and his officers have been. It is equally probable that the knowledge of Narayanaswami having made or revived his application to the Government for a loan, or of the Director having sanctioned it, was deliberately kept back from the plaintiffs. It is easy to conceive that if they had come to know of these facts, they would not have advanced a further sum of Rs. 1,000; but taking advantage of their position as creditors, they availed themselves of the opportunity afforded to them by agreeing to make a further advance only on the condition of their debt being secured. Whatever be the case, no question was put to Rungaswami Mudali (P. W. 1) who was a clerk of the plaintiffs for 20 years and no evidence was produced on behalf of the appellant which would justify an inference of this nature.

To resume the narrative, Narayanaswami executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the Secretary of State on 5th August, 1925 (Ex. XXIV) under which some of the lands mortgaged with the plaintiffs were again mortgaged with him but the mortgage-deed recites that the debt was advanced under the provisions of the Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883) and those of the Agriculturists' Loans Act (XII of 1884). The learned Government Pleader contends that in spite of the fact that the deed of mortgage in favour of the Secretary of State is subsequent to that of the plaintiffs, the former should have been held to have priority as the loan was advanced under the provisions of and for a purpose covered by the Land Improvement Loans Act and not under the Agricultural Loans Act. He urges that a reference to both the Acts in the forms Exs. III (a) and III (c), in Narayanaswami's application Ex. XIII and in the mortgage-deed Ex. XXIV was made under a mistake as the purpose, for which the money could have been advanced, and that it fell under the provisions of the Land Improvement Loans Act alone and not under the provisions of the other Act. The learned Counsel on behalf of the respondents contends on the other hand that a reference to both the Acts was deliberate as the purposes for which the money was advanced fell partly under one Act and partly under the other. The determination of this question is important as a loan granted under the provisions of the Improvement Loans Act would have priority over the debts due to other mortgagees who have a charge or incumbrance on the land for the benefit of which it was granted by the Government.

This necessitates an examination of the various provisions of both the Acts referred to above. S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act provides, as its name indicates, that loans may be granted under this Act for the purpose of making any improvement which adds to the letting value of the land. In the sub-clause of the same section 'improvement' has been stated to include besides other things the construction of wells, tanks and other works for the storage, supply or distribution of water for the purpose of agriculture. The loans made under the Agricultural Loans Act can be made to owners or occupiers of arable land for the relief of distress, the purchase of seed and cattle or any other purpose not specified in the Land Improvement Loans Act (1883) but connected with agricultural objects (S. 4). A comparison of the two sections would thus show that if a loan could be granted under the Land Improvement Loans Act, it could not be granted under the Agriculturists' Loans Act.

The relevant provision of S. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act is to the effect that all loans granted under the Act along with the interest and costs shall be recoverable out of the land for the benefit of which the loan has been granted as if they were arrears of land revenue due in respect of that land.

S. 8 of the Act provides that a written order under the hand of an officer empowered to make loans under this Act granting a loan for the purpose of a carrying out a work described therein shall be conclusive evidence of—

(a) that the work described is an improvement within the meaning of this Act;

(b) that the person mentioned had at the date of the order a right to make such an improvement; and

(c) that the improvement is one benefiting the land specified.

After an examination of the various provisions of the Land Improvement Loans Act, there is little doubt that if the loan was advanced for the purpose of installing a gas plant to facilitate the supply or distribution of water on Narayanaswami's lands, it would fall within S. 4 of the Act. The only question then is if it was advanced for that purpose? In this connection it will be interesting to note Narayanaswami's statement recorded by the Revenue Inspector on the 23rd of July, 1924 (Ex. XVII) which reads as follows:—

"The loan now applied for is not intended for sinking a well and purchasing an engine. I have applied for an agricultural loan of Rs 5,000 for discharging the debt previously contracted in respect of this item. One year has elapsed since the date of purchase of the engine and lands are cultivated by this. The engine has been working. I have prepared and produced lists

(Ex. XVI) relating to debts contracted in respect of engine and expenses. Amount spent till this date is Rs. 4,300. Cost of building to be constructed is Rs. 500..... "

He made a similar statement to the Tahsildar on the 9th of September, 1924 (Ex. XVIII). To the same effect was his statement which he made on the 10th of April, 1925 (Ex. XIX) after his application was rejected and was being re-considered at his request.

In view of these statements, Mr. Sitarama Rao contended that it was wholly immaterial whether the improvements were already carried out on the date of the order granting the loan or not, as long as the purpose for which the loan was granted is covered by S. 4 of the Act. In other words he argued that the improvements for which the loan is advanced need not necessarily be such as have to be carried out in future. It was suggested by him that an application by an intending borrower for the purpose of making one of the improvements mentioned in the Act is conclusive of the matter, if it is accepted by the officer empowered to make loans under the Act. Reliance was placed by him on a case decided by a Division Bench of this Court in *Sankaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹.

The facts of the case, however, are distinguishable from the facts of the present one. It was found for a fact in that case that the borrower had utilized the portion of the loan advanced under the Act for the improvement already effected while it has not been established in this case that any portion of the money taken by Narayanaswami from the Government went to liquidate the debts incurred by him for making the improvements. Mr. Sitarama Rao characterises this fact to be a mere accident in that case and urged that this would not touch the principle on which the case was decided. We do not agree. There is no doubt that the learned Judges were greatly impressed by this fact and the following remark made by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., although liable to a different interpretation as well, must be understood to have been made in this sense. He observed :

"The test is not whether the improvement was subsequently made but whether the money was applied for the construction of agricultural improvements upon the property."

If the words 'applied for' were used by the learned Judge in the sense of merely making an application to the Government,

we would, with great deference, disagree. The whole case really turns on the interpretation of the words "for the purpose of making any improvement" used in S. 4 of the Act. It is a well-known canon of construction as observed by Lord Wensleydale in *Grey v. Pearson*¹, that

"In construing wills and indeed, statutes and all written instruments, the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words is to be adhered to, unless that would lead to some absurdity, or some repugnancy or inconsistency with the rest of the instrument, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified so as to avoid that absurdity and inconsistency, but no farther.

The business of an interpreter is not to improve upon the words of an enactment but to expound them. As observed by Cockburn, C. J., in *Palmer v. Thatcher*², the question for him is not what the Legislature meant, but what its language means, that is, what the Act has said that it meant.

We have therefore to proceed on the principle enunciated by these noble Law Lords and interpret the language of S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act. To our minds, the words in the section are unambiguous and can only be held to apply to improvements which have not been effected at the time when the loan was granted and cannot be held to apply to improvements which had already been carried out at the time when the grant was made. A reference to S. 8 of the same Act will not be out of place. The words used in that section are "for the purpose of carrying out a work" (thereby meaning improvement) can only be taken to mean future improvements only and not those which have already been made. We would have to face all kinds of difficulties and would not know where to draw a line, if we once failed or refused to place a grammatical construction on these words. As an illustration, we may take the case of a person who mortgaged his lands with A in 1910 and made certain improvements on those lands with the money received by him from A. Let us suppose that he mortgaged the same lands with B in 1922, discharged A's debt, re-mortgaged the same lands with C in 1934, discharged B's debt out of the money received from C and then made an application in 1935 to the Government under S. 4 of the Act. If the Government accepts his application and grants him a loan in 1936, would the claim by the Secretary of State be held to have priority over C's claim as a mortgagee?

If the construction suggested by Mr. Sitarama Rao is correct, he must, to be logical, say that it would be so. But when this case was put to him by one of us, he was not prepared to go to that extent and said that this construction would be unreasonable, but he would confine the operation of the section to those cases only when improvements were affected by a person while he was either contemplating to make an application under the Act or had made one before the improvements were made. Where is the guarantee but, that the application made by a person would necessarily be accepted by the Government? Are the mortgagees, who have taken a mortgage without any knowledge of the borrower's intention to make an application or of the fact that an application has already been made by him, to remain in suspense for all this time? The position is to our minds impossible and cannot be accepted. After all it is for the Government to see, at the time when loan is being granted, if any improvements have already been effected by the borrower and if it finds that they have been, its officers should see that the persons who have advanced loans for this purpose are satisfied. In this case there is a volume of evidence on the record from which it has been established that Narayanaswami never concealed the fact that improvements for which the money was being asked for, except to a small extent of Rs. 500 or so, were carried out long before the order granting the loan was passed. In fact he stated that his object in taking the money was not to make improvements but to pay off the creditors from whom he had raised loans to carry out these improvements. Is the payment of such debts one of the purposes mentioned in S. 4? The answer can only be one and that in the negative. There is no reason to hold why we should read the words 'for the purpose of making any improvement' as having the same meaning as the words 'for the purpose of paying for an improvement' would have meant, if used in the section. There is nothing in the Act, which would make the interpretation we are placing on these words as repugnant or inconsistent with the rest of the Act and surely there is no absurdity which this construction would entail. We would therefore put a grammatical construction on these words and hold that they refer to future improvement only.

It cannot be denied, in our opinion, that the object of placing both these Acts on the Statute Book of India was to help the agriculturist and proprietors of agricultural lands and not to benefit the Government at least directly. If the assumption made by us be right, would it be correct to place the construction suggested by the learned Government Pleader on S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act? Why should it be presumed that the Legislature was trying to take away an advantage from them by one hand which was conferred on them by the other? It would be so, as in that case, the agriculturist would find it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to raise money on the security of their lands. Why should, one may well ask again, the mortgagees, who had already advanced moneys on the security of lands, be treated so unjustly? Why should they be deprived of their securities or their claims deferred to those of the Government, by an action of their own mortgagors in making applications and getting advances under the Land Improvement Loans Act? Why should the loans advanced by the Government under the two Acts be treated differently when the Agricultural Loans Act was passed only one year later? The answer to all these questions is not far to seek. While the loans advanced under the Agriculturists' Loans Act are, as provided in the Act, with the object of relieving the distress of agriculturists and for supplying seeds, etc., objects which would not improve the letting value of the land, the purpose of advancing loans under the Land Improvement Loans Act is specifically declared to be the improvement of the lands themselves. This would then mean that it was expected by the Legislature that the letting value of the lands would be improved, if the loans advanced by the Government were utilized for the purpose for which they were advanced, at least to the extent to which the money taken by the landlords under the Act was spent on them. In that case, the prior mortgagees could not be reasonably held to have suffered in regard to their security, as they had advanced money at the time when the improvements were not effected and the securities on which they had advanced their money would thus remain unaffected. It may be contended that the value of their securities enhanced by improvement effected with the funds advanced by the Government under the Act should not be permitted to be taken advantage of by prior mortgagees in the same way as they could have done if the mortgagors had effected improvements with their own funds. But this is a different matter. The Government could reasonably and perhaps justly insist that if any money was advanced by it under the Act, it would have priority to that extent in view of the fact that the lands have been improved with the funds provided on its behalf; and it would be unfair for the prior mortgagees to improve their position at the cost of the Government, which might not in that case agree to advance any money at all and the agriculturists would suffer in consequence. Looked at even from this point of view, the same result would follow and we must hold that the money advanced by the Government should have preceded and not followed the improvements effected on the land. The Government cannot therefore be allowed to have a priority in respect of advances applied for and made after the improvements were carried out with funds belonging to a private individual.

For the aforesaid reasons, we must hold that a sum of Rs. 4,150 out of Rs. 5,000 advanced by the Director of Industries, does not fall within S. 4 of the Land Improvement Loans Act and the appellant would not therefore have any priority to that extent over the plaintiffs.

As for the rest, the position is different. A sum of Rs. 675 was spent in constructing the Engine shed after the grant was made and Rs. 175 were allowed by the Director to make further improvements to the installation. Mr. Raghava Rao's contention that Rs. 175 were also paid for a past improvement does not appear to be correct (see Ex. XXXVI). This sum of Rs. 850 falls under S. 4 and could be recovered by the appellant under S. 7 of the Act with interest. The costs claimed by the Government against defendants 9-12 are not allowed and the appeal is in that respect rejected.

The result is that the appeal is allowed to this extent only and the decree of the lower Court would be modified accordingly.

As for costs, there is no reason why the respondents, who have succeeded to a large extent, should not be allowed to have them at least to the extent to which they have won. They would therefore have $\frac{1}{4}$ th of their costs in this Court and in the Court below.

The Second Appeal No. 296 of 1935 is also dismissed.

These appeals having been set down to be spoken to on Friday, the 29th July, 1938, the Court made the following ORDER.—It is now brought to our notice that before the hearing the guardian of minors 5 and 6 was dead. Adjourned one month to appoint a guardian for the minors. The drawing up of the decree will be postponed in the meanwhile.

The Corporation of Madras .. Respondent (Complainant).

Madras City Municipal Act (X of 1936), S. 217—Notice calling on owner to alter a street laid out by him—Lane with vacant plots on either side—If "street" under the Act.

The petitioner's land was parcelled out into 12 plots and sold to various purchasers leaving a passage about twelve feet in width for a lane; the title to which still vested in the petitioner. The petitioner was convicted for disobeying a notice by the Commissioner of the Corporation of Madras under S. 217 of the City Municipal Act calling on him to alter the street. On a petition for revision,

Held, this passage set apart for a lane would come under the definition of a street under the Act and it is not necessary that there should actually be rows of buildings on either side before a street comes into existence. The notice under S. 217 was legal and the conviction for disobeying the same was proper.

Corporation

ORDER.—The petitioner in this case was convicted under S. 380 of the Madras City Municipal Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 10 and in default of payment to undergo simple imprisonment for one week. The charge against him was that he failed to comply with a certain notice issued by the Commissioner of the Corporation of Madras under S. 217 of the Madras City Municipal Act. The notice Ex. A-2 is dated 3rd June, 1936 and it appears to have been served on the petitioner on the 6th July, 1936. It called upon the petitioner to alter a certain street which had been laid out by him in R.S. No. 828/2 of Mylapore without the orders of the Standing Committee. It is admitted that this notice was not obeyed and that what was required in that notice was not done by the petitioner either within the time allowed or till now. Disobedience therefore to the notice is clearly established and as the notice was one which was issued subsequent to the coming into force of the Act amending the Madras City Municipal Act (X of 1936) the new provision introduced by that Act as sub-S. 3 of S. 380 would apply to the present case and the conviction would be proper unless as contended on behalf of the petitioner the notice itself was an illegal one and was issued without any authority. The authority under which the notice was issued is stated to be S. 217 of the Act which says that:

"If any person lays out or makes any street referred to in S. 216 without or otherwise than in conformity with the orders of the Standing Committee the Commissioner may, by notice, require the offender to show sufficient cause why such a street should not be altered to the satisfaction of the Commissioner" and so on. S. 216 requires that:

"Any person intending to lay out or make a new private street must send to the Commissioner a written application with plans and sections" showing certain particulars. Admittedly the provisions of this section, that is, S. 216 were not observed by the petitioner in this case, and indeed it is his contention that he never intended to lay out or make a new private street at all. The question therefore resolves itself into this, namely, whether, when the petitioner sold his land, that is, R. S. No. 828/2 of Mylapore in 1934 to certain persons, he did intend to lay out or make a new private street. There is no doubt from the evidence that the land was parcelled out into as many as 12 plots for building purposes and sold to four or five purchasers leaving a passage about twelve feet in width. The petitioner himself in a letter of his dated 20th March, 1935, namely, Ex. II says that he has sold the lands leaving twelve feet from north to south and eleven feet from east to west and adds that the rest has been sold away. In his reply to a subsequent letter, namely, Ex. III-C, the petitioner says as follows:

"The whole plot has been sold away leaving twelve feet of land in the middle for a lane."

It is therefore clear that the twelve feet passage was left for the purpose of forming a lane. The sale deeds themselves have not been produced and it has not been shown that this twelve feet wide passage was included in any of the sale deeds. On the other hand from the admissions of D.W. 1 in cross-examination it would appear that the passage is not included in the area purchased by the purchasers and is not included in the pattas issued in their names. Presumably therefore the title to this particular portion of land which was left to form a lane is still vested in the petitioner. The learned advocate for the petitioner referred to *Robinson v. Local Board for Barton*¹, but in a case of the present nature we have to look more to the definition of the word "street", private or public, found in the Act itself rather than to English decisions as to the meaning of the word "street". The definition in the Act itself is clear and it shows that the passage set apart in the present case for the purpose of a lane would come under the definition of a street; it is not necessary that there should be rows of buildings on either side actually in existence before a street comes into existence so far as the provisions of the City Municipal Act are concerned. It is therefore in my opinion impossible to say that there was no street laid out in this case. It may be that nothing was done to the passage that was left to serve the purpose of a pathway. But nonetheless what was done would amount to laying down a new private street. In these circumstances, as the other facts are admitted, namely, that no plans were sent in respect of such a street and the street was laid out without the orders of the Standing Committee, the Commissioner was entitled in law to issue the notice in question. The disobedience to the notice is admitted and in these circumstances it cannot be said that the conviction of the petitioner is contrary to law. No complaint has been made about the severity of the sentence. The petition is therefore dismissed.

The award of separate sentences under S. 147 and Ss. 324, 325 and 342 read with S. 149 of the Indian Penal Code is illegal. S. 106 of Criminal Procedure Code is applicable.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under S. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Bellary, in his letter Dis. No. 3092 dated 24th June, 1938.

But the award of separate sentences under S. 147 and Ss. 324, 325 and 342 read with S. 149 of the Indian Penal Code is illegal and the separate sentences awarded under Ss. 324, 325 and 342 read with S. 149 of the Indian Penal Code are set aside. K. Rajah Aiyar and V. Ramaswami Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is an application for a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The facts as stated at the Bar are shortly these. The petitioner and the respondent are co-owners of a village in the Madura District, the petitioner owning one-third and the respondent two-thirds of the property. Through the village lands run two water channels, which have been referred to as A and B. Originally the wet cultivation of the village lands covered 200 kulis, roughly 110 acres. Of the 200 kulis the petitioner had 50 kulis and the respondent 150 kulis. In 1908 the petitioner brought under wet cultivation by means of Channel B an additional 14 kulis, which resulted in a suit being filed against him by the respondent for an injunction restraining him from using the channel for this purpose. The suit was compromised and the agreement arrived at was embodied in the decree. Under the decree the petitioner was allowed to cultivate the 14 kulis, but according to the respondent he was to

Guruvappa
Naicker
v.
Mounaguruswami

be restrained from cultivating any further area. The petitioner subsequently brought under wet cultivation a further 5 kulis obtaining the water from stream A. This resulted in an application being filed by the respondent in execution proceedings to restrain him. The contention was that by reason of the injunction which had been granted the petitioner was not entitled to bring under wet cultivation any additional land, either by means of the water from Channel A or from Channel B. The reply was that the injunction which had been granted only referred to Channel B. The District Judge of Madura dismissed the petition, being of the opinion that the petitioner was entitled to use the water from Channel A, notwithstanding the decree. An appeal followed to this Court. The appeal was allowed, this Court holding that the petitioner was not entitled to draw further water from either channel. The petitioner desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this decision.

The application for leave is opposed on the ground that the subject-matter is not of the value of Rs. 10,000. The application came before this Court in the first instance on the 9th February, 1939, and a report on the value of the property was called for from the District Judge. Before the District Judge it was conceded by the respondent that the value of the land belonging to the petitioner which is affected by the judgment of this Court is far more than Rs. 10,000. The value of the additional 5 kulis which the petitioner brought under cultivation and which resulted in the present proceedings is admittedly under Rs. 10,000. The petitioner says that in as much as the property affected by the decree is of the value of Rs. 10,000 he is entitled to the certificate under the second clause of S. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We consider that this contention is well founded. In *Radhakrishna Aiyar v. Sundaraswami*¹, the Judicial Committee observed:—

“In the first place, the sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceedings may, in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit.”

That is the position here. This is not a case of a person claiming a right in a property where the value of the property is over Rs. 10,000 and the value of the right is less than that amount. It is the construction of the agreement embodied in the compromise decree which is in dispute. If the decision of this Court stands it will mean that the petitioner will not be able to bring any further portion of his land under wet cultivation and his interest in the village is of far greater value than Rs. 10,000. The case reported in Mussamat Aliman v. Mussamat Hasiba is directly in point.

The application will be allowed on the usual conditions. The costs of this application will be made costs in the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 109, cl. (a)—“Final order” meaning of—Order of remand deciding one of the cardinal issues but leaving other issues undecided—If a final order.

“Final order” in S. 109, cl. (a) of Civil Procedure Code means an order which finally disposes of the rights of the parties and does not leave the suit a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined. The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit.

Where therefore in an appeal to the High Court from a decision of the lower Court in a suit for accounts, the High Court determined one of the important questions in the suit and remanded the case to the lower Court for determination of the other questions in the case, the order is not a final order within the meaning of S. 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, though the High Court might have decided one of the cardinal points in issue.

Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2610 of 1938.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Officiating Chief Justice.—These are applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the order of remand made by this Court in Appeals Nos. 57 and 235 of 1933. The applications have been made under S. 109, clause (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure and the question which we are called upon to decide is whether in passing the remand order we passed a final order within the meaning of the term “final order” as used in clause (a) of the section.

The above appeals arose out of a suit for accounts. The lower Court's decree was reversed and the suit was remanded for further enquiry. The suit was upon a promissory note for a sum of Rs. 60,000 in which the plaintiff and the defendants were interested in the proportion of 5/17: 2/17. The promissory note was in the possession of the defendants and they had the obligation to collect the amount due under it. One of the questions which arose in the case was, what was the rate of interest due under the note and how it should be calculated. The document mentioned no particular rate of interest beyond stating that it carried the ‘Rangoon nadapu rate’. The learned Subordinate Judge determined that interest should be calculated at the Rangoon nadapu rate calculating compound interest with half yearly rests. We decided that the plaintiff should be allowed to claim only simple interest at the Rangoon nadapu rate. The point was not seriously contested before us by the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the plaintiff. After deciding this question of interest we remanded the suit to the lower Court for disposal in the light of our observation on the other points involved in the case. At the end of our judgment we observed as follows:

“After receiving the Commissioner's report the learned Judge will fix a time for objections and after due consideration of the report and the objections he will pass a final decree for the amount ultimately found due from the defendants to the plaintiff calculating simple interest at the Rangoon nadapu rate till the date of the decree."

It may be mentioned here that the defendants contended amongst other things that certain collections under the promissory note had been made by the plaintiff and that certain securities which were entrusted to him were still with him. They also contended that no money would be found due from them if an account was taken.

It is now argued by the learned Counsel for the petitioner that, though the order is one of remand, inasmuch as it decides the question of interest, one of the questions involved in the suit, the order would fall within the description of "final order", because one of the main points at issue, or to use the term of the learned Advocate, one of the cardinal points at issue, had been decided by this Court. Various cases have been brought to our notice by the learned Counsel on both sides. It may be said that it is difficult to reconcile the decisions in some of the cases: but we do not propose to consider them, because in their latest pronouncement in *Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassin & Sons*¹, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have laid down clearly the principle to be applied in deciding this question. That was a case where the plaintiff after instituting the suit became insolvent and the Official Assignee who was joined as plaintiff declined to proceed with the suit in the absence of security. The trial Judge made a decree dismissing the suit. Upon appeal the learned Judges held that the cause of action was personal and did not vest in the Official Assignee but remained with the plaintiff who continued to be treated as a party on record; accordingly they set aside the decree and remanded the suit for trial. The question was whether that order came within the description of "final order". The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council appearing at page 65 of the report give a clear indication as to the meaning of the expression "final order". Their Lordships say:

"It should be noted that the appellate Court in India was of opinion that the order it had made 'went to the root of the suit, namely, the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it', and it was for this reason that the order was thought to be final and the certificate granted. But this was not sufficient. The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If, after the order, the suit is still a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined, no appeal lies against it under S. 109 (a) of the Code."

Further on their Lordships explain the principle thus:

"The effect of the order from which it is here sought to appeal was not to dispose finally of the rights of the parties. It no doubt decided an important, and even a vital, issue in the case, but it left the suit alive, and provided for its trial in the ordinary way."

Now, applying that test to the facts of this case it may be said that one of the issues has been decided in the case, that is, the issue as to the rate at which interest should be charged, but that does not dispose of finally the rights of the parties. The suit is still alive and has to be tried in the ordinary way. Our order gives merely the correct method of calculating the amount due from one party to the other. It may be that on calculating the interest as directed by us no amount is due from the defendants to the plaintiff. The two decisions relied upon by the learned Counsel for the petitioner, vis., *Rahimbhoy Habibhoy v. Turner*¹ and *Syed Mushar Hussein v. Radha Bibi*², were referred to by their Lordships and were distinguished by them as cases decided with reference to the old Civil Procedure Code. In support of their conclusion their Lordships refer to their own decision in Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand, which laid down, following the decision in English Courts, that the test of finality is whether the order "finally disposes of the rights of parties" and that if those rights are left to be "determined by the Courts in the ordinary way" there is no final decision in the case. These observations make it quite clear that the order in the present case cannot be said to be a final order. In view of the clear pronouncement by their Lordships it is not necessary to discuss the other cases referred to by the learned Counsel. In the circumstances we hold that the petitioner is not entitled to ask this Court to grant him leave to appeal under S. 109 (a).

We dismiss these applications with costs (one set in C. M. P. No. 2608 of 1938).

High Court not to interfere in revision.*

It is not any part of the legitimate duties of the High Court to help lower Courts to frame issues. They alone have jurisdiction to frame issues in suits which come before them for trial, and as their Lordships of the Privy Council have so often remarked, they have jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly.

Petition under Ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 224 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, dated 27th September, 1937 and made in I. A. No. 194 of 1937 in O. S. No. 7 of 1937.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for Petitioner.

K. Bashyam Aiyangar and T. R. Srinivasan for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is very clear to me that this is not a case for interference in revision under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The jurisdiction of the learned Subordinate Judge is not questioned. It could not be, since it is by law the duty of the trial Court to frame the issues. When I ask what is the illegality or material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction, Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar can say no more than that, in his view, the burden has been wrongly thrown on his client in issues 1, 3 and 6. But this, namely, which way the burden was to be thrown, was the precise question which the learned Subordinate Judge had to decide. There is no allegation that the learned Subordinate Judge has acted perversely or has omitted to consider anything which it was his duty to consider. The sole complaint against him is that he has come to the wrong decision. That, in my opinion, can never be a ground for interference in revision. With all respect to Mockett, J. and Stodart, J., whose decisions in Sri Tripurasundari Cotton Press Company, Ltd., Bezwada v. Venkata Gurunadha Ramaseshayaar and Natesan Chettiar v. Mariyayee Ammal have been cited before me on behalf of the petitioner, I prefer to follow the principles laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in Kristamma Naidu v. Chapa Naidus. It may well be said that it is the duty of this Court to interfere in revision to correct lower Courts when they act perversely; it can never be said that we should interfere with them in revision merely because they have decided wrongly. It is not, in my opinion, any part of the legitimate duties of this Court to help lower Courts to frame issues. They alone have jurisdiction to frame the issues in the suits which come before them for trial, and as their Lordships of the Privy Council have so often remarked, they have jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly.

Since there is not even an allegation of perversity against the learned Subordinate Judge I decline to consider the questions raised on their merits. I am satisfied that there is no ground for interference in revision under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and accordingly I dismiss this petition with costs.

from a willing purchaser is applicable even where the only possible purchaser of the potentiality of the land to be acquired is the person or authority clothed with the statutory powers of acquisition, and accordingly the assessor must in such a case ascertain to the best of his ability the price that would be paid by a willing purchaser to a willing vendor for the land with its potentiality in the same way as he would ascertain it in a case where there were several possible purchasers; and he is no more confined in the former case than he would be in the latter to awarding as compensation the value of similar land stripped of the potentiality attached to the land in question.

That the provision in S. 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, "But the Court shall not take into consideration fifthly, any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired" means no more than that the land must be valued as it stands at the date when the owner is notified under the Act of the intention to purchase it compulsorily, and not as it will stand when it has been acquired and when its potentiality has been exploited. The provision does not, however, mean that the possibility that a particular purchaser of land will give a higher price for it by reason of its possessing a special adaptability must be disregarded merely because the land will be more valuable in his hands when he exploits that adaptability than it would be if left in the hands of a vendor unable to exploit it. The land must be valued at the sum which the acquirer would in a friendly negotiation be willing to pay on the date of negotiation in order to exploit the land for the purposes which he has in mind.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court, Madras (Wadsworth and Stodart, J.J.), dated 4th. May, 1937, reversing an award of the Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, dated 11th September, 1933, made on a reference under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

The appellant was the owner of certain land known as Lova Gardens which adjoined on the south Vizagapatam Harbour which was being reconstructed. The land surrounding the harbour was in a malarial condition so serious as to be likely to keep from using the harbour the various enterprises which it was desired to attract to it. The appellant's land contained a spring with a large yield of pure water, the use of which would make possible the closing of the many wells in the villages surrounding the harbour, which wells formed the breeding grounds for malaria bearing mosquitoes. The upper part of the appellant's land consisted of the catchment area for the spring which on emerging from the ground flowed down the valley forming the lower part of the land. In order to divert the spring straight to the harbour, it was desired by the harbour commissioners, who in these proceedings were represented by the Revenue Divisional Officer, the respondent, to acquire compulsorily from the appellant a certain part of his land under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. The appellant was notified of this under S. 4 (1) on 13th February, 1928, the public purpose for which the land was needed being specified as the execution of anti-malarial works. The procedure laid down by Ss. 6, 7 and 8 of the Act having been followed, and the Collector having taken steps under Ss. 9, 10 and 11 to determine what compensation the appellant ought to receive, the latter on 5th January, 1929, filed a claim for compensation, claiming Rs. 3,96,730 in all. The Land Acquisition Officer having awarded the appellant Rs. 17,745, the latter had the matter referred to the Subordinate Judge who awarded him Rs. 1,20,750. The High Court having restored the Land Acquisition Officer's award, which had originally been paid to the appellant and received by him under protest, the appellant now appealed to His Majesty.

A. M. Dunne, K. C. and P. V. Subba Row for Appellant.—It was, it is submitted, a mistake on the part of the High Court to hold that the special adaptability of the appellant's land as a source of supply of drinking water had no value apart from the harbour commissioners' scheme, simply because they were the only possible purchasers of the land for that purpose. The fact that a certain authority are the only possible purchasers of a potentiality attaching to certain land does not mean that the authority are not willing to pay a sum representing that potentiality as increasing the value of the land. Counsel referred to *Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Clay*¹ and *Glass v. Inland Revenue*².

H. U. Willink, K.C., W. Wallach and W. W. K. A good way of illustrating the position is to consider an auction sale of the land. At such a sale of this particular land, there would attend, besides would be purchasers in the ordinary way, only one person interested in the potentiality of the land. As, however, he would have no competition from the ordinary purchasers, his bidding would add very little to the price fetched by the land apart from the potentiality; for the bidding at the sale generally will only rise just enough above the ordinary bidding level to enable the special purchaser to outbid the ordinary purchasers. *Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Further the fifth matter specified in S. 24 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, as something not to be taken into consideration in assessing compensation confirms the respondent's argument. The value of the land which is likely to accrue from the use to which the purchaser of the potentiality will put it has, by that enactment, to be disregarded. It is, therefore, not possible to fix compensation by reference to what that special purchaser might give in competition with other special purchasers.

LORD ROMER.—This appeal is concerned with the question of what is the proper sum to be awarded to the appellant by way of compensation in respect of the compulsory acquisition by the Vizagapatam Harbour Authority of certain land of his adjoining the Harbour, the respondent being the representative of such authority for the purposes of this appeal. The circumstances in which the land was acquired are as follows.

The Vizagatapam Harbour, the construction of which appears to have been begun in the year 1920, was formed by making excavations in swampy land situate to the south-west of the town of Vizagapatam and by dredging a deep water channel in the creek to the south of that town that led from the swampy land into the Bay of Bengal. On the south of the land acquired by the Harbour Authority for the purpose of these works is situated the property of the appellant known as the Lova Gardens. These gardens are formed by a valley which runs down from high ground on the south-west to low ground on the north-east adjoining the land of the Harbour Authority on the south of the above-mentioned creek. The upper portion of this valley consists of a shallow basin in the hills which forms the catchment area of a spring of water that emerges from the ground at the north-east end of the basin. This spring, which appears to yield even in the dry season an average flow of 50,000 gallons a day of excellent drinking water, is situated at a height of 150 feet above sea level. Until a part of it was diverted by the Harbour Authority, as narrated hereafter, the

The circumstances in which the land was acquired are as follows:

The Vizagapatam Harbour, the construction of which appears to have been begun in the year 1920, was formed by making excavations in swampy land situate to the south-west of the town of Vizagapatam and by dredging a deep water channel in the creek to the south of that town that led from the swampy land into the Bay of Bengal. On the south of the land acquired by the Harbour Authority for the purpose of these works is situated the property of the appellant known as the Lova Gardens. These gardens are formed by a valley which runs down from high ground on the south-west to low ground on the north-east adjoining the land of the Harbour Authority on the south of the above-mentioned creek. The upper portion of this valley consists of a shallow basin in the hills which forms the catchment area of a spring of water that emerges from the ground at the north-east end of the basin. This spring, which appears to yield even in the dry season an average flow of 50,000 gallons a day of excellent drinking water, is situated at a height of 150 feet above sea level. Until a part of it was diverted by the Harbour Authority, as narrated hereafter, the whole of the water from this spring ran down the valley to the lower end of Lova Gardens and from thence discharged itself into the creek. By the early part of the year 1926 the construction of the harbour had made considerable progress and it was hoped that it would be ready for opening by the end of 1929. With that end in view a portion of the harbour site had been allocated by the Harbour Authority for the purpose of being used by oil companies and other industrial concerns. The entire south side of the harbour had indeed been allocated for industrial purposes. But the harbour land was very malarious, and so, too, was much of the land to the south of the harbour, including the lower part of the Lova Gardens; a circumstance that gave rise to some anxiety in the minds of the Harbour Authority. They accordingly consulted Mr. Senior White, who is an expert upon the subject, and upon the 1st May, 1926, that gentleman, after making an "anti-malarial survey" of the area, embodied the results of his survey in a report. This report disclosed a serious state of affairs in the villages situated in the area of which there appear to have been at that time no less than 32 of which nine were on the south side of the creek. These villages, or many of them, seem to have been dependent upon wells for their water supply, and these wells formed breeding grounds for the malaria-bearing mosquitoes. It is plain from the report that persons carrying on business at the harbour would run a serious risk of contracting malaria as matters then stood, and this would greatly hamper the development of the harbour site for industrial purposes. Further, as Mr. White pointed out, there was the possibility of shipping at the quays becoming infected, and the mere possibility, which had already been suggested in the Indian Press, was detrimental to the interest of the port. It appears from a letter written by Mr. Rattenbury, the Deputy Engineer in Chief to the Harbour Authority, dated the 14th July, 1926, that in these circumstances, Mr. White was "very keen on closing the wells along the south side", and this, the letter adds, could be done if a gravity water supply were provided instead. Such a supply could be furnished by the spring at the upper end of Lova Gardens, and accordingly the Harbour Authority conceived the idea of using the water from the spring for the purpose of freeing the harbour from malaria. But apart altogether from the assistance that this supply of water would give to the prevention of malaria, there was much to justify its acquisition on its own merits, as was pointed out in a letter of the 2nd October, 1926, written by one of the harbour officials. For the water could be made available as a supply to the oil companies and other industrial concerns that might be established in the southern part of the harbour area. The method of utilizing the water for these purposes that was ultimately adopted was this: The water was to be diverted from the lower part of the valley to which reference has been made and led from a short distance below the spring directly to the harbour area by means of a tunnel to be made through the hilly land to the north-west of the valley. This scheme, which was in due course carried out and is now in operation, involved the acquisition from the appellant of the shallow basin forming the catchment area of the spring, the site of the spring itself, and a narrow strip of land below the spring. In due course the necessary steps were taken for the compulsory acquisition of this land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, the notification under S. 4 (1) of the Act being given on the 13th February, 1928. the public purpose for which the land was needed was stated in the notification to be the execution of anti-malarial works, the total area to be acquired from the appellant being 108.9 acres. Of this acreage the catchment area, including the site of the spring referred to as 2-1D and 2-1E, accounted for 105.92 acres, and the land below the spring referred to as 2-1B (0.53 acres), 2-1C (0.48 acres) and 2-3B (1.97 acres) accounted for the rest.

After the giving of the notification, and the procedure laid down in Ss. 6, 7 and 8 of the Act having been followed, the Collector took the steps prescribed by Ss. 9, 10 and 11 to determine the compensation that ought to be allowed to the appellant for his land. It is provided by S. 15 of the Act that in so doing, the Collector shall be guided by the provisions contained in Ss. 23 and 24, and it will be convenient before continuing this narrative to turn to these provisions. So far as material to the present purpose they are as follows:—

“23.—(1) In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the Court shall take into consideration—first, the market-value of the land at the date of the publication of the Notification under S. 4 (1); secondly, the damage sustained by the person interested, by reason of the taking of any standing crops or trees which may be on the land at the time of the Collector's taking possession thereof;

thirdly, the damage (if any) sustained by the person interested, at the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land, by reason of severing such land from his other land;

fourthly, the damage (if any) sustained by the person interested, at the time of the Collector's taking possession of the land, by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property, movable or immovable, in any other manner, or his earnings.

24. But the Court shall not take into consideration—first, the degree of urgency which has led to the acquisition;

secondly, any disinclination of the person interested to part with the land acquired; fifthly, any increase to the value of the land acquired likely to accrue from the use to which it will be put when acquired."

The general principles for determining compensation that are specified in these sections differ in no material respect from those upon which compensation was awarded in this country under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, before the coming into operation of the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act of 1919. As was said by Wadsworth, J., when giving judgment in the High Court in the present case, "It is well settled that English decisions under the Lands Clauses Act of 1845 lay down principles which are equally applicable to proceedings under the Indian Act". The compensation must be determined, therefore, by reference to the price which a willing vendor might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser. The disinclination of the vendor to part with his land and the urgent necessity of the purchaser to buy must alike be disregarded. Neither must be considered as acting under compulsion. This is implied in the common saying that the value of the land is not to be estimated at its value to the purchaser. But this does not mean that the fact that some particular purchaser might desire the land more than others is to be disregarded. The wish of a particular purchaser, though not his compulsion, may always be taken into consideration for what it is worth. But the question of what it may be worth, that is to say, to what extent it should affect the compensation to be awarded, is one that will be dealt with later in this judgment. It may also be observed in passing that it is often said that it is the value of the land to the vendor that has to be estimated. This, however, is not in strictness accurate. The land, for instance, may have for the vendor, a sentimental value far in excess of its "market value". But the compensation must not be increased by reason of any such consideration. The vendor is to be treated as a vendor willing to sell at "the market price"; to use the words of S. 23 of the Indian Act. It is perhaps desirable in this connection to say something about this expression "the market price". There is not in general any market for land in the sense in which one speaks of a market for shares or a market for sugar or any like commodity. The value of any such article at any particular time can readily be ascertained by the prices being obtained for similar articles in the market. In the case of land, its value in general can also be measured by a consideration of the prices that have been obtained in the past for land of similar quality and in similar positions, and this is what must be meant in general by "the market value" in S. 23. But sometimes it happens that the land to be valued possesses some unusual, and it may be, unique features, as regards its position or its potentialities. In such a case the arbitrator in determining its value will have no market value to guide him, and he will have to ascertain as best he may from the materials before him, what a willing vendor might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser, for the land in that particular position and with those particular potentialities. For it has been established by numerous authorities that the land is not to be valued merely by reference to the use to which it is being put at the time at which its value has to be determined [that time under the Indian Act being the date of the notification under S. 4 (1)], but also by reference to the uses to which it is reasonably capable of being put in the future. No authority indeed is required for this proposition. It is a self-evident one. No one can suppose in the case of land which is certain, or even likely, to be used in the immediate or reasonably near future for building purposes, but which at the valuation date is waste land or is being used for agricultural purposes, that the owner, however willing a vendor, will be content to sell the land for its value as waste or agricultural land as the case may be. It is plain that, in ascertaining its value, the possibility of its being used for building purposes would have to be taken into account. It is equally plain, however, that the land must not be valued as though it had already been built upon, a proposition that is embodied in S. 24 (5) of the Act and is sometimes expressed by saying that it is the possibilities of the land and not its realised possibilities that must be taken into consideration.

But how is the increase accruing to the value of the land by reason of its potentialities or possibilities to be measured? In the case instanced above of land possessing the possibility of being used for building purposes, the arbitrator (which expression in this judgment includes any person who has to determine the value) would probably have before him evidence of the prices paid, in the neighbourhood, for land immediately required for such purposes. He would then have to deduct from the value so ascertained such a sum as he would think proper by reason of the degree of possibility that the land might never be so required or might not be so required for a considerable time. In the case, however, of land possessing potentialities of such an unusual nature that the arbitrator has not similar cases to guide him, the value of the land must be ascertained in some other way. In such a case, moreover, there will, in all probability, be only a very limited number of persons capable of turning the potentialities of the land to account.

If the owner of the land is the only person who can do so, the value to him must be ascertained by reference to what profit he might thereby have been able to derive from the land in the future. Take as an example the case of an owner of vacant land that adjoins his factory. The land possesses the potentiality of being profitably used for an extension of the factory. But the owner is the only person who can turn that potentiality to account. In valuing the land, however, as between him and a willing purchaser, the value to him of the potentiality would necessarily have to be included.

The same consideration will apply to cases where the owner is not the only person but merely one of the persons able to turn the potentiality to account. The value to him of the potentiality will not be less than the profit that would accrue to him by making use of it had he retained it in his own possession. But now take the case where the owner is himself unable to turn the potentiality to account whether by promotion of a company or otherwise. In such a case there may be several other persons who would be able to do so, or there may be only one. If there are more than one, it is recognised by all the authorities that have been cited to their Lordships, and seems to be consistent with common sense, that the owner is entitled to be paid the value to him of the potentiality, though the ascertainment of its value may in many cases be a matter of considerable difficulty.

It has been suggested that in order to ascertain it, the arbitrator is to hold an imaginary auction. But with all respect to those who have made the suggestion, their Lordships are unable to see how this is going to help the arbitrator. At such imaginary auction, all possible purchasers must, no doubt, be imagined as attending. They will include, therefore, persons who are in no way interested in the land's potentialities, and such persons will bid no higher price than the value of similar land without its potentialities. This value in this judgment is referred to as the "poramboke" value. But they will also include what may be called the purchasers of the potentialities. There may also be present some speculative buyers who will be willing to bid more than the "poramboke" value upon the chance of being able to resell to a purchaser of the potentiality at a profit. It would seem, however, logically, that such purchasers should be disregarded. For the object of the imaginary auction is to discover what a purchaser of the potentiality will be willing to pay for it, and this cannot depend upon the presence at the auction of persons willing to pay less, unless it be that such ultimate purchaser is to be considered willing to pay whatever fantastic price he may be forced up to by competition. And no one suggests this.

Proceeding, therefore, with the imaginary auction at which are present two classes of buyers—namely, the "poramboke buyers" and the "potentiality buyers",—the former will disappear from the bidding as soon as the "poramboke" value has been reached, and the bidding will thereafter be confined to the "potentiality buyers." But at what figure will this bidding stop? As already pointed out, it cannot be imagined as going on until the ultimate purchaser has been driven by the competition up to a fantastic price. For he is ex hypothesi a willing purchaser and not one who is by circumstances forced to buy. Nor can the bidding be imagined to stop at the first advance on the "poramboke" value. For the vendor is a willing vendor and not one compelled by circumstances to sell his potentiality for anything that he can get. The arbitrator will, therefore, continue the imaginary bidding until a bid is reached which, in the arbitrator's estimate, represents the true value to the vendor of the potentiality. The auction will, therefore, have been an entire waste of the arbitrator's imagination. If the value of the potentiality be Rs. X, the imaginary auction will have taken place to ascertain the value of X from the imaginary bidding, and all that can be said is that the bidding will stop at Rs. X.

The truth of the matter is that the value of the potentiality must be ascertained by the arbitrator on such materials as are available to him and without indulging in feats of the imagination.

Their Lordships would not have thought it necessary to deal with this question of the imaginary auction at such length, were it not for the fact that in the argument before them the respondent's counsel endeavoured to show, by reference to such an auction, that when there was only one possible purchaser of the potentiality the value of it to the vendor was nil—that is to say that the value of the land with the potentiality was substantially nothing in excess of its value without it. This argument, it may be observed, commended itself to Lord Cullen in the Scottish case of *Glass v. Inland Revenue*¹, referred to below, but was rejected by the majority of the Court.

Upon the question of the value of the potentiality where there is only one possible purchaser, there are some authorities to which their Lordships will have to refer. But dealing with the matter apart from authority it would seem that the value should be the sum which the arbitrator estimates a willing purchaser will pay and not what a purchaser will pay under compulsion. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that, at an auction where there is only one possible purchaser of the potentiality, the bidding will only rise above the "poramboke" value sufficiently to enable the land to be knocked down to that purchaser. But, if the potentiality is of value to the vendor if there happen to be two or more possible purchasers of it, it is difficult to see why he should be willing to part with it for nothing merely because there is only one purchaser. To compel him to do so is to treat him as a vendor parting with his land under compulsion and not as a willing vendor. The fact is that the only possible purchaser of a potentiality is usually quite willing to pay for it. An instance of this is to be found in the case of *Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Clay*². That was a case under S. 25 (1) of the Finance (1909-1910) Act, 1910, and is not perhaps strictly relevant to the present case. The facts of it, however, are worth recalling. There was a house of which the value to anyone except certain trustees was no more than £750. These trustees were the owners of a nurses' home which adjoined the house, and they were desirous of extending their premises. They accordingly purchased the house for £1,000, the owner thus receiving £250 for the potentiality his house possessed by reason of its position adjoining the nurses' home. It was held by the Court of Appeal that £1,000 was the value of the house to a willing seller. "To say", said Lord Cozens Hardy, M.R., "that a small farm in the middle of a wealthy landowner's estate is to be valued without reference to the fact that he will probably be willing to pay a large price, but solely with reference to its ordinary agricultural value, seems to me absurd". Had the house in that case been acquired compulsorily by a railway company, or local authority under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, before its purchase by the trustees, the house ought, in their Lordships' opinion, and for the reasons already given, to have been valued at £1,000 and not merely at £750.

A case in many respects similar to *Clay's case*¹ is that of *Glass v. Inland Revenue*². That also was a case arising under the Finance (1909-1910) Act, 1910, and was one where land of an agricultural value of £3,379 had been sold in 1911 to certain Water Commissioners for £5,000, they being the only possible purchasers of the land for other than agricultural purposes. It was held that in valuing the land as on the 30th April, 1909, the possibility that the Commissioners might give more than the agricultural value for the land must be taken into consideration. In Lord Johnston's words, it was necessary in order to fix the value of the land on the 30th April, 1909, to ascertain:

"What is to be attributed to the probability of the Water Commissioners, in the circumstances, desiring to acquire the property, and what figure in a friendly negotiation they would be prepared to pay for it."

But however this may be, it is said that the matter assumes a totally different complexion when the only possible purchaser is the one who has obtained the compulsory powers of purchase, and that this has been established by authorities that should be followed by this Board. Of these authorities, the first one to which reference need be made is that of *In re Gough and The Aspatria, Silloth and District Joint Water Board*¹. In that case it was not proved that the acquiring authority was the only possible purchaser and it may be that all that the Court of Appeal decided was that it was not incumbent upon the claimant for compensation to specify that any particular body of persons were possible purchasers, though the judgment of Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., seems quite consistent with the view that the potentiality must be valued, even if the acquiring authority be its only possible purchaser. But it is contended that Sir Richard Henn Collins, M.R., expressed the contrary view. After referring to the particular adaptability of the land that was in question and that it ought to find a place in the estimate of the amount of compensation, he said (423) :—

1. (1914) 3 K.B. 466.

2. (1915) S.C. 449.

"That view is supported by authority and long practice; but underlying it is the question, which is one of fact for the Arbitrator, whether there is a possible market for the site, and in determining that the statutory purchase is not to be considered."

But the Master of the Rolls said that the purchase, not the purchaser, was to be left out of consideration. Any enhanced value attaching to the land by reason of the fact that it has been compulsorily acquired for the purpose of the acquiring authority must always be disregarded, and the Master of the Rolls meant no more than that. The case of *Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board*² must, nowever, be considered in greater detail, for it is on certain dicta of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in that case that the respondent chiefly relies. The land that had been compulsorily acquired in that case had potentialities for which the acquiring authority was not the only possible purchaser. The point now being considered did not, therefore, arise for decision. But in the Court below, Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, In re,³ Bray, J., had said this :—

"I come back to the question whether the fact that no buyer for reservoir purposes can be found, except a buyer who has obtained parliamentary powers, prevents the special value of the land being marketable. In my opinion the answer I ought to give to that question is 'No'."

In the Court of Appeal, Vaughan Williams, L.J., said (p. 25) :—

"I agree with Bray, J., that the fact that no buyer for reservoir purposes can be found except a buyer who has obtained parliamentary powers does not prevent the special value being marketable," and stated that one of his reasons for so agreeing was that the fact that the board (who were the acquiring authority) might themselves become possible purchasers who would give a special price for the land, ought, to be considered. Fletcher Moulton, L.J., however, said that the decided cases to his mind laid down the principle that, when the special value exists only for the particular purchaser who has obtained powers of compulsory purchase, it cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the price, because to do otherwise would be to allow the existence of the scheme to enhance the value of the land to be purchased under it. He added that where there were other possible purchasers there would be competition among them and this fact would enhance the market price. The learned Lord Justice did not specify the authorities which laid down the principle in question and their Lordships are not aware of any that would justify it. It must, of course, be conceded that the existence of the scheme must not be allowed to enhance the price, if by "scheme" is meant the fact that compulsory powers of acquisition have been obtained for the purpose of carrying into effect a particular scheme for the profitable use of the potentiality. The valuation must always be made as though no such powers had been acquired, and the only use that can be made of the scheme is as evidence that the acquiring authority can properly be regarded as possible purchasers. But their Lordships have some difficulty in seeing why the taking into consideration of the fact that the special value exists for those purchasers only should be said to be allowing the existence of the scheme to enhance the value of the lands. The only difference that the scheme has made is that the acquiring authority, who before the scheme were possible purchasers only, have become purchasers who are under a pressing need to acquire the land; and that is a circumstance that is never allowed to enhance the value. If, on the other hand, the Lord Justice meant by "the scheme" the intention formed by the acquiring authority of exploiting the potentiality of the land, his statement can only mean that the value of the land is not to be enhanced by the fact that they are possible purchasers. The result of this would be that, even in a case where there are two or more possible purchasers, their existence must not be allowed to enhance the value. For each purchaser must be deemed to have a scheme in the sense supposed, and the enhancement of value due to their competition which the Lord Justice envisages will in fact be due to the "schemes". In these circumstances their Lordships are not prepared to follow the dictum of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in the *Lucas case*¹, and prefer the opinion there expressed by Vaughan Williams, L.J. It is said, however, that the dictum of Fletcher Moulton, L.J., has already received the approval of this Board on more than one occasion. But in no case to which their Lordships' attention has been called was the question of the effect of there being only one possible purchaser of the land being considered by the Board, and any approval of the statement of the law by the Lord Justice must be regarded merely as an approval of such statement so far as it affected the particular question then before the Board. It is sufficient in this connection to refer to two of such cases. In *Cedars Rapids Manufacturing and Power Company v. Lacoste*², Lord Dunedin, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said this:—

"The law of Canada as regards the principles upon which compensation for land taken is to be awarded is the same as the law of England and it has been explained in numerous cases, nowhere with greater precision than in the case of *In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board*³, where Vaughan Williams and Fletcher Moulton, L.JJ., deal with the whole subject exhaustively and accurately."

As has already been pointed out, the opinions of the two Lords Justices upon the question now being considered were diametrically opposed to one another. The other case is that of *Fraser v. City of Fraserville*⁴, where Lord Buckmaster, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said (p. 194):—

"The principles which regulate the fixing of compensation of lands compulsorily acquired have been the subject of many decisions, and among the most recent are those of *In re Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board*¹, *Cedars Rapids Manufacturing and Power Co. v. Lacoste*² and *Sidney v. North Eastern Railway Co.*⁴ The principles of those cases are carefully and correctly considered in the judgments the subject of appeal, and the substance of them is this: that the value to be ascertained is the value to the seller of the property in its actual condition at the time of expropriation with all its existing advantages and with all its possibilities, excluding any advantage due to the carrying out of the scheme for which the property is compulsorily acquired, the question of what is the scheme being a question of fact for the arbitrator in each case."

It will be observed that Lord Buckmaster makes no reference whatsoever to the present question. But in one of the cases to which the noble and learned Lord referred—namely, Sidney v. North Eastern Railway Co.,⁴ Rowlatt, J., is thought to have said much the same as had been said by Fletcher Moulton, L.J. In that case certain land possessed the potentiality of being used for the purposes of a railway. That potentiality was capable of being turned to account by a railway company who had obtained compulsory powers of acquiring it and by the proprietor of an adjoining colliery. In assessing the compensation to be paid by the railway company for the land, the arbitrator took into account the possibility that, but for its acquisition by the railway company, the colliery proprietor might have purchased it, but he did not take into consideration the possibility that the company might in friendly negotiation have been willing to pay more for it than the colliery proprietor. In their Lordships' opinion he was wrong in this. The Divisional Court, however, on a case stated, upheld the decision of the arbitrator. In the course of his judgment Rowlatt, J., said this:—

“Now if and so long as there are several competitors including the actual taker who may be regarded as possibly in the market for purposes such as those of the scheme, the possibility of their offering for the land is an element of the value in no respect differing from that afforded by the possibility of offers for it for other purposes. As such it is admissible as truly market value to the owner and not merely value to the taker. But when the price is reached at which all other competition must be taken to fail to what can any further value be attributed? The point has been reached when the owner is offered more than the land is worth to him for his own purposes and all that any one else would offer him except one person, the promoter, who is now, though he was not before, freed from competition. Apart from compulsory powers, the owner need not sell to that one and that one would need to make higher and yet higher offers. In respect of what would he make them? There can only be one answer—in respect of the value to him for his scheme. And he is only driven to make such offers because of the unwillingness of the owner to sell without obtaining for himself a share in that value. Nothing representing this can be allowed.”

If and so far as this means that the value to be ascertained is the price that would be paid by a willing purchaser to a willing vendor, and not the price that would be paid by a “driven” purchaser to an unwilling vendor, their Lordships agree. But so far as it means that the possibility of the promoter as a willing purchaser being willing to pay more than other competitors, or in cases where he is the only purchaser of the potentiality, more than the value of the land without the potentiality is to be disregarded, their Lordships venture respectfully to differ from the learned Judge.

For these reasons, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that, even where the only possible purchaser of the land's potentiality is the authority that has obtained the compulsory powers, the arbitrator in awarding compensation must ascertain to the best of his ability the price that would be paid by a willing purchaser to a willing vendor of the land with its potentiality in the same way that he would ascertain it in a case where there are several possible purchasers and that he is no more confined to awarding the land's "poramboke" value in the former case than he is in the latter.

It is now necessary to take up once more the narrative of the events that have led up to this appeal. On the 5th January, 1929, the appellant filed his claim for compensation. It was certainly not lacking in courage, but it was lacking strangely enough in any suggestion that the land had a potential value as a source from which water might be supplied to persons or corporations outside Lova Gardens. He did, however, allege that Lova Gardens had a valuable potentiality as a building site and that such potentiality would be destroyed if he were deprived of the spring. He accordingly claimed Rs. 2,50,000 in this respect, calling it "Damages sustained by severance", though in strictness it should have been called damages sustained by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property. He also claimed Rs. 1,200 per acre in respect of the land and Rs. 16,050 as the value of the masonry structures, roads, and trees on the land, the total claim amounting to Rs. 3,96,730.

On the 18th January, 1929, the Land Acquisition Officer made his award. He allowed in all a sum of Rs. 17,745-1-3 including the 15 per cent. addition prescribed by S. 23 (2) of the Act. It appears from the grounds of award bearing the same date that he thought nothing of the potentiality of Lova Gardens as a building site, and the existence of any such potentiality has now disappeared from the case and need not be referred to again. He valued the land at Rs. 50 an acre with the exception of the land numbered 2-3B which he valued at Rs. 300 an acre. As to the claim in respect of "Damages sustained by severance", he thought that the rest of the appellant's land was probably better off without the water from the spring than with it. The lower part of the gardens, which was marshy and malarious, had too much water as it was. In any case he considered that the appellant would be amply compensated for the loss of the spring water by the Rs. 5,000 that he awarded under this head. The appellant's claim of Rs. 2,50,000 was, he said, preposterous. He also awarded a sum of Rs. 4,493 in respect of trees and buildings. The appellant thereupon required that the matter should be referred to the Court for determination under S. 18 of the Act, and in due course it came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam. It was then claimed on the appellant's behalf that the spring could, but for its acquisition, have been used by him as a source of water supply either to the Harbour Authority or to the oil companies and others residing or carrying on business in the harbour area; and the appellant claimed to be compensated upon this footing. After a lengthy hearing before him, in the course of which many questions of law and fact not now in issue were discussed, the learned Judge made his award. He found as a fact, and the fact cannot be disputed, that the water of the spring was on the 13th February, 1928, capable of being used as a source of water supply to persons outside the plaintiff's land. He also found that the only possible buyers of the water at that date were the Harbour Authority itself and the oil companies and labour camps that might be established as a result of the development of the harbour, and stated that this fact would be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of compensation. But, after considering the authorities on the subject, he came to the conclusion as a matter of law that the value to a vendor of a potentiality of his land can be assessed even though there are no other possible purchasers beyond the acquiring authority. Other principles of law stated by him for his guidance in making his award were that it was the contingent possibility of the user that had to be taken as the basis of valuation and not the realised possibility, and that the use to which the acquiring authority had actually put the property could be taken as a strong piece of evidence to show that the property acquired could be put to such use by the owner at the date of acquisition. Applying these principles, he found that the value of the land acquired, including the spring, was Rs. 1,05,000, which, with the addition of the 15 per cent. under S. 23 (2) of the Act, amounted to Rs. 1,20,750. The Rs. 17,745-1-3 awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer had been paid to the appellant and received by him under protest, and deducting this sum from the Rs. 1,20,750, there remained Rs. 1,03,004-14-9 due to the appellant. This sum he decreed in favour of the appellant with certain interest. The valuation of Rs. 1,05,000 was arrived at in this way. Evidence had been given before the learned Judge by two witnesses on behalf of the appellant as to what would be a proper charge for water supplied to the harbour area from the spring, and they estimated the charge at Re. 1-8-0 per 1,000 gallons. The learned Judge, however, said that taking into consideration the conclusions arrived at by him, which were presumably the conclusions of law and findings of fact referred to above, he thought it would be reasonable and proper to fix the value of the acquired property, that is, the water source on the date of the acquisition on the basis of Re. 1 per 1,000 gallons. Taking the normal supply of water at 50,000 gallons a day, this gave as the gross annual value of the water the sum of Rs. 18,250. He estimated that maintenance charges, depreciation of machinery, and interest on the capital outlay, would come to Rs. 12,273; but, taking these items at the round figure of Rs. 13,000, the net annual income from the spring would be Rs. 5,250. This he capitalised at 20 years' purchase, and so arrived at the Rs. 1,05,000. Having regard, amongst other things, to the extravagant claims put forward by the appellant in the first instance he awarded him no costs.

From this decision an appeal was taken by the present respondent to the High Court at Madras, the appellant lodging a memorandum of cross-objections to the valuation of the Subordinate Judge which need not be specified. The appeal was heard by Wadsworth and Stodart, JJ., and judgment allowing the appeal was delivered on the 4th May, 1937. The reasons for this decision given by Wadsworth, J., in whose judgment Stodart, J., concurred, may be summarised as follows:—

The scheme for utilisation of the water and the carrying out of anti-malarial operations in the valley (that is, the Lova Gardens) was not really an independent scheme. It was linked up with a bigger scheme for getting rid of breeding places of mosquitoes all round the southern side of the harbour so as to make the whole of that area fit for development. At the time when this scheme was promulgated the whole of that area was undeveloped. It was full of malaria and was incapable of any profitable use apart from the success of the anti-malarial campaign of which this acquisition was part. It was not conceivable that the present appellant himself would ever have been able to develop a water supply scheme, carrying out the necessary anti-malarial works and thereby encouraging business concerns to occupy the harbour land and buy water from him. The conclusion, therefore, must be that the special adaptability of the land for the supply of drinking water had no value apart from the scheme for which the acquisition was made.

The Harbour Authority, therefore, was at the date of the notification the only reasonably possible purchaser for the drinking water supply on the appellant's land and this being so, the Subordinate Judge had erred in awarding compensation for the special adaptability of the land to supply drinking water to persons outside the appellant's land. After referring to the authorities and, in particular, the dictum of Fletcher Moulton, L. J., in the Lucas case (supra), he said:—

"There can be little doubt that this exposition of the law when applied to the facts of the present case as we have found them would justify the conclusion that no value can be awarded to the special adaptability of this land for supplying drinking water to the harbour alone, if it can be shown that the land cannot have any value as a source of drinking water to anyone else."

By the harbour the learned Judge meant, of course, the Harbour Authority. Stodart, J., who, as already stated, concurred in the judgment of Wadsworth, J., added that:—

"It is not contended that any other public authority or private undertaker except the Harbour Authority would ever have come forward to develop this area and make it habitable. Thus the value of the . . . spring as a source of drinking water. . . arose entirely from the Anti-Malarial Scheme carried out by the Harbour Authority and depended on the success of that scheme. To my mind S. 24, sub-S. (5) of the Land Acquisition Act is completely applicable to the facts of this case."

The appeal was accordingly allowed with costs there and below and the award of the Land Acquisition officer was restored in toto. The memorandum of cross-objections was dismissed with costs. From that judgment, the necessary leave having been obtained, the appellant now appeals to His Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court that on the 13th February, 1928, the only really possible purchasers of the special adaptability of the appellant's land as a water supply was the Harbour Authority. The position at that time was that the harbour was so far advanced that its opening in a few years was in contemplation. It was expected that, when that had taken place, oil companies and other industrial concerns, with their attendant labour camps, would be attracted to the harbour area, and they would all require to be supplied with water. It is plain that neither the appellant nor any purchaser from him would encounter any engineering difficulties in conducting the water from the spring to the southern boundary of the harbour area. Nor would they encounter any engineering difficulty in conducting the water from that boundary to the premises of the oil companies and other concerns. They would, however, have had to obtain the consent of the Harbour Authority to lay the necessary pipes in the harbour area itself and the possibility of such consent being refused would have to be taken into consideration in estimating the value to the appellant of the special adaptability of his land, though the risk of such consent being refused was not a serious one, assuming that there was no other source from which the water could be profitably supplied by the Harbour Authority itself. There was, however, on the 13th February, 1928, a much more serious matter to be taken into consideration. As already pointed out, the harbour area was at that date a highly malarious place, little calculated to prove attractive as a site for any industrial concern. Unless, therefore, this state of affairs was remedied, there would be no customers for the appellant's water and the value to him of the special adaptability was nil. Now it is true that there was a practical certainty of the Harbour Authority's taking steps to render the site as free as possible from malaria; for, if they did not, the harbour would not be used to any great extent even as a port of call. But, in order to carry out the necessary anti-malarial works, it was essential for the Harbour Authority to obtain a supply of drinking water from some source other than the wells in the area which were largely responsible for the malarious condition of the area and were going to be closed. The appellant on the 13th February, 1928, would therefore have been in this dilemma. If the only other source of water were the appellant's spring, the Harbour Authority would be the only possible purchaser. If, on the other hand, the Authority could obtain water from other sources sufficient both for the anti-malarial work and the supply of the traders in the harbour area, the appellant would almost certainly be refused permission to carry his competing supply over the Authority's land. In point of fact there was at one time an alternative scheme on foot for obtaining water known as the Meghadrigedda Scheme. The scheme was to be for the benefit of the Municipality of Vizagapatam, the Bengal Nagpur Railway and the Harbour.

The scheme aimed at a supply of one million gallons a day of which the harbour was to have 150,000 gallons a day. The scheme has not been proceeded with, but it is impossible to say what would have been done about it had the spring in the Lova Gardens not been acquired. In these circumstances the possibility of the appellant's water being made available for the harbour by anyone other than the Harbour Authority was altogether negligible, and the only enhancement in the value to the appellant of his land by reason of its special adaptability as a water supply was the sum that the Harbour Authority, as a willing purchaser, would have been willing to give in excess of the land's "poramboke" value.

Their Lordships have given their reasons for thinking, contrary to the view taken by the High Court, that such sum must be taken into consideration in fixing the compensation payable to the appellant, and that such sum is not to be treated as being a negligible one merely because the Harbour Authority was the only possible purchaser.

It remains to deal with S. 24 (5) of the Land Acquisition Act. That sub-section as applied to the present case means no more than this: that in valuing the appellant's land on 13th February, 1928, it must be valued as it then stood, and not as it would stand when the land had been acquired and the water on it used for ridding the harbour area of malaria. The Harbour Authority would otherwise be made to pay for the water twice over. But the sub-section does not mean that the possibility that a particular purchaser of land will give a higher price for it by reason of its possessing a special adaptability must be disregarded merely because the land will be more valuable in his hands when he exploits that adaptability than it would be if left in the hands of the vendor who was unable to exploit it. In Clay's case (supra), for instance, the house after being added to the nurses' home was no doubt more valuable than it was before. That, indeed, was the reason why the trustees of the home paid £250 more than any other purchaser would have paid. The house in that case was held to be of the value of £1,000, not because that was its value after being put to the use for which it was acquired, but because that was the price which the willing purchaser was prepared to pay for its acquisition. In the present case the land must be valued not at the sum it would be worth after it had been acquired by the Harbour Authority and used for anti-malarial purposes, but at the sum that the Authority "in a friendly negotiation" (to use Lord Johnston's words) would be willing to pay on the 13th February, 1928, in order to acquire it for those purposes.

Returning to the award made in the present case by the learned Subordinate Judge, it is to be observed that, in valuing the land with its special adaptability as being worth Rs. 1,05,000, to the appellant, he did so on the footing that the appellant would himself have been in a position to supply the water to the harbour but for its compulsory acquisition by the Harbour Authority. He would also seem to have so valued it upon the footing that the spring could have been made an income-earning concern on the 13th February, 1928. He would otherwise have made a substantial discount from the Rs. 1,05,000. It is plain, therefore, that in view of the fact that the water could not be exploited by the appellant himself and that it would necessarily be some years before the water would become a profit-earning asset in their hands, the Harbour Authority, however willing purchasers they might be, would not have agreed to pay anything like that sum. In these circumstances the matter should in strictness be referred back to the Subordinate Judge to revise his award. Both the parties to this appeal, however, have asked their Lordships, with a view to saving expense, to state what should be the proper amount of the award, and this their Lordships have consented to do. Giving the matter the best consideration they can, their Lordships are of opinion that the total price which the Harbour Authority would have been willing to pay on the 13th February, 1928, for the land acquired, is the sum of Rs. 40,000, and this sum with the additional 15 per cent. amounts to Rs. 46,000. In their Lordships' judgment the order of the High Court of the 4th May, 1937, should be discharged except in so far as it dismissed the present appellant's memorandum of objections with costs. The amount decreed by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the appellant should be reduced from Rs. 1,03,004-14-9 to Rs. 28,254-14-9 with interest as stated in his award. His order as to costs must stand. But the respondent must pay the appellant's costs before the High Court and his costs of this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 66 (2)—Order of Income-tax Commissioner under S. 33 merely confirming an order of the Income-tax Officer without mentioning the question of law—If involves question of law under S. 66 (2)—Order refusing to revise “prejudicial order”—If “prejudicial” to assessee under S. 66 (2).

If the Commissioner dismisses the petition under S. 33 without mentioning the question of law (supposing one arises on the order complained of), the Commissioner's order must be read with the order of the Income-tax Officer.

An order which dismisses an application asking for the revision of a prejudicial order must be deemed to be “prejudicial” within the meaning of S. 66 (2), and an application for reference is competent.

N.A.S.V. Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (1934) 68 M.L.J. 227: I.L.R. 58 Mad. 367: 8 I.T.C. 74 (F.B.), overruled.

The application came up for hearing before the Chief Justice, Madhavan Nair and Varadachariar, JJ.

A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax that no order had been passed under S. 33 which was ‘prejudicial’ to the assessee.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax. It is said that the application for reference is incompetent and reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in *N.A.S.V. Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹, where it was held that the words ‘otherwise prejudicial’ appearing in S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act meant an order made by the Commissioner altering the position of an assessee or applicant to that person's prejudice. If the order of the Income-tax Commissioner merely confirmed an order, this would not amount to passing an order prejudicial to the petitioner or applicant under this section. It seems to us that this question is open to further argument and must be referred to a Full Bench of five Judges. The question referred will be in these words:—

"Was N.A.S.V. Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras,¹ rightly decided?"

K. Bhimasankaran for Petitioner.

M. Patanjali Sastri for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS: The Chief Justice.—The question which has been referred is whether the case of N. A. S. V. Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras,¹ was rightly decided. The answer depends on the meaning to be given to the word 'prejudicial' in S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act. S. 66 (2) states that within sixty days of the date on which he is served with notice of an order under S. 33 enhancing an assessment or otherwise prejudicial to him the assessee may require the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of the order. S. 33 authorises the Commissioner of Income-tax of his own motion to call for the record of a proceeding under the Act which has been taken by an authority subordinate to him or by himself when exercising the power of an Assistant Commissioner under sub-S. (4) of S. 5, and having called for the record he is empowered, subject to the provisions of the Act, to pass such order as he thinks fit, but he may not pass an order prejudicial to an assessee without hearing him or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard. The section makes no mention of the right of an assessee to move the Commissioner to take action but as the Commissioner may take action of his own motion the assessee must have the right of calling his attention to a prejudicial order and of asking that action be taken. This in fact frequently happens.

In Venkatachalam Chettiar's case,¹ the petitioner applied to the Income-tax Officer for a refund of income-tax under S. 48 of the Act, but his application was refused. The petitioner then filed an application asking the Commissioner to revise the order of the Income-tax Officer under S. 33. Having heard the application the Commissioner refused to interfere. The petitioner then required the Commissioner to refer the matter to the High Court under S. 66 (2) of the Act as involving a question of law. The Commissioner dismissed the application on the ground that it was incompetent. His reason was that his order under S. 33 was not one enhancing the assessment or otherwise prejudicial to the applicant. In accepting this interpretation, Beasley, C.J., observed:—

"What S. 33 clearly contemplates is an order made by the Commissioner which alters the position of an assessee or an applicant to that person's prejudice. In this particular case, his position had been prejudiced already by the refusal of the Income-tax Officer to grant him the refund which he required. The Commissioner's order did no more than leave him in that position and, it is quite clear to us, was not an order which was prejudicial to the petitioner in the sense intended, namely, that his position at that time, that is, the date of the Commissioner's order, was altered by that order to one of prejudice to him."

With these observations the other Judges (Ramesam and King, JJ.) agreed.

With great respect I am unable to accept this interpretation. It means that the Commissioner's order must be more prejudicial than the order complained of before it can come within the purview of S. 66 (2). The section does not say so. All that it contemplates is a prejudicial order. It seems to me that if an order of the Income-tax Officer is prejudicial an order which confirms it or rejects an application asking that it be revised is also prejudicial. It could not be said that a decree of an appellate Court dismissing an appeal from a Court of first instance is not prejudicial to the appellant. It is just as prejudicial as the original decree. There is no difference in this respect between the dismissal of an appeal and the dismissal of an application for revision when the law permits such an application to be made.

In expressing this opinion I have not lost sight of the first proviso to S. 66 (2), which reads as follows:—

"Provided that a reference shall lie from an order under S. 33 only on a question of law arising out of that order itself, and not on a question of law arising out of a previous order under S. 31 or S. 32 revised by the order under S. 33."

S. 66 (2) also applies to orders made under Ss. 31 and 32. Mr. Patanjali Sastri has suggested that the proviso only relates to orders under Ss. 31 and 32 revised under S. 33. In other words he asks the Court to read the second part of the proviso as governing the first part. I do not read it in that way. I consider the effect of the proviso to be this. A reference shall lie only when a question of law arises out of the order passed under S. 33 but if the matter is one which relates to an order under S. 31 or S. 32 a question of law which arose out of the previous order alone cannot be referred.

Reading the first part of the proviso as standing alone it does not mean that the Commissioner can render the provisions of sub-S. (2) nugatory by dismissing the assessee's petition without stating his reasons. When the Commissioner receives a petition filed under S. 33 it is his duty to consider it and pass an order on it. If the petition relates to an order of the Income-tax Officer the consideration of the petition involves the consideration of the Income-tax Officer's order and if the Commissioner dismisses the petition without mentioning the question of law, supposing one arises on the order complained of, the Commissioner's order must be read with the order of the Income-tax Officer. Whether a question of law arises on an order of the Commissioner passed on an application under S. 33 will depend on the circumstances of the particular case, but because a question of law is not set out in an order does not necessarily follow that a question of law does not arise. The Commissioner cannot, of course, be required to receive a frivolous or belated petition.

Our attention has been drawn to the case of *The Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces*¹, in which the Nagpur High Court followed the decision in *Venkatachalam Chettiar's case*² and considered the first proviso to S. 66 (2). The Court accepted *Venkatachalam Chettiar's case*², without discussing it and therefore its judgment does not carry the matter further. With regard to the proviso the Court considered that its true intent is that a question of law that is common to both the Assistant Commissioner's and the Commissioner's order is not a proper subject-matter of a reference unless the question of law is raised on a reference from the decision of the Assistant Commissioner. This question does not arise in the present case and we are not called upon to discuss it.

The answer that I would give to the question referred is that N. A. S. V. Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, r. 62—Mortgage of 1917—Attachment before judgment of some mortgaged properties in 1918—Sale to mortgagee a few months later—Sale by attaching decree-holder in execution—Claim petition by mortgagee—Sale held invalid but mortgage recognised—No suit under O. 21, r. 63—Effect of sale to mortgagee—Effect of claim order—Court auction-purchaser if can plead extinguishment of mortgage—T.P. Act, S. 101—Applicability of.

A suit was filed to recover money due on a mortgage for Rs. 3,000 executed in plaintiff's favour by defendants 1 to 3 and their father on 13th March, 1917. In August, 1918, a third party who had a money claim against the mortgagors attached some of the mortgaged items before judgment. On 2nd October, 1918, the mortgagors purported to sell the mortgaged items to the plaintiff under Ex. I partly for the mortgage amount and partly for a further consideration of Rs. 441. When the money-decree-holder brought the properties to sale in execution, the plaintiff filed a claim petition on 29th September, 1920. He set up his sale and in the alternative his mortgage. The executing Court held that the sale being subsequent to the attachment was invalid against the attaching decree-holder but directed the sale to be held subject to the mortgage "referred to by the decree-holder". The property was so sold and purchased by decree-holder and later conveyed by him to seventh defendant. As a result plaintiff lost possession of some items and retained possession of the others. So he filed this suit for recovery of the amount on foot of the mortgage. The seventh defendant, relying on I.L.R. 57 M. 195, contended that the sale must be deemed to have extinguished the mortgage and that the later events could not revive the plaintiff's claim under the mortgage.

So the sale was gone and the Court only sold the equity of redemption. But in Daso Polai v. Narayana Patro, (1933) 65 M.L.J. 819: I.L.R. 57 Mad. 195, claim petition was dismissed as late and therefore it was not possible to say that the Court upheld the mortgage there.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of East Godavari at Rajahmundry in O.S. No. 1 of 1932.

K. Bhimasankaran for Appellant.

P. Somasundaram for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Varadachariar, J.—The appellant sued to recover money due under a mortgage deed for Rs. 3,000 executed in his favour by defendants 1 to 3 and their father on 13th March, 1917. The seventh defendant was the principal contesting defendant. His defence was in the main founded upon certain events that happened in 1918 and 1920.

In August, 1918, a third party who had a money claim against the mortgagors attached some of the mortgaged items, before judgment, pending his money suit against them. On 2nd October, 1918, the mortgagors purported to sell the mortgaged items to the plaintiff under the original of Ex. I partly for the mortgage amount and partly for a further consideration of Rs. 441. When the money decree-holder attempted to bring the properties to sale on the basis of the attachment already made, the plaintiff filed a claim petition (Ex. G) on 29th September, 1920. In this petition she claimed one of two reliefs: she set up her sale and asked that the property should be released from attachment, in the alternative, she asked that even if the sale should be held to be invalid as against the attaching decree-holder, the execution sale should be directed to be held subject to the mortgage in her favour. It appears from the endorsement on Ex. G that the decree-holder himself had referred in his sale proclamation to the mortgage in the plaintiff's favour but suggested that it was supported by consideration only to the extent of Rs. 2,500. When the matter came on for final disposal the executing Court held that the sale having been effected subsequent to the attachment was invalid as against the decree-holder and it directed the sale to be held subject to the mortgage "referred to by the decree-holder." The property was accordingly sold subject to the mortgage and purchased by the decree-holder himself, who in turn conveyed it to the seventh defendant as the result of a decree for specific performance of an agreement entered into between them. The result of the execution sale was that the plaintiff was deprived of possession of items 1, 2 and 4 to 6 of the plaint schedule and retained possession only of items 3 and 7. The plaintiff accordingly filed this suit for the recovery of the amount due under the mortgage, contending that as the sale had failed, he was entitled to fall back upon the mortgage. The seventh defendant contended that the sale must be deemed to have extinguished the mortgage and that the subsequent events could not revive the plaintiff's claim under the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge gave effect to this contention and dismissed the suit. The seventh defendant raised other contentions which formed the subject-matter of the other issues raised in the case. One of them was a plea of partial discharge which forms the subject-matter of the fourth issue. Another was a claim that the plaintiff should give credit as against the mortgage amount and the interest due thereon for the profits realised by him during the time that he had been in possession of the properties sold to him. Finally there was a question of the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to recover in view of the fact that he still retains as vendee two items of the hypotheca.

So far as the lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit, we are unable to concur in its decision. The decision is mainly based on the judgment of this Court in *Daso Polai v. Narayana Patro*¹. We shall presently show that that case is distinguishable on its facts; but we think it right to add that we are, with all respect, unable to concur in some of the observations in that case. In the present case, the order Ex. G-1 was clearly an order under O. 21, r. 62, Civil Procedure Code. As we have already stated, the plaintiff put forward alternative claims in his claim petition—one on foot of the sale in his favour and the other on foot of the mortgage. The Court rejected the claim based on the sale but upheld the claim based on the mortgage. Neither party took steps to impeach that order and it became conclusive between the claimant and the decree-holder in the money suit. The Court accordingly purported to sell only the equity of redemption and the decree-holder (who became the auction purchaser) having purchased only the equity of redemption could convey only that interest to the present seventh defendant. In respect of these facts the position in *Daso Polai v. Narayana Patro*¹ was very different. The claim petition there was dismissed as preferred too late and as no suit was brought by the claimant under O. 21, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, that order became final. It was in those circumstances impossible to imply any adjudication that the claim founded on the mortgage was well founded. The learned Judges had therefore to hold that the reference to the mortgage in the sale proceedings amounted to nothing more than a notice to intending purchasers under r. 66 of O. 21, Civil Procedure Code. It is on that footing that they held that the Court auction purchaser was not precluded from contesting the existence or validity of the mortgage. On the facts of the present case as we have set out above neither the decree-holder in the money suit nor the Court auction purchaser nor the seventh defendant as the purchaser from him could go behind the order in the claim proceedings which upheld the mortgage claim. We may also point out that in *Daso Polai v. Narayana Patro*¹, the learned Judges laid stress on the fact that even in the claim petition the claim based on the mortgage was never put forward and that the claimant insisted that the mortgage had been discharged by the sale deed in his favour. The conclusion reached in that case that the mortgage had been extinguished has largely been based upon this ground. That ground also will not avail the seventh defendant in this case because as already stated the claim was put forward both on the mortgage and on the sale. The portion of the judgment with which we are unable to agree is the interpretation which the learned Judges have placed on S. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. With all respect we think that in a case like the present it must be presumed that it is to the advantage of the mortgagee to keep his interest as mortgagee and his interest as purchaser of the equity of redemption distinct because of the intervening attachment against which his sale cannot be effective.

The question in this class of cases is not whether the sale is not effective as between the vendor and the vendee, but whether there being the possibility of the sale proving ineffective as against a third party, it is not to the interest of the mortgagee not to treat his mortgage, as extinguished by the sale. In the application of this principle of presumed intention, it makes no difference whether the third party is allowed to claim in preference to the sale, on the ground of his being a subsequent encumbrancer or on the ground of his being an attaching decree-holder. If the decree in pursuance of which the attachment was made is paid off, the sale will of course stand as between the vendor and the vendee and the mortgage will be satisfied. But if in pursuance of the attachment the properties are brought to sale in execution, the vendee is deprived of his rights under the sale to the extent to which the properties are sold in execution and we think that there is no meaning in saying that even to this extent, the sale is operative as between the vendor and the vendee. This seems to us to be the principle of the decision in *Gopal Sahoo v. Gunga Pershad Sahoo*¹, which we are prepared to follow. The learned Subordinate Judge distinguished that case as a decision under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 according to which he thought that a transfer pending an attachment was wholly void whereas under the present Code, it is voidable only as against the rights enforceable under the attachment. This distinction drawn by the learned Judge is obviously erroneous. The law has always been that transfer pending an attachment is void only as against the rights enforceable under the attachment.

The learned Counsel for the respondent drew our attention to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in *Lachman Prasad v. Lachmeshwar Prasad*². With all respect, we are unable to follow that decision. The sale was there made to the father of the mortgagee and the father was a member of a joint Hindu family with the mortgagee. The sale deed directed that a portion of the consideration should be applied by the vendee to discharge the mortgage bond in favour of his son. The learned Judges observed that the father and the son must be treated as virtually one and the same person and that the direction to the father to pay off the mortgage must be treated as an extinction of the mortgage debt. We do not find any reference in the judgment to the principle of S. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the leading case in *Gokuldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das*¹, their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to the practice prevailing in England of circumventing the doctrine of *Toulmin v. Steere*², by taking a conveyance of the equity of redemption in favour of trustees for the benefit of the prior mortgagee and added that in India it was unnecessary to resort to this conveyancing device and as a rule of equity the principle of presumed intention to keep the mortgage alive might be applied. It seems to us that what was done in the Allahabad case was practically the conveyancing device referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Gokuldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukhdas*¹ and if even under the decision in *Toulmin v. Steere*², such a device would have prevented the extinction of the mortgage, we venture to think with all respect that it would be a fortiori so in this country.

lakshmi

Varada-
chariar, J.

Though S. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act has generally been invoked in cases where the rights of mesne encumbrancers come up for decision, the principle of the section is not limited to those cases. It only lays down a general rule of presumed intention and where the later conveyance will be inoperative as against any intermediate right whether founded on an encumbrance or on an attachment, the principle must be held equally to apply. In *Dinabundhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasi*³, this question had to be considered in respect of the effect of an intermediate attachment, as in the present case, and their Lordships observed (at p. 164):

"It is idle to contend that there was any intention to extinguish the old mortgages for the benefit of the execution creditor or any purchaser at the sheriff's sale."

We must accordingly hold that the plaintiffs' claim under the suit mortgage has not been extinguished by the subsequent sale and that it is enforceable in the events that have happened.

Maha-

v.

Varada-
chariar, J.

Mr. Somasundaram next contended that according to the proper construction of the order. (Ex. G-1) the mortgage must be held to be valid only to the extent of Rs. 2,500. We do not think that is the effect of the order. The only point then decided was that as between the sale and the mortgage the Court upheld the mortgage and negated the claim under the sale. This is made clear by the use of the words 'mortgage referred to by the decree-holder' instead of words like 'mortgage admitted by the decree-holder'. The Court has now found that the mortgage was fully supported by consideration and nothing has been shown against the correctness of that finding.

It remains to deal with two other questions raised by Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of the seventh defendant. He first contended that the lower Court's finding on the fourth issue was not in accordance with the evidence and that the issue should have been found in his client's favour. This relates to a plea of discharge, it being the seventh defendant's case that in or about April, 1925, he paid to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,950 in full quit of so much of the mortgage debt as would be recoverable from the properties agreed to be purchased by the seventh defendant. Though the seventh defendant is not able to fix the exact date of payment, he states that the agreement between himself and the Court auction purchaser was in February, 1925, and that the payment to the plaintiff was about two months later. Though the learned Sub-Judge has not discussed in detail the evidence bearing upon this question, he has clearly indicated that he was not impressed by the evidence adduced in support of the plea of discharge. We have been taken by Mr. Somasundaram through the relevant portions of the oral evidence, and we see no reason to come to a different conclusion. The seventh defendant has not thought fit to take any voucher for the payment of such a large sum of money nor has he even cared to insist upon the payment being endorsed on the mortgage bond. Even according to his version, the plaintiff promised to make the endorsement in due course and yet, after the plaintiff had failed to do so for more than a year, the seventh defendant never even thought fit to send any notice to the plaintiff complaining of her conduct. Further, the seventh defendant's evidence as to the circumstances under which the alleged payment was made and the manner in which he found the money to make the payment, is not at all convincing. It is very doubtful if at or about this time he had the money to pay at all. D.W. 1 whose help has been availed of to support this story apparently because he had to receive some money from the plaintiff, is the son-in-law of the seventh defendant's brother and assuming it to be true, that he had to receive a sum of Rs. 200 from the plaintiff and did receive it about this time, we are not, by any means satisfied that there is any connection between that transaction and the alleged payment by the seventh defendant to the plaintiff. The remaining witnesses who support this story of payment do not really seem to have had anything to do with the transactions between the plaintiff and the seventh defendant and, as one of them admits, it is probably the seventh defendant's local influence that has enabled him to get these witnesses to support his story. We must accordingly find against the seventh defendant on his plea of alleged discharge.

The second issue raised the question of the accountability of the plaintiff for the profits received by her from the lands which had been purchased by the seventh defendant. The law on this point is not, by any means, settled. We may observe in passing that the observations in Muthammal v. Rasu Pillai are not wholly reconcilable with the view taken in *Natesan Chettiar v. Ramalinga Chettiar*¹. As we do not propose to decide the question as an abstract question of law in this case, we do not think it necessary to refer to the cases in detail. We only wish to guard ourselves against being understood as concurring in all the observations in *Natesan Chettiar v. Ramalinga Chettiar*². For instance, the statement that a purchase by a prior mortgagee in execution of a decree obtained in his suit without impleading the puisne mortgagee therein is a nullity and will not be effective even to pass the title of the mortgagor as against the puisne mortgagee seems to us too broadly stated. In the circumstances of the present case and in view of the fact that a petition has been filed before us on behalf of the seventh defendant for relief under the Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), we think it best to hold that no accounting is necessary and it would be more equitable to say that after 23rd October, 1920, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim interest as against the seventh defendant to the extent of the proportion of the mortgage debt recoverable from the properties in the seventh defendant's possession. In this view, there is no occasion in our opinion, to deal with the petition under Madras Act IV of 1938, either. As the plaintiff has become the owner of the equity of redemption in some of the items of the mortgage property, the mortgage must be held to have been split up and the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree only for a proportionate share of the mortgage debt as against the properties purchased by the seventh defendant.

The parties are not able to agree before us as to the proportion. The lower Court will ascertain the amount due for principal and interest as per terms of the mortgage bond, on 23rd October, 1920, the date on which the seventh defendant's vendor became the Court auction purchaser; out of that amount, there will be a decree for sale of the properties purchased in that Court sale by the seventh defendant's vendor for an amount bearing the same proportion to the mortgage debt due on that date as the said properties bear to the entirety of the mortgaged properties valued as on the date of the mortgage.

The appeal is allowed and the case will be sent back to the lower Court to give effect to the above directions and pass a preliminary decree for sale for the amount ascertained as above. The plaintiff and the seventh defendant will pay and receive proportionate costs both here and in the Court below.

On the question whether a plaintiff, who has obtained a decree directing an enquiry as to damages, is entitled to invoke the aid of O. 21, r. 41, Civil Procedure Code, in order to enable him to effect an attachment in pursuance of the right given to him under O. 21, r. 42, Civil Procedure Code,

Held, that he is entitled to the benefit of that provision and the Court is vested with the discretion whether to give relief under O. 21, r. 41 or not.

*Application No. 2666 of 1938 in
C. S. No. 57 of 1934.

30th January, 1939.

Bivi Ammal v. Union Bank, Ltd., A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 771, relied on.

Up to the passing of the present Code the law is fairly clear that the holder of a decree directing inquiry into mesne profits can apply to the Court to have the judgment-debtor examined in order to ascertain what property he is possessed of for the purpose of effecting an attachment of the property in order to enable him to get satisfaction of his decree.

O. 21, r. 42 replaces S. 255 of the Code of 1877, 1882 and O. 21, r. 41 replaces S. 267 of the Code of 1877, 1882. The only difference introduced in the new Code is where a decree directs an inquiry into the mesne profits, the inquiry is in the suit itself and not by way of execution; but still the principle of S. 255 is retained in enacting O. 21, r. 42. This seems to indicate that partial execution is permitted in the case of a decree directing an inquiry into mesne profits pending final ascertainment of the same. But the interpretation adopted under the old Code in regard to a decree for unascertained mesne profits or to a similar relief would still hold good. See Ramasami Aiyar v. Vedambal Ammal, (1934) 67 M.L.J. 303; I.L.R. 58 Mad. 233; Sharada Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee, (1867) 8 W.R. 9 and *Viragharava Aiyangar v. The Court delivered the following.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether a plaintiff who has obtained a decree directing an enquiry as to damages is entitled to invoke the aid of O. 21, r. 41, Civil Procedure Code, in order to enable him to effect an attachment in pursuance of the right given to him under O. 21, r. 42, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Master took the view that he is not entitled to the benefit of O. 21, r. 41, Civil Procedure Code. The language of O. 21, rr. 41 and 42 prima facie tends in favour of the said view. The words 'as in the case of an ordinary decree for the payment of money' in O. 21, r. 42 would seem to indicate that a decree directing an enquiry as to rent or mesne profits or any other matter like the one in question, damages, is not a decree for payment of money. But on a close examination of the sections in the light afforded by the history of the sections and the interpretation placed on the corresponding provisions in the prior Codes of Civil Procedure, I have come to a different conclusion. In the Code of 1859 there was no provision corresponding to O. 21, r. 42, Civil Procedure Code. The relevant sections of the said Code bearing on the matter are Ss. 201, 232 and 219. S. 201, so far as it is relevant for the purpose of this case, runs thus:

"If the decree be for money, it shall be enforced by the imprisonment of the party against whom the decree is made, or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both if necessary."

S. 232 is in these terms:—

"If the decree be for money, and the amount thereof is to be levied from the property of the person against whom the same may have been pronounced, the Court shall cause the property to be attached in the manner following."

In *Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee*¹, there was a decree for possession and mesne profits the amount of which had to be determined in the course of the execution. It was held that the decree for mesne profits was a decree for money within the meaning of S. 232 of Act VIII of 1859. After getting possession of the property in pursuance of the decree an application for attachment of certain property was made and effected and after the amount of mesne profits had been determined, the sale of the property took place. Objection was taken to the legality of the sale on the ground that there was no legal attachment of the property previous to the sale. This contention was negatived both by Justice Jackson and Justice Hobhouse on the ground that the decree for mesne profits was a decree for money and attachment could be effected in pursuance of such a decree. Justice Jackson remarked thus:

"This decree, it seems to me, was a decree for money within the terms of S. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, that being so, I see no irregularity in the decree-holder applying for attachment of the judgment-debtor's property, so that the property might be held in attachment, and protected from alienation pending the ascertainment of wassilat, that is of the precise amount of money due. This, it appears, is precisely what happened in the present case. The enquiry into the amount of wassilat was going on, and the property was held under attachment, and, when the amount of wassilat had been determined, and not until then, notice of sale was issued, and the sale took place. The sale, therefore, at any rate, was in satisfaction of a decree for money of which the amount had been by that time ascertained."

To the similar effect Justice Hobhouse says:—

"Then, as to the attachment, I think that this decree was, in reality, a decree for money. It did not and could not have stated the exact amount of money; it did state that a certain amount of wassilat or mesne profits was to be ascertained and obtained. That being so, it was a decree for money, and, being a decree for money under Ss. 232 and 235 of the Civil Procedure Code, an attachment properly followed upon the decree."

In the view taken by the learned Judges, namely, that though the amount of mesne profits, was to be ascertained the decree represented a sum of money and was therefore a decree for money, S. 219 of the Code would be applicable, and that section ran thus:—

* Before granting the order for a general attachment, or at the instance of the plaintiff at any time after judgment, and before complete execution of the decree, the Court may summon the person against whom the application is made, and examine him as to the property liable to be seized in satisfaction of the judgment. The Court may also of its own motion or at the instance of any person interested in the enquiry, summon any other person whom it may think necessary and examine him in respect to such property, and may require the person summoned to produce all deeds and documents in his possession or power relating to such property."

From the language of the section it is clear that that section can be availed of by a decree-holder after judgment and before complete execution of the decree and in the case of preliminary decrees complete execution cannot be had till the amount is finally fixed. Two years after the decision in *Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee*¹, Sir Barnes Peacock observed that where a decree awarded possession and directed an enquiry as to mesne profits the decree as to mesne profits could not be executed until they were ascertained. (*Haro Sanker Sandyal v. Tarak Chandra Bhattacharjee*².) Justice Jackson was a party to this judgment. It was with reference to this view that the legislature in enacting the Code of 1877 replaced Ss. 230 and 231 by Ss. 254 and 255 which ran thus:—

"S. 254.—Every decree or order directing a party to pay money, as compensation or costs, or as the alternative to some other relief granted by the decree or order, or otherwise, may be enforced by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or by the attachment and sale of his property in manner hereafter provided, or by both."

"S. 255.—If the decree be for mesne profits, or any other matter the amount of which in money is to be subsequently determined, the property of the judgment-debtor may, before the amount due from him under the decree has been ascertained, be attached as in the case of an ordinary decree for money."

S. 254, replaced Ss. 201 and 232 of the Code of 1859 and S. 255 has been enacted in accordance with the decision in *Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee*¹. The use of the word 'ordinary' in S. 255 is significant. The Legislature has used that word to mark the difference between a decree for money simpliciter and a composite decree for possession and mesne profits which would not be strictly a decree for money. Therefore the use of the words "as in the case of an ordinary decree for the payment of money" clearly show that in a case where a decree directs an inquiry as to mesne profits the decree so far as the mesne profits are concerned would be a decree for money though it may not be an ordinary decree for money. In Viraraghava Aiyangar v. Varada Aiyangara, a question arose whether a decree for mesne profits was a decree for money. The petitioner in that case who held a decree for mesne profits, not yet ascertained, applied on 28th June, 1881, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam to stay the sale of the judgment-debtor's land which was being brought in execution of another decree in order that he might attach the land in execution of his decree. This application was rejected on 29th June, on which date the property was also sold. On the same date after the rejection of the application the said petitioner applied to the Court for a rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale. The question was whether he would be entitled to such a rateable distribution under S. 295 of the Code. Held he would be. The judgment of the Court (Turner, C. J. and Muttuswami Aiyar, J.) was delivered by Turner, C. J., who remarked thus:—

"The decree held by the petitioner for mesne profits was a decree for money. Although the amount was still uncertain, the petitioner had applied to the Court to execute that decree. He had not only petitioned that the mesne profits should be ascertained but he had applied on 1st April, 1881, to attach certain immovable property under S. 255. He came within the purview of S. 295."

Therefore the decision is a clear authority for the position that a decree directing an inquiry as to mesne profits is a decree for money within the meaning of Ss. 255 and 295. S. 295 imposes two conditions; the decree-holder who applied for rateable distribution must hold a decree for money and he must have applied for the execution of the said decree. Therefore, the said decision clearly implies that both the conditions were fulfilled in the case thus further implying that the application for attachment under S. 285 would be an application for execution. Of course under the Codes of 1859, 1877 and 1882 an enquiry into unascertained rent or mesne profits was to be had only in execution and therefore it may be taken that the application for attachment was made in the course of the application for the execution of the decree. In this view therefore such a decree-holder can certainly invoke the provisions of S. 267 of the Code of 1877 which replaced S. 219 of the Code of 1859 and which section ran thus:—

"The Court may, of its own motion or on the application of the decree-holder, summon any person whom it thinks necessary, and examine him in respect to any property liable to be seized in satisfaction of the decree, and may require the person summoned to produce any document in his possession or power relating to such property, and before issuing the summons of its own motion, shall declare the person on whose behalf the summons is so issued."

It will be seen that this section is very general in its terms. The decision in *Viraraghava Aiyangar v. Varada Aiyangar*¹, was followed in *Ramaswami Aiyar v. Rama Aiyar*², a decision under the Code of 1882. The question there was whether a decree for unascertained mesne profits was a decree for money and might be attached in the mode prescribed by S. 273 of the Code which now corresponds to O. 21, r. 53 of the present Code. The learned Judges (Muttuswami Aiyar and Wilkinson, JJ.) observed thus:—

"As observed by Hobhouse, J., in *Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee*³, with reference to S. 232, Act VIII of 1859, the decree was a decree for money in the sense that it represented a sum of money to be ascertained hereafter. It was also held in *Viraraghava Aiyangar v. Varada Aiyangar*¹, that the holder of a decree for unascertained mesne profits is of a money decree for the purpose of claiming rateable distribution under S. 295."

Therefore up to the passing of the present Code the law is fairly clear that the holder of a decree directing inquiry into mesne profits can apply to the Court to have the judgment-debtor examined in order to ascertain what property he is possessed of for the purpose of effecting an attachment of the property in order to enable him to get satisfaction of his decree. Of course the purpose of the attachment is, as pointed out in *Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee*³, to serve as a measure of protection to the decree-holder, to prevent the judgment-debtor from alienating the property and to enable the decree-holder to obtain satisfaction of his decree.

The question is, has there been any change in the law under the present Code? O. 21, r. 42 replaces S. 255 of the Code of 1877, 1882 and O. 21, r. 41 replaces S. 267 of the Code of 1877, 1882; the only difference introduced in the Code is that where a decree directs an inquiry into the mesne profits the enquiry is in the suit itself and not by way of execution; but still the principle of S. 255 is retained in enacting O. 21, r. 42. This seems to indicate that a partial execution is permitted in the case of a decree directing an inquiry into mesne profits pending the final ascertainment of the same. But the interpretation adopted under the old Code in regard to a decree for unascertained mesne profits or to a similar relief would still hold good and that was the view taken by a Bench of this Court (Madhavan Nair and Jackson, JJ.), in a case reported in *Ramasami Aiyar v. Vedambal Ammal*¹. They have followed *Viraraghava Aiyangar v. Varada Aiyangar*², and held that in spite of the difference in procedure in the ascertainment of mesne profits, a decree directing an inquiry into mesne profits would be a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of O. 21, r. 42 so as to entitle such a decree-holder to obtain a rateable distribution under S. 73 of the present Code. Madhavan Nair, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court referring to O. 21, r. 42 observed thus:—

“This provision, in our opinion, treats the attachment, as a proceeding in execution of the decree and the application for attachment may well therefore be treated as one for execution.”

In this view therefore O. 21, r. 41 would be applicable to the case. As pointed out by me in the decision reported in Bivi Ammal v. Union Bank, Ltd.,³ the Court is vested with the discretion to give the relief under O. 21, r. 41 or not. In the view taken by the learned Master, I find that he has not gone into that question. I therefore reverse the decision of the learned Master and send the application back to him for considering whether in the circumstances of the case he would exercise his discretion and issue an order for the examination of the judgment-debtor as prayed for by the applicant. The costs of the appeal will abide the result.

and hence a final decree for sale was subsequently passed by the trial Court. The appeal against the preliminary decree was dismissed subsequently and later, that is, within three years from the date of the appellate decree, the decree-holder applied for execution of the final decree. Objection was taken by the appellant that execution application was filed late and was barred by limitation as it was filed more than three years after the passing of the final decree. Another point raised was that the decree-holders were not entitled to execute the final decree obtained by them before the dismissal of the appeal against the preliminary decree, but should have obtained a fresh final decree after the decision of the appeal against the preliminary decree,

The Chief Justice.—The appellant was the defendant in a suit on a mortgage filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Parapanangadi. A preliminary decree was passed against him on the 21st July, 1925 and he preferred an appeal. No stay of the proceedings in the trial Court was obtained pending the hearing of this appeal and on the 9th November, 1925, the District Munsif passed a final decree for sale. The appeal against the preliminary decree was dismissed on the 16th March, 1927. On the 15th March, 1930, the decree-holder respondents applied for execution of the final decree. Objection was taken by the appellant on the ground that the application for execution was barred by the law of limitation, as it had been filed more than three years after the passing of the final decree. The District Munsif rejected this contention, but dismissed the application because the second defendant had died and his legal representatives had not been brought on the record. The appellant appealed to the Subordinate Judge against the order dismissing the application and the Subordinate Judge sent the case back to the District Munsif for reconsideration. The District Munsif maintained the opinion that the application was within time; but as the legal representatives of the second defendant had still not been brought on the record he again dismissed the petition. The appellant filed an appeal against this order and the Subordinate Judge held that the application was barred by the law of limitation. The decree-holder appealed to this Court and Venkataramana Rao, J., allowed the appeal, agreeing with the view of the District Munsif that the application for execution was in time. A further point was taken before the learned Judge, namely, that the decree-holders were not entitled to execute the final decree obtained by them on the 9th November, 1925 and should have obtained a fresh final decree after the decision of the appeal against the preliminary decree. The learned Judge also decided this question against the present appellant.

When the appeal was before Venkataramana Rao, J., there was a conflict between a decision of this Court and a Bench decision of the Patna High Court. In *Ahammad Kutty v. Kottakkat Kuttu*¹, Madhavan Nair, J., held that where during the pendency of an appeal from a preliminary decree in a partition suit, the trial Court passes a final decree in the suit and there is no appeal, the period of limitation for execution of the final decree runs from the date of the final decree and not from the date of the decree of the appellate Court in the appeal from the preliminary decree. In *Somar Singh v. Deonandan Prasad Singh*², the Patna High Court took the opposite view and Venkataramana Rao, J., accepted the Patna decision. It is not, however, necessary for us to consider whether he was right in so doing because the question has since been decided by a Bench of this Court consisting of King and Krishnaswami Aiyangar, JJ., in *Nanduri Sriramachandra Rao v. Chintamani bhatla Venkateswara Rao*³, where it was held that the period of limitation ran from the date of the appellate decree. In this case there was an application to set aside an ex parte decree but this was dismissed. Against the order of dismissal the defendants appealed to the High Court which allowed the appeal, extending its benefits to the defendants who had not appealed on condition that they deposited the decree amount within three months. The deposit was not made and the ex parte decree therefore stood as against the defendants who had not appealed. The decree-holder filed his application more than five years after the date of the ex parte decree. It was held that it was in time because limitation ran from the date of the appellate decree. This decision governs this case and the question must therefore be decided against the appellant.

Veeran
Kutti
v.
Koya Kutti.
Leach, C.J.

With regard to the second contention, namely, that there can be no execution proceedings until a second final decree has been obtained, it falls to be observed that this objection was not taken in the Court of the District Munsif or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and as Venkataramana Rao, J., has pointed out, if the objection had been taken it would have been open to the District Munsif to treat the application for execution as an application for a final decree and pass a final decree if it was necessary. Although it was not necessary in these circumstances for the learned Judge to decide the question, he did so and came to the conclusion that a fresh application for a final decree or amendment of the original decree was not necessary. With this conclusion we are in entire agreement. No authority has been quoted to the contrary. The learned Advocate for the appellant has relied on certain observations of Banerji, J. and of Tudball, J., in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishan Jiwan Lali, approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh*², Banerji, J., said:

"It seems to me that this rule," that is, the rule regulating application for final decree in mortgage actions,

"contemplates the passing of only one final decree in a suit for sale upon a mortgage. The essential condition to the making of a final decree is the existence of a preliminary decree which has become conclusive between the parties. When an appeal has been preferred, it is the decree of the appellate Court which is the final decree in the cause."

Tudball, J., said:—

"When the Munsif passed the decree it was open to the plaintiff or the defendant to accept that decree or to appeal. If an appeal is preferred, the final decree is the decree of the appellate Court of final jurisdiction. When that decree is passed, it is that decree and only that which can be made final in the cause between the parties."

The question now under consideration was not under consideration in those cases. The fact that an appeal was preferred against the preliminary decree did not prevent the Court from passing the final decree. As I have pointed out no order staying proceedings was obtained and it was the duty of the trial Court to proceed to pass the final decree. That decree remains binding and in full force until set aside. The preliminary decree was confirmed on appeal and therefore did not affect the validity of the final decree which had been passed. For the reasons indicated the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

The Government Pleader (B. Sitarama Rao) for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He is the Rajah of Pittapuram. The suit is filed in accordance with the provisions of S. 13 of the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act (VIII of 1923). The subject-matter of the suit was 48 cents of land lying on the boundary between the village of Madupalli which is a Government village and Vanapalli which belongs to the plaintiff. At the recent survey completed in 1928 this 48 cents was surveyed in the Ayan Government village Madupalli being included in Survey No. 21 of that village. The Zamindar filed a claim before the Survey Officer and the Survey Officer decided the dispute in favour of the Government. The grounds on which the decision was based have not been exhibited in the Courts below. We have only the decision of the Survey authority to whom the Zamindar appealed. That order contains no details but simply is that "the order of the lower Court is confirmed".

The only point I think which arises for consideration in this second appeal is whether the lower appellate Court was wrong in ignoring the effect of the successive surveys which have been made by the Government. From 1890 to 1906 this Pittapuram Zamindari was in charge of the Court of Wards. In 1893-94 a survey of the adjacent Government villages was made, that is to say, a survey of the villages of the taluk of Amalapuram and in that survey, this 48 cents was included in the Ayan village of Madupalli. In 1902, and following years, presumably at the instance of the Court of Wards, the Zamindari villages were surveyed. See G.O. No. 67, Rev., dated 15th of January, 1902. And as a result of that survey the 48 cents was included in the Zamindari village of Vanapalli. Then lastly as I have already said at the re-survey of the Ayan villages in 1928, the 48 cents was surveyed along with the village of Madupalli. In my view the Government whose officer in 1902 or thereabouts laid down the boundaries of the Zamin village under the Survey and Boundaries Act of 1897 then in force is not entitled except on the ground of change of ownership at a later survey to alter that boundary. It is stated, and I believe it to be true that at the 1904 survey of Vanapalli there was no dispute about the boundary in question. Everybody thought that the 48 cents was part of the Vanapalli village. The Survey Officer must have had the survey plan of the adjacent village of Madupalli with him at the time he laid down the common boundary between the two villages. In fact it must have been part of his duty to reconcile the boundary as shown in the Government village plan with the boundary claimed on behalf of the Zamindar. The 48 cents therefore must have been claimed on behalf of the Zamindar and the claim cannot have been opposed on behalf of the Government. If it had been and if the Government had been successful the 48 cents now in dispute would not have been included within the boundary of Vanapalli. S. 11 (1) of the Survey and Boundaries Act of 1897 is as follows:—

"If, at the time of survey, a boundary is undisputed, the Survey Officer may order that it shall be laid down as pointed out by the registered holder or his agent" and sub-S. 2 leaving out unnecessary words is:

"If the registered holder is not present, the Survey Officer shall order it to be laid down as nearly as may be, in accordance with the village records or as ascertained from the village officers and from such other evidence as the Survey Officer may be able to procure"

Then sub-S. 4 is:

"When the survey of any village has been completed in accordance with the orders passed under sub-Ss. 1 and 2, the Survey Officer shall notify the fact as soon as practicable thereafter."

S. 12, sub-S. (1) is:

"Notice of every order passed by the Survey Officer under S. 11 shall be given to all registered holders the boundaries of whose holdings may be affected by the order" and sub-S. 3 of S. 12 is:

"The order of the Survey Officer shall be final"

The survey of the estate is subject to these rules and these rules have statutory force. See S. 18 which is as follows:

"Except as hereinafter provided in Ss. 19 and 20, the conduct of such survey and the proceedings of a survey officer shall, as far as may be, be regulated by the procedure laid down in Chapter II with regard to the survey of Government lands."

Chapter II is the Chapter which contains Ss. 11 and 12 the purport of which I have just set out.

If the survey had been completed in 1904 or thereabouts and no dispute had been raised by the Government as to the boundary as laid down by its own officer and laid down at the instance of the Court of Wards which is a statutory body deriving its authority from the Government, the Zamindar, in my opinion, was entitled to believe that these 48 cents belonged to him. I might add that not only did the Government not dispute that survey but no objection was raised by any person coming forward as a ryotwari owner of the land directly under the Government. That being the position of affairs then when the new survey of the Government village was made in 1925 and the following years, the Survey Officer, in my opinion, was bound to adhere to the boundary laid down in 1904 when Vanapalli was surveyed. Again I observe that in these disputes no ryotwari owner claiming under the Government has been impleaded and no occupancy tenant claiming under the Zamindar has been impleaded. This dispute is entirely between the Zamindar and Government. The plaintiff, in my opinion, was entitled to succeed on this ground alone and the second appeal by him is therefore allowed with costs both here and in the lower appellate Court. The order giving him costs in the trial Court is restored.

Leave to appeal being asked for is granted.

Inam—Second crop cultivation—Water-tax payable to Zamindar—Nature of claim for recovery—Agreement between Inamdar and cultivating tenants—Whether binding on Zamindar—Suit whether one for recovery of rent from ryot—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), S. 77.

The Zamindar filed a suit against the Inamdar and his cultivating tenants for recovery of water-tax in respect of the water taken for the second crop to the suit lands. The muchilikas executed by the tenants in favour of the Inamdar provided for a consolidated rent taking into account the possibility of the tenants raising a second crop.

Held, that the Zamindar's claim was not one on a tort but was based on an implied contract to the effect that whenever water was available the Inamdar could take the water on condition of paying for it, and that the Inamdar was equally liable along with the tenants to pay the water-tax. The fact that as between the Inamdar and the tenants, the entire liability was thrown on the tenants was no concern of the Zamindar and he was not bound by any such stipulation. Nor was there any distinction in the application of the principle between a pre-settlement inam and a subsequent inam.

Petitions under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif of Kovvur in S. C. S. Nos. 402, 403 and 406 of 1934 respectively.

T. Satyanarayana and M. Appa Rao for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These three Revision Petitions arise out of three Small Cause Suits decided by the District Munsif of Kovvur, West Godavari District. In all the three suits, the plaintiff was the Zamindar and the plaintiffs asked that the defendants should pay water-tax in respect of the water taken for the second crop to the suit lands. Of the three suits, the lands involved in Small Cause Suits Nos. 402 and 406 are Pre-settlement Inams and the land involved in Small Cause Suit No. 403 is a subsequent inam, that is, one granted subsequent to the Permanent Settlement. Decrees have been granted in all the three suits against the tenants who cultivated the lands and actually took the water from the plaintiff's tank. The first defendant in each suit is the Inamdar who is also sought to be made liable jointly with the cultivating tenants. The lower Court refused a decree against the first defendant in each suit and these Revision Petitions are directed against the exoneration of the first defendant in each suit from joint liability along with the other defendants.

It is contended by the petitioner that viewed as a claim for damages for wrongful use of the water of the plaintiff's tank, the liability would be one on a tort committed by the defendants and the learned Counsel argues that even if the cultivating tenants took water, they were authorised to do so by the first defendant in each suit and that therefore they are also jointly liable along with the other defendants. It is also argued that viewed as a claim on an implied contract, the contract to be inferred or implied would be one between the Zamindar and the Inamdar that whenever the Inamdar or the person who is let into the land as his cultivating tenant takes water for a second crop, he the Inamdar would pay the water-tax to the Zamindar. From Ex. D, a judgment in a prior suit in which the Zamindar claimed water-tax under similar circumstances from the Inamdar alone, it appears that the tank was improved considerably by the Zamindar at a cost of over Rs. 10,000. It also appears that it is only by reason of these improvements that water supply was assured for the first crop and also for the second crop. The ordinary jeroyati ryots and the Inamdar have all been benefited and have been taking water for the first crop and also whenever available for the second crop. What is the proper legal basis for a claim by the Zamindar in such cases? After hearing both the learned Advocates, I am of opinion that it is wrong on the facts of this case to view it as a claim on a tort. In such a case, the proper basis, in my opinion, is that there is an implied engagement between the Zamindar and the Inamdar that whenever there is water available, the Inamdar might take the water but on condition of paying for it. The Inamdar in these cases leased the inams to his tenants on the basis of there being a possibility of a second crop whenever there is water available for it. All the parties know that after the extensive repairs effected by the Zamindar, in ordinary seasons there would be enough water for both the first and the second crops and the rent demanded by the Inamdar from his tenants was fixed on the basis that there would be enough water for the first crop and also for a second crop unless rains fail. We have got in this case Exs. 1 to 4 muchilikas executed by the cultivating tenants in favour of the Inamdar for prior Faslis. From those documents, it appears clear that the Inamdar stipulated for a consolidated rent taking into account the possibility of the tenants raising a second crop and the rent was fixed on such basis. There is no reason to suppose that the terms are any different for the suit Faslis. We have also Ex. B in which the Inamdar expressly authorises the tenants to take water for the second crop and to raise a second crop. The true basis of the liability of the Inamdar to the Zamindar being, as I said, an implied engagement or implied contract, it follows that the Inamdar is equally liable along with the tenants to pay for the water tax for the second crop whenever water is taken for such a crop. The fact that as between the Inamdar and the cultivating tenants, the entire liability is thrown on the tenants is no concern of the Zamindar and he is not bound by any such stipulation as between the Inamdar and his tenants. For these reasons, I hold that the first defendant in each suit is jointly liable along with the other defendants. There is no distinction in the application of this principle between a pre-settlement and a subsequent Inam. Even in the case of a subsequent Inam, the same result follows because, as I said, it is on the basis of an implied engagement between the Zamindar and the Inamdar that the liability to pay the water tax for the second crop arises.

Another contention which is raised by Mr. Appa Rao, who appears in the case of the subsequent Inam, that is, the land involved in C. R. P. No. 296 of 1936 (S. C. S. No. 403 of 1934) is that the suit ought to be laid in the Revenue Court. The argument is that for the purpose of the Estates Land Act, the expression 'rent' includes what is payable for water taken even unauthorisedly as laid down by the decision of the Full Bench in Venkataramu Garu v. Maharaja of Pittapuram. The suit here, so far as the Inamdar is concerned is not for recovery of rent from a 'ryot' as defined under S. 77 of the Estates Land Act. S. 77 refers only to suits as against ryots in which case the Zamindar would have to go to the Revenue Courts even for the recovery of water tax for unauthorised user. But the suit here being against the Inamdar, it does not lie in the Revenue Court. The cultivating tenants are not the ryots of Zamindar; they are the ryots of the Inamdar. It may be that, if the Inamdar wants to file a suit as against his cultivating tenants, he may have to go to a Revenue Court but on that question, I do not express any opinion but so far as the suit against the first defendant the Inamdar or against the other tenants who are the cultivating tenants under the first defendant there can be no question of the Zamindar being obliged to resort to a Revenue Court.

These Revision Petitions are accordingly allowed and there will be a decree against the first defendant in each suit jointly along with the other defendants. I am asked by the respondents' counsel to give a direction that the plaintiff should proceed in the first instance against the defendants other than the first defendant and then to proceed against the first defendant. Mr. Raghava Rao is agreeable that such a direction may be given. I order accordingly. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Karumuthu Thiagarajan,
In re.

Where the manager of a Firm was convicted under S. 140 (3) of the Indian Companies Act for refusal to produce books and documents before the Inspector appointed under S. 138 of the Act, but the fact was not disputed that the Inspector was appointed by order of the Provincial Government dated 18th August, 1937, subsequent to the transfer of the Local Government's functions, under S. 138 of the Companies Act, to the Central Government by the new Act,

Held, that the authentication of the order of the Provincial Government in the manner specified in the rules framed under S. 59 (2) of the Government of India Act would not make it an order of the Governor under para. 8 (2) of the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937 and it follows that the Inspector was not validly appointed. Hence the conviction was unsustainable.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session, Madura Division, in C. A. No. 63 of 1938 preferred against the judgment of the Court of the City First Class Magistrate of Madura in C. C. No. 33 of 1938.

The refusal to produce the books and documents of the Company was not disputed in this Court but the Inspector was appointed by the Provincial Government by order dated 18th August, 1937, subsequent to the transfer of the functions of the Local Government under S. 138 of the Indian Companies Act to the Central Government by the new Act and these functions were not entrusted to the Provincial Government by the Governor-General under S. 124 (1) of the Government of India Act till 1st April, 1938. Paragraph 8 (2) of the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937, empowers the Governor and not the Provincial Government to continue to discharge these functions in the interval and the prosecution case hitherto was that the Inspector was appointed by the Provincial Government. The authentication of the order of the Provincial Government in the manner specified in the rules framed under S. 59 (2) of the Government of India Act would not make it an order of the Governor under paragraph 8 (2) of the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937, and it follows that the Inspector was not validly appointed. The conviction of the petitioner under S. 140 (3) of the Indian Companies Act cannot therefore be sustained and it is unnecessary to consider the contention, that ex facie the Inspector was appointed on the report of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and not the Assistant Registrar who made the investigation under S. 137 of the Act and the appointment is consequently invalid. The conviction of the petitioner is accordingly set aside and the fine if levied will be refunded.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), S. 18 (1)—Land acquisition—Title to land, in dispute—Award of compensation—Question as to person entitled to compensation—Reference under S. 18 (1) of Act I of 1894—Decision of Court how far res judicata—Application for reference—If to be accompanied by particulars of "grounds" under S. 18 (1)—Decision of Court contained in two decrees and order for payment out of compensation instead of in one award—Validity of decision if affected.

Where, in the course of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, a reference to the Court under S. 18 is made for the determination of matters including a dispute as to which of two or more claimants to the property in dispute is entitled to receive the compensation awarded, a decision of that Court renders the question of title to the property res judicata as between the rival claimants. Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 78: L.R. 49 I.A. 129: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 320 (P.C.), followed.

S. 18 (1) of the Act requires the application for a reference to be accompanied only by the grounds of objection to the award of compensation, the word "grounds" being referable only to such of the four possible objections specified in the sub-section, as the applicant relies on. The application accordingly does not, in order to be valid, require to be accompanied by actual particulars of the applicant's objections. Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Secretary of State for India, (1929) 58 M.L.J. 223: L.R. 57 I.A. 100: I.L.R. 57 Cal. 1148 (P.C.), followed.

The decision of the District Judge on a reference to him under the Act of 1894 is not vitiated by the fact that its result is expressed in two decrees and an order for payment out of the compensation money to a specified party, instead of in an award. Although it may be simpler for the Court to follow the provisions of S. 26 (2) and express its decision in the form of an award, even that section does not provide except inferentially for any determination in the award of any dispute with regard to the persons interested.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court, Allahabad, dated 16th January, 1935 (Niamat-ullah and Allsop, JJ.), reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bulandshahr, dated 27th October, 1930.

LORD PORTER.—The plaintiff and the defendant in this appeal are the widows of two brothers, the appellant of Sagar Mal and the respondent of Kirpa Ram. The brothers were the sons of Janki Kuar, who died in 1918, and the title under which the property was held by the brothers is in dispute. Kirpa Ram died on the 10th March, 1924, leaving the respondent as his widow. Sagar Mal died on the 18th March, 1924, leaving the appellant as his widow. If the property which prior to their death was admittedly enjoyed by both the brothers was held as joint family property, the appellant as widow of the last survivor would be entitled to the estate. If, on the other hand, as was claimed by the respondent, the property was held by the brothers as tenants in common, it would pass to the two widows in equal shares.

The appellant asserted that the property was joint family property and that by Hindu law the whole passed to her. The respondent on her part maintained that the property was held by the brothers as tenants in common and that half devolved upon her. She further alleged that, even if this were not so, by a family arrangement made after the death of the two brothers it was agreed that the parties should enter into possession of the shares of their respective husbands. In support of these allegations she relied upon the facts which were admitted that the property was entered in the revenue records in the joint names of the appellant and respondent, and that, though the appellant was recorded as lambardar of the property in the town of Bulandshahr, including the property in dispute, the respondent was recorded as lambardar of other portions of the property. Whatever may have been the arrangement between the parties, they appear to have quarrelled before October, 1925, and by that date a dispute as to their rights in the property had already arisen and extended to their servants to such an extent that criminal proceedings were taken by one of the employees of the respondent against certain employees of the appellant, proceedings which ended in the conviction of the appellant's servants on the 5th February, 1926.

Meanwhile on the 18th December, 1925, certain property in the town of Bulandshahr was notified for acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. A portion of this property formed part of the estate the ownership of which is in dispute in the present action.

During the year 1926 the dispute between the parties continued and extended, and on the 13th September, 1926, the appellant instituted a suit in the Court of the First Munsif for rent against certain tenants of the disputed property. In this suit the respondent was joined as defendant and in it the appellant claimed the whole of the rent. The tenancy in question was in respect of land in the town of Bulandshahr. While this suit was proceeding and while the acquisition proceedings were still in progress, the appellant petitioned the Collector in the latter proceedings on the 19th February, 1927, that the whole compensation money should be paid to her to the exclusion of the respondent. In the same month, namely, on the 26th, the First Munsif gave judgment in the tenancy suit in which he held that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant were entitled to anything, and dismissed the suit with costs.

The appellant thereupon appealed to the Subordinate Judge who on the 31st May, 1927, gave judgment awarding half the rent to the appellant and half to the respondent. From this decision the appellant appealed to the High Court. Just before the decision of the Subordinate Judge, namely, on the 6th April, 1927, some proceedings appear to have taken place in the acquisition matter towards determining the amount payable as compensation. The respondent claimed that an award had been made on that date, but this was denied by the appellant. It is undoubted, however, that on the 29th September, 1927, the Collector made a formal award as to the value of the property and the apportionment of the compensation under the Land Acquisition Act. His award has not been printed in the record. There has been printed, however, the terms of an award dated the 1st November, 1927, which is said by the respondent to be an attempt of the Collector to make a fresh award after he was functus officio, and by the appellant to be merely a repetition of the earlier award and explanatory of the details contained therein. Under either award the parties each received in compensation one-half of the value of the land in dispute, the Collector apparently taking the view that they were entitled to the property in equal shares. Notices of each of the awards appear to have been sent to each of the parties.

On the 11th October, 1927, after the receipt of the first notice, the appellant applied under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, requiring that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, and gave as the objections which she desired to be considered (a) what is the correct amount of compensation of the land which should be given to the zamindars? (b) what particular person is entitled to what compensation?

On the 31st October, 1927, the respondent also objected to the award, her objection being confined to the insufficiency of the amount of the compensation awarded. One other of the parties interested in the land appears also to have made objection, but solely on the ground of the inadequacy of the compensation.

On the 14th December, the objections were forwarded by the Collector to the District Judge at Bulandshahr in accordance with the terms of S. 19 of the Act, and the information required under the provisions of that section was furnished by him. This information was supplemented in a communication from the Collector to the District Judge on the 26th April, 1928. Neither of these documents contained or indeed is required to contain the grounds of objection.

While the reference to the District Judge in the acquisition matter was still undetermined, the second appeal of the appellant from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bulandshahr in the tenancy action was heard on the 22nd April, 1929, and determined by the High Court in favour of the appellant. A little more than a month later the District Judge made his award in the matter of the land acquisition. Whatever he may have determined in that award, he framed as his fourth issue the question whether the appellant was entitled to the entire compensation or the respondent was entitled to half. To that question he gave the answer that the appellant was entitled to the entire compensation. The learned Judge also held that the compensation awarded by the Collector was sufficient, and dismissed the objections lodged by the three objectors on this ground. The effect of his answer to the fourth issue must, however, be considered more at length when the issues of the present case have to be determined.

No appeal was made against this award, and on the 31st May, 1929, the learned District Judge passed two decrees, one in respect of the application of the appellant and the other in respect of the application of the respondent to his Court. In each case the order is headed "Application for determination of compensation under Act I of 1894" and contains the words:—"It is ordered that as per judgment on the record of case No. 64 the application be struck off with costs." The judgment referred to is that given on the 31st May by the learned District Judge. No decree or formal award was filed dealing with the dispute between the parties as to their rights to receive the compensation money, but on the 12th August, 1929, the whole sum awarded by the Collector in respect of the land in dispute was paid out to the appellant under a formal instruction of the learned Judge.

No record of the payment of this sum into Court by the Collector is to be found in the record, but it is clear that it was paid in under the provisions of S. 31 (2) of the Act owing to the dispute between the appellant and the respondent as to who was entitled to the money.

The compensation having been dealt with in this way, the respondent, who was not content to rest under the decision of the High Court in the rent case or of the District Judge in the acquisition case, brought the present action by plaint dated the 20th March, 1930, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bulandshahr, claiming that she was entitled to half the property on the grounds that have been already set out. To that petition the appellant pleaded that she was entitled under Hindu law to the succession, that there was no family arrangement, and that in any case the dispute had already been determined (1) by the High Court in the rent case, and (2) by the District Judge in the acquisition case, that it was no longer open to question, and that the matter was res judicata.

In adjudicating upon these pleas the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit now under review held (1) that the two brothers were tenants in common of the property, (2) that a family settlement had been made as alleged by the respondent and was binding upon the parties, but (3) that the matter was res judicata. He therefore gave judgment in favour of the appellant by formal decree dated the 27th October, 1930.

From this judgment the respondent appealed to the High Court at Allahabad which, on the 16th January, 1935, reversed the decision of the lower Court, held that the matter was not res judicata, found that the brothers held the land as tenants in common, and that in view of this finding it was unnecessary to determine whether a family arrangement had been entered into or not. From this decision the appellant has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Before their Lordships the question first argued was whether the High Court was right in determining that the matter was not res judicata since, if their Lordships were of opinion that they were wrong in that determination their decision would be conclusive of the matter, and it would not be necessary to enter into the other difficult and complicated questions which arose.

In the argument presented to their Lordships' Board it was conceded on behalf of the appellant that the decision of the High Court in the rent case could not be relied upon as decisive of the title of the parties to the property in dispute, and that a plea of res judicata could not be founded upon it.

Reliance was, however, placed upon the decree of the District Judge in the acquisition case as finally determining the rights of the parties.

In order successfully to establish a plea of res judicata or estoppel by record it is necessary to show that in a previous case a Court having jurisdiction to try the question came to a decision necessarily and substantially involving the determination of the matter in issue in the later case.

It was at one time a matter of doubt in India whether the determination of a Court to which a matter has been referred by the Collector under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act was such a decision. That doubt was resolved by the judgment of this Board in *Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao*¹, which decided that, where a dispute as to the title to receive the compensation has been referred to the Court, a decree thereon not appealed from renders the question of title res judicata in a suit between the parties to the dispute. In that case some question arose as to whether any appeal lay to His Majesty in Council in a case where the determination of the Judge ended in an award and not in a decree. The Board took the view that where the matter referred was not the adequacy of the amount of compensation awarded, but a dispute between the persons claiming compensation, involving, it might be, difficult questions of title, the resultant decision was not an award but a decree. This particular part of the judgment has, however, become academic, since an appeal to His Majesty in Council is now given by S. 26 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act which was added by amendment in 1921 and enacts:—

"Every such award shall be deemed to be a decree and the statement of the grounds of every such award a judgment within the meaning of S. 2, cl. (2), and S. 2, cl. (9), of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

If, then, in a matter referred to him by the Collector in accordance with the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, a Judge to whom it is referred has in a dispute as to their title to the land between two of the parties claiming compensation, determined that dispute, the matter is res judicata and binds the parties in any later suit involving that issue. The difficulty in the present case arises from the form by which the appellant required the Collector to submit the matter to the Judge, the wording of that reference by the Collector, the terms of the judgment and the final decrees passed by the learned Judge.

For the respondent it was first said that the question of the ownership of the land in dispute had never been put before the District Judge in due form and that he had, therefore, no jurisdiction to decide the matter.

The appellant, it was maintained, had never required that question to be referred for the determination of the Court, and in any case had not, as required by S. 18, sub-S. (2), stated the grounds on which the objection was taken.

S. 18, sub-S. (1), no doubt provides that whether the objection be to (i) the measurement of the land, (ii) the amount of the compensation, (iii) the persons to whom it is payable, or (iv) the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested, written application may be made for a reference to the Court, and sub-S. (2) provides that the application shall state the grounds on which objection is taken.

So far as is material to the question whether the issue of ownership is res judicata, the portion of the application of the 11th October, 1927, upon which the appellant relies in order to show that the dispute between the parties as to their respective titles was submitted to the Court, is contained in the words "What particular person is entitled to what compensation?"

The phraseology is wide enough to embrace two of the four objections mentioned in the sub-section, namely, numbers 3 and 4 and therefore prima facie includes a reference as to the persons to whom compensation is payable.

It was argued that there were many potential objectors amongst the zamindars affected, and that the words might merely mean that the Court was called upon first to determine the total sum to be awarded and then to apportion that sum in the proper ratio between each of the persons entitled. But the appellant was primarily concerned with the apportionment to her; she had already in the previous February claimed the whole compensation of the land in question to the exclusion of the respondent, and their Lordships see no reason for giving the words the narrower construction. It was, however, suggested that the requirement was not complete unless particulars of the reasons for the objections taken were given. But the Act does not require particulars to be given—it requires only the grounds of objection to be given, and by “grounds,” their Lordships think, is meant such of the four grounds mentioned in S. 18 (1) as are relied upon. The same view as to the meaning of the word “grounds” appears to have been entertained by their Lordships’ Board in *Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Secretary of State for India*¹ and no further particulars are required in order to comply with the terms of the sub-section.

Secondly, it is said that the question of ownership was never submitted by the Collector to the Court. It is true that neither in his letter of the 14th December, 1927, nor in the written information furnished on the 28th April, 1928, does the Collector refer to any question other than that of compensation. But there is no reason why he should do so. His duties in making the reference are set out in S. 19 under the provisions of which the only information required as to the grounds of objection is that contained in sub-S. (2) which requires the attachment of a schedule giving particulars of the notices served upon and of the statements in writing made or delivered by the parties interested respectively. From the information furnished on the 26th April, 1928, it appears that particulars of these notices and of the statement in writing made by the objectors were sent to the District Government Pleader on the 27th February, 1928. The Court, therefore, had before it not only the question of the amount of compensation but also the further question as to the persons to whom compensation was payable.

But it is suggested that even if the question of ownership was submitted to the Court in due form, yet no decision upon that point was given. The judgment itself, it is said, shows that the title of the appellant and the respondent never came in issue, and that the only matter determined by the Court was that it had no jurisdiction to consider the objections; or at any rate it was not clear that any further decision had been come to. The learned Judge, it was argued, held (1) that the award of the 21st September, 1927, had been superseded by that of the 1st November, which had not altered but clarified the earlier document; (2) that no objection had been taken to the later award though objections had been taken to the earlier one, and (3) that as no objection had been taken, the later award must be confirmed. Indeed the respondent went further and said that it appeared from the judgment that there had been an earlier award on the 6th April, 1927, that that, being the earliest, was the only valid award, and that in considering any other the Judge had exceeded his jurisdiction.

Their Lordships do not so read the learned Judge's words. Both parties were before him and gave and called evidence to establish their respective titles. After hearing them he framed two issues material to the question now under consideration:—

"(3) Has the Court jurisdiction to adjudicate the matter on the basis of the petition presented in respect of award of 21st September, 1927. (4) Whether the applicant is entitled to the entire compensation or Mussamat Ram Kali" (the respondent) "is entitled to half share."

In answer to the fourth issue he found in terms that the appellant was entitled to the entire compensation.

It is, of course, possible that he held himself to have no jurisdiction, but nevertheless determined the other issues in case, but only in case, the matter went further and an appellate Court found his decision as to jurisdiction to be wrong.

This is possible, but there is no indication of such an intention in the judgment itself. The learned Judge gives his findings as to each of the issues framed in the order he framed them as if each must be determined in order to complete the reference.

The language used in the judgment in determining issue 3 might be clearer, but, in their Lordships' opinion, it sufficiently indicates that after some preliminary discussion as to the question of compensation beginning on the 6th April, 1927, an award was made on the 21st September, 1927, showing the amount awarded to each of the parties interested but not distinguishing between the land itself and any buildings, trees, etc., on it. The award of the 1st November did so distinguish but in all other respects was identical with the earlier award, and was a mere specification of it. In both documents Rs. 452-14-0 were awarded to the appellant and the same sum to the respondent.

Without seeing the exact terms of the various documents it is not very easy to follow all the reasoning. The argument of the respondent which the learned Judge rejects, namely, that Rs. 759-2-6 had been awarded by the award of the 21st September, 1927, and the statement by the learned Judge that only the appellant made an application under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, and that the third objector and the respondent made no objections, seems to be inaccurate whether his statement refers to the award of the 21st September or that of the 1st November. The fact seems to be that all three objected to the award of the 21st September, and that none of them made any objection to the document of the 1st November. The respondent did not suggest that any award had been made on the 6th April. She referred to the document of the 21st September as the first award and to that of the 1st November as the second award, and argued that the second having superseded the first no valid objection had been made to the final award by her and none could be entertained by the learned Judge. To this argument the learned Judge held that the second award was a mere specification of the first and, as their Lordships think, that any further objections ought to have been taken under the earlier and not the later award.

But whatever the exact meaning to be attributed to the learned Judge's words, it is clear that he did decide that the respondent had no right to the land and that there were not two awards but only one of the 21st September, though it is true that that award had been made more specific on the 1st November.

This, in their Lordships' view, is a clear finding not of want of jurisdiction but that there was a valid award and that the appellant was the owner of the land. It is for the respondent to show that jurisdiction was declined, and she has failed to do so.

Nor is the Court's decision vitiated by the facts that its result is expressed in two decrees, and an order for payment out of the compensation money to the appellant, instead of in an award. No doubt the matter would have been simplified if the Court had followed the provisions of S. 26 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act, and its decision had been expressed in the form of an award, but it is to be observed that even that section does not provide except inferentially for any determination in the award of any dispute as to the persons interested.

In these circumstances it was not unnatural that on the one hand the question of the amount of compensation alone should have been dealt with in the two decrees which, though they in terms refer to the judgment, make no reference to any dispute between the appellant and respondent, and are headed "Application for determination of compensation", and that on the other hand the dispute between the parties to the present suit should be settled by a payment out to the one entitled to receive the compensation.

It was suggested on behalf of the respondent that the order for payment out was consistent with a finding that both were entitled to an equal share. The appellant and respondent, it was said, were recorded as joint owners and the appellant had by arrangement with the respondent become lambardar of the land affected. The payment therefore might have been made to the appellant as lambardar of the property concerned or as co-owner and agent for the respondent. There is however no indication of this in the order itself. Moreover a lambardar would not be entitled to receive capital money virtute officii, nor would a co-owner be able to give a valid discharge for another owner interested in the land.

For the reasons given their Lordships think that the learned District Judge did determine the question of ownership, his decision is binding upon the parties to this appeal, and the matter is res judicata.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty, that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge in this suit be restored. The respondent must pay the costs of the hearing in the High Court and before their Lordships' Board.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was a toddy renter before the introduction of Prohibition and he has been convicted under S. 4 (1) (a) and (g) of the Madras Prohibition Act and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months and a fine of Rs. 50 under each sub-clause. The evidence of P. W. 1 the Sub-Inspector shows that on his way to the house of the petitioner with a search warrant the petitioner emptied a pot of arrack into his well and on search M. O. 3 the pot containing fermented wash, M. O. 4 the bottle containing some drops of illicitly distilled arrack, M. O. 5 the basket of jaggery and M. O. 6 the pot containing velvelan bark and cocoanut flowers, were found in the house. P. W. 2 the search witness corroborates P. W. 1 and the denial of the petitioner is worthless. The conviction of the petitioner under S. 4, cl. (1) (a) and (g) is therefore correct but a distiller of arrack will necessarily possess the arrack and separate sentences are not called for. The sentence of the petitioner is therefore reduced to rigorous imprisonment for two months and a fine of Rs. 50 with rigorous imprisonment in default for one month and otherwise this petition is dismissed. The excess of fine if levied will be refunded.

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1921), S. 11—Tenant not owner of the superstructure—If can claim notice under S. 11.

The Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, 1921, does not apply to the case of a tenant who is not the owner of the superstructure. Where therefore it is found that a tenant is not the owner of the superstructure on the land, he is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, which require only a notice of fifteen days on the footing of a monthly tenancy and cannot claim the three months' notice required by S. 11 of the Act.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment and decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Pandrang Row dated 23rd April, 1936 and passed in C. C. C. A. No. 9 of 1935 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the City Civil Judge of Madras in O. S. No. 220 of 1933.

JUDGMENTS. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—The appellant in this appeal is the owner of a piece of land which was being let to tenants for running a firewood depot from about 1912. It is unnecessary to go into the earlier history of the tenancy. It will be enough to refer to Ex. E, a registered rental agreement executed by two persons V. Ratnavelu Mudaliar and T. Papiiah Chetty brother of the respondent, in favour of the appellant on the 30th October, 1922. By that agreement the tenants took over the land which was described as vacant land of the extent of about two manais, on lease for a period of five years from 1st February, 1923, for opening and running a firewood depot 'after constructing a building on the said land' with the permission of the appellant. The agreement winds up by saying that the appellant should take steps for recovering the property in case of default in the regular payment of rent without reference to the period of the lease. This agreement as is clear, was one which was entered into between the parties after the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, 1921, came into force which was on the 21st February, 1922. One of the questions argued on behalf of the appellant is that this tenancy agreement being in the nature of a contract entered into after the Act came into force the provisions of the Act cannot apply to it. It is unnecessary to decide this point for there is another and a clearer ground on which we think that the appellant is entitled to succeed.

The learned Judge has found that the superstructure on the land does not belong to the respondent. He was inclined to think that that finding made no difference to his decision though at the same time he expressed the opinion, that if it were necessary he would have called for a finding on the question of the true ownership of the superstructure. We may at once say that we are unable to see any reason for taking this course, as both parties were content to have the dispute settled on the documentary evidence placed before the Court without caring to adduce any oral evidence. They had the opportunity, and if they did not avail themselves of it, it is their own fault. So we think that the case ought to be disposed of on the evidence on the record as it stands.

The finding being that the respondent is not the owner of the superstructure the question is whether the appellant was bound before seeking to eject him from the land and the superstructure, to give him the three months' notice required by S. 11 of the Act. The learned Judge is of opinion that it is enough to attract the operation of this section that the respondent is a tenant, and that once it is found that he is a tenant the three months' notice is obligatory irrespective of the question whether the tenant owns the superstructure or not. S. 11 is in these terms:

"No suits in ejectment or applications under S. 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, shall be instituted or presented against a tenant until the expiration of three months' next after notice in writing has been given to him requiring him to surrender possession of the land and building, and offering to pay compensation for the building, and trees, if any, and stating the amount thereof."

It is clear that the notice referred to in this section is one requiring the tenant to surrender possession of the land and building, and offering to pay compensation for the building and trees if any. There is nothing in the section or in the Act which enables the tenant to ask for compensation, when he does not own the building. In a case where the tenant is not the owner of the superstructure it is impossible to see how he can ask for compensation in respect of something which does not belong to him, or why the landlord should offer by his notice to pay compensation for a building which he himself owns. The entire scheme of the Act as the preamble shows it, is to afford protection to a tenant who has constructed a building on another's land and not to throw obstacles in the way of a landlord enforcing his rights, even where there are no rights of a tenant to be protected. This is apparent from the language of the section itself, which seems to limit its operation to the case where the tenant is the owner of the superstructure. Where he is not such an owner, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act which require only a notice of fifteen days on the footing of a monthly tenancy must be held to apply. We are unable to agree that this case is governed by S. 11 of the Act.

In this view it is unnecessary to discuss any other question for the disposal of this appeal. Differing from our learned brother, we must hold that the notice to quit which had been given by the appellant before suit was sufficient. The appeal is allowed with costs here and in the Court below.

Water course—Private estate altering water-course—Change affecting plaintiff—Rights of plaintiff to protection works in case of damage to his property—Controlling authority how far liable.

The duty of the controlling authority when constructing a new work in the interests of irrigation facilities generally is to take such reasonable precautions as are obviously necessary to prevent damage to others. This is not to say that the irrigation authority is prima facie liable for the consequence of any escape of water from an irrigation tank owing to an act of God or to some unforeseen and improbable rush of water, but that there is a duty to provide such protection against the ordinarily anticipated flow of water, as would safeguard third party's lands from damage as a result of the new work of irrigation.

Where an estate diverted the flow of water from a pathway without any precaution to prevent the water from damaging the plaintiff's land which lay adjacent to that pathway,

Held, that the plaintiff had a right to require the estate to construct such protective works as might be necessary to prevent damage to the plaintiff's lands from the flow of water which might ordinarily be expected in the channel and the plaintiff had a right to demand that the pre-existing course of the channel should not be altered except after the completion of the protective works necessary.

V. Govindarajachari for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the first defendant representing the Vizianagaram Estate against the decision in a suit for an injunction to restrain the first defendant from altering the course of the channel to the detriment of the plaintiff. It seems to be established on the findings of the Courts below that the channel marked DD in the plan attached to the plaint and also in the Commissioner's plan flowing west to east, has been diverted by means of an embankment so that it flows southwards along the path marked EE-1 on the plan and that an incidental consequence of this diversion has been damage to the plaintiff's land which is situated to the west of the diversion. It is contended for the appellant that the duty imposed upon a Zamindar to construct and maintain irrigation works gives him a right to create any new works which he finds to be necessary in the interests of irrigation and imposes an obligation on third parties to construct such protective works as may be necessary to prevent damage to their lands resulting from the new works. It seems to me that this is an overstatement of the legal position of the Zamindar with reference to irrigation. It is true that this Court held in *Gajapathi Krishna Chandra Deo v. Raja of Visianagaram*¹, that the rule in *Rylands v. Fletcher*², is not applicable to Indian irrigation conditions. The storing of water in an agricultural tank is a natural and lawful user and is not actionable for damage in the absence of negligence. This is quite another matter from holding that either a Zamindar or Government are entitled to construct new irrigation works so as to damage the lands of others without any liability for the damages so caused. It was held by a Bench of this Court in Sankaravadivelu Pillai v. Secretary of State for India in Council that

"The rights of Government, in connection with the distribution of water, did not include a right to flood a man's land because, in the opinion of Government, the erection of a work which has this effect is desirable in connection with the general distribution of water for the public benefit."

I know of no principle upon which the rights of a Zamindar can be placed any higher than the rights of the Government with reference to irrigation. It is one thing to say that the Government or the Zamindar has the right to restore an irrigation work to its former condition without regard to the fact that the restoration will result in the submersion of lands which, owing to the disrepair of the work, had for sometime been immune from submersion. It is another thing to say that the controlling authority has the right to construct the new work so as to submerge the lands of third parties not hitherto liable to submersion without compensation for the damage thereby caused.

To my mind it is the duty of the controlling authority when constructing a new work in the interests of irrigation facilities generally to take such reasonable precautions as are obviously necessary to prevent damage to others. * This is not to say that the irrigation authority is prima facie liable for the consequence of any escape of water from an irrigation tank owing to an act of God or to some unforeseen and improbable rush of water; but that there is a duty to provide such protection against the ordinarily anticipated flow of water, as would safeguard third party's lands from damage as a result of the new work of irrigation. Applying this principle to the present case, it would appear that the estate has diverted the flow of water along a pathway without any precautions to prevent the water from damaging the plaintiff's land which lies adjacent to that pathway. The plaintiff has, in my opinion, a right to require the estate to construct such protective works as may be necessary to prevent damage to the plaintiff's lands from the flow of water which may ordinarily be expected in the channel and the plaintiff has a right to demand that the pre-existing course of the channel shall not be altered except after the completion of the protective works necessary. I do not think that the plaintiff has the right to require the defendant to maintain the course of the channel for ever in one particular bed. But he has the right to insist that any alterations, which the controlling authority may find necessary, shall not work to his detriment. In this view it seems to me that the injunction granted by the lower appellate Court goes too far and requires modification. The modification which I propose to introduce will make it unnecessary to go into the question whether the injunction cannot be granted for want of the presence of the owners of the land through which the old course of the channel passed from the record of the case.

Vizianagaram
v.
Sanyasiraju.

But I observe that the plaintiff asserted that the eighth and ninth defendants were the owners of that land, that this assertion was not traversed in the written statement and that in the absence of an issue regarding non-joinder or of any plea to substantiate such an issue it is not proper to non-suit the plaintiff for want of other parties. In the result the appeal is allowed and the injunction granted will be modified, the first defendant being restrained from damaging the plaintiff's land by the diversion of the course of the channel marked DD in the plaint plan so as to flow along the path marked EE-1 in that plan and the first defendant being required to construct such an embankment as may be sufficient, or so to alter the course of the channel, as to prevent such damage. The appellant having substantially failed will pay the costs of the respondent in this Court.

age, etc.—Complaint against the Judge in respect of such acts—Sanction of Local Government, if necessary—"In the discharge of his official duty"—Meaning of.

Where a complaint against a President of a Panchayat Court alleged that when the complainant objected to the President's clerk dictating the order to be passed in a case before the Panchayat Court in which the complainant was the petitioner, the President abused him (the complainant), slapped him on the cheek and further attempted to beat him with the shoe, Held, that though the alleged acts are not part of his official duties, yet the President was acting throughout till the very minute when the alleged offences were committed in his official capacity. And therefore sanction under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code is essential before the Court can take cognisance of such an offence. "In the discharge of his official duty" in S. 197 is not to be interpreted in a strict manner so as to include only acts done strictly within the scope of his jurisdiction or authority.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Nandyal, dated 21st October, 1938, and made in on the objection petition in C. C. No. 110 of 1938.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a simple case in which the President of a Panchayat Court was complained against in respect of certain acts committed by him while he was in his own Court dealing with a case in which the complainant in the case was a party.

The complaint petition itself says that when the President, that is, the petitioner in the present case, was about to write the Court's order dismissing the complainant's petition, the complainant objected to the dictation by the clerk of the President of the order to be pronounced in the matter and asked the President not to allow the clerk to dictate the judgment as the Court was bound in law to write its own judgment and that it was on account of this objection taken by the complainant that the President of the Court is said to have got up from his seat abusing the complainant and slapped him on the cheek twice. It is also alleged that when the complainant warned the President that he had no business to assault him in open Court, the President unlaced his shoe, took it up in his hand, and raised it saying, "I will beat you with my shoe". No actual beating with the shoe followed because some persons are said to have intervened.

Subbiah
Ramachariu.

The question is whether in respect of these acts, sanction is required under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code which says that when any person who is a Judge within the meaning of S. 19 of the Indian Penal Code is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Local Government. In this case no such sanction has been obtained. The Joint Magistrate has nevertheless taken cognizance of the case on the ground that as the objection was raised by the complainant in the case to the procedure adopted by the Court in a perfectly orderly and lawful manner, it was the duty of the Court to answer that objection in an equally orderly and lawful manner and that the alleged use of abusive language and beating and the attempt to beat with a shoe cannot be said to come within the scope of the President's official duties.

The petitioner was acting throughout till the very minute when the alleged offences were committed in his official capacity. It cannot be said that he immediately ceased to be acting in his official capacity, the moment his lips began to utter abusive words. The provocation, so to speak, for the acts complained of had an immediate bearing on the official duties of the accused. It was because objection was taken to something that was being done by him in his official capacity as a Judge that the accused is said to have employed abuse and indulged in assault. These are acts which must be deemed to have been done when he purported to act in discharge of his official duties, though it is not part of his official duties to abuse or assault. If this was part of such official duties, there can be no offence. The question of obtaining the Government sanction arises only where the officer while acting in his official capacity steps beyond the limits of his authority or jurisdiction and does something which constitutes an offence. In such cases it has been enacted as a measure of protection against frivolous or vexatious complaints that complaints against certain officers should not be entertained without the sanction of Government. The section is one meant for protection of the Judge concerned and to interpret the words "in the discharge of his official duty" in a strict manner so as to include only acts done strictly within the scope of his authority or jurisdiction would render any protection unnecessary, because an act which is completely within the scope of one's official duties can never be an offence and there would be no necessity to apply the provisions of the section or to afford any protection in respect of such an act. It is only where offences are committed by a Judge that the necessity for protection comes in and the protection is limited to cases where the offences are committed while the Judge purports to act in his official capacity though undoubtedly he has outstepped the limits of his duties. In this case the circumstances clearly show that throughout, the President was acting as a Judge and therefore the protection which is meant to be given to persons in his position must be available to him.

v.
Ramachari.

The petition is therefore allowed and the proceedings of the Joint Magistrate are quashed for want of sanction of the Local Government.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), S. 192—Sale in execution of revenue decree—Sale alleged to be vitiated by fraud and material irregularity—Petition to set aside sale under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code—If Collector can entertain the petition.

S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act is not to be construed as allowing a person, whose holding is sold in execution of a Revenue decree, to approach the Revenue Court with an application for setting aside the sale under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code. His sole remedy is the procedure set forth in Ss. 111 to 131 of the Estates Land Act and he cannot have the sale set aside except under the circumstances specified in S. 131 of that Act.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Collector of Bezwada dated 5th November, 1936, in E. A. No. 290 of 1935 in E. P. No. 182 of 1934 in S. S. No. 115 of 1931.

A. Lakshmayya for Petitioner.

M. Appa Rao for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision against the order of the Sub-Collector of Bezwada passed on the 5th November, 1936, in a petition filed by a person interested in a holding sold in execution of a revenue decree. His complaint was that the sale is vitiated by fraud and material irregularity, particulars of which are given in paragraph 9 of the affidavit filed in support of the petition. The respondent in that petition was the decree-holder purchaser who took the objection that the Sub-Collector had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The objection was overruled and he has now preferred this revision against that order.

Gopala-

I am of opinion that the learned Sub-Collector went wrong in the view he took of the matter. He has taken the view that S. 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act is so worded as to make the procedure of O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, by which execution sales affected by material irregularity are allowed to be set aside, available to the respondent in this revision petition. That view is against the ruling of a Bench of this Court reported in Jagannatha Pillai v. Kathaperumal Pillai. In that case the Court had to decide the question as to whether a suit would lie in a Civil Court to set aside a sale held in execution of a rent decree on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale. It was held that the suit would lie. In the course of the judgment the learned Judges have held that the suit is not barred either by the provisions of the Estates Land Act or by O. 21, r. 92 (3), Civil Procedure Code. Jackson, J., at page 82 says:

"In the matter of sales in execution of a decree of the Revenue Court, S. 132 lays down that the provisions of Chapter VI shall be applicable. In other words, a ryot whose holding is sold up summarily under S. 77 (ii) and a ryot whose holding is sold up in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court shall each alike undergo the procedure set forth from Ss. 111 to 131."

I read these observations as meaning that S. 192 is not to be construed as allowing a person in the position of the respondent to approach the Revenue Court with an application for setting aside the sale except under the circumstances specified in S. 131. Part B of the Schedule to the Madras Estates Land Act which contains a list of the applications which are triable by a Collector refers only to an application under S. 131 for setting aside the sale of a holding. Further as pointed out by Madhavan Nair, J., in Ramakrishnayya v. Nagannas, S. 192 is not to be regarded as conferring a right to institute substantive applications in the Revenue Courts but as one which merely regulates the procedure in respect of matters over which jurisdiction is granted by S. 189. On this view which I consider to be the only correct view to take on the matter, the petition must be allowed and it is accordingly allowed with costs.

Company—Winding up—List of contributories—Person included as transferee—Failure to object—Expectation to be included as allottee—Application for removal of name from list of contributories—Maintainability.

If any person whose name is included in the register of shareholders of a company becomes aware that circumstances are such that if proceedings are brought against the company he would succeed in having his name removed and the register rectified, he must do so promptly. He must not stand by and wait and then at a later stage, with knowledge that he has been held out to the public as a shareholder of the company, seek to have his name removed. The fact that after his inclusion as transferee he expected that he would be put in as an allottee and not as transferee will not make any difference as regards his liability to be included in the list of contributories on the company being wound up.

K. N. Viswanathan instructed by C. S. Rajappa for the Company.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is the objection by Contributory No. 93, Mr. D. Balarama Reddi, against his name being included in the list of contributories. There is also an application by him for rectification of the Company's register of members by removal from the register of his name. His name appears in this register as the holder of 4,000 ordinary shares of the nominal value of Rs. 10 each, representing a total of Rs. 40,000. In respect of this, an amount of Rs. 8,000 has been paid and there remains a liability of a sum of Rs. 32,000.

* Application No. 2373 of 1938 and 13th December, 1938.
Application No. 1174 of 1938 in O. P. No. 77 of 1938.

The shares of which he is recorded in the register as the holder were not allotted to him. 3,500 shares were originally standing in the name of one R. S. Pillai and 500 in the name of Ranganatha Mudaliar. The objector contends that none of these shares have been legally transferred to him, that he made an application to the Company for allotment by the Company to him of 4,000 shares, and instead of allotment, the managing director has caused his name to be entered in the register as a transferee. That by reason of those facts he is entitled to have his name removed from the list of contributories.

Some time in the early part of the year 1934, it would seem that there were negotiations between the objector and the Company for him to become the Company's district agent for Nellore, Guntur and Cuddapah, the Company proposing to carry on the business of distributing and selling petroleum, motor oil and things of that nature and were contemplating doing this through agents. Negotiations appear to have taken place between the objector and a man named D. Bashiam Naidu. So far as this man is concerned, it was suggested that he was an agent for the objector D. Balarama Reddi; I am however quite satisfied that he was an agent for the Company or for one R. S. Mudaliar who was then its managing director and the guiding authority of the managing agents of the Company. The agreement between the Company and objector is dated 27th June, 1934, under which he is appointed district agent of the districts I mentioned and he is empowered to appoint sub-agents within the territory, and is Ex. A-3. Another document bearing the same date is Ex. A-1, an application form signed by the objector applying for 4,000 ordinary shares in respect of which the application form states that Rs. 2 per share was enclosed. These ordinary shares were payable, as to Rs. 2 on application; Rs. 3 on allotment and the balance in calls of Rs. 2-8-0 each. No shares were ever allotted to him, but his payment of Rs. 8,000 was acknowledged by the Company on 28th June, 1934, by Ex. B-1, a letter addressed to him at his native place in the Nellore District and acknowledges receipt of a cheque for Rs. 7,000 and Rs. 1,000 in cash sent through Mr. D. Bashiam Naidu. The late managing director, Mr. R. S. Mudaliar, and a man named Swaminathan who was an accountant or clerk of the Company, have given evidence. They both say that shortly after receipt by the Company of the application form and the sum of Rs. 8,000, the objector called at the Company's premises, and the result of the discussion with Mr. R. S. Mudaliar was that the objector agreed to have transferred to him 4,000 shares instead of the Company allotting to him that number, and Swaminathan adds that the objector himself requested that these shares should be transferred to him. It is now necessary to deal with the origin of these shares. I said earlier that 3,500 shares were standing in the name of one S. Ratnasabhpathi Pillai and 500 in the name of Ranganatha Mudaliar. In regard to the 3,500 block of shares, Mr. R. S. Mudaliar said that the original holder had not the necessary money to pay the application amounts when he obtained these shares. Rs. 2 each in respect of 3,500 shares would amount to Rs. 7,000 and this sum was advanced by him. He also said that he lent to Ranganatha Mudaliar Rs. 1,000 in connection with his 500 shares. The shares of 3,500 were allotted, according to the share registers of the Company, to S. Ratnasabhpathi Pillai in September, 1933, and if Mr. R. S. Mudaliar is correct in his recollection, the loan by him to that gentleman had been outstanding for nearly a year in June, 1934. Mr. R. S. Mudaliar says that when the objector agreed for a transfer of shares to be made in his name instead of shares being allotted, he himself received the Rs. 8,000 which had been sent to the Company and recouped himself in respect of the loans he had made both to S. Rathnasabhpathi Pillai and Ranganatha Mudaliar. Out of these monies, a sum of Rs. 1,500 was paid to D. Bashiam Naidu as commission on the transaction. Ex. A-4 is the receipt dated 3rd June, 1934, acknowledging receipt of that sum. The receipt states: "Received from C. R. Govind", who was the agent of R. S. Mudaliar. It seems very strange that such a large sum of Rs. 1,500 should be paid as commission in respect of a transaction involving Rs. 8,000—amounting to about 20 per cent. In my view, what was happening no doubt was, the objector was applying to the Company for shares and sent cash or its equivalent, as the first payment in respect of 4,000 shares. Mr. R. S. Mudaliar seeing an opportunity to recoup himself, did so by devoting the proceeds to himself and instead of there being any allotment by the Company—in which event of course the Company would have received the Rs. 8,000 and not R. S. Mudaliar—he effected the transfers I mentioned. In regard to the Rs. 3,500 there is a transfer form, Ex. A-5. The body of it is in the handwriting of Swaminathan and purports to bear date 1st April, 1935, and it is signed by S. Ratnasabhapathi Pillai alone, no witness attesting. There is no signature of the transferee at all, although in the body of the document, the objector's name as transferee appears. Swaminathan and R. S. Mudaliar explain this by saying that no signature was taken since there was already a signature on the application form. There is no transfer form in respect of the remaining 500 shares. Although the transactions regarding the agreement and the payment in respect of 4,000 shares was made in June, 1934, no transfer was then effected, and the objector's name was not entered in the share registers of the Company until the 1st April in the following year. In his evidence, the objector denied entirely what R. S. Mudaliar and Swaminathan said regarding the agreement to accept transferred shares instead of an allotment. He said it was some months following the despatch to the Company of his application form that he first visited the Company's premises. If the matter rested there, since there was no allotment and if the objector was not aware that his name was in the register of shareholders as a member of the Company, there is no doubt he would be entitled to have rectification and his name expunged from the register.

It is contended by the Official Liquidator that the objector did agree to shares being transferred to him. Although the informality of the method of transfer is not in any way defended, to substantiate that he had knowledge of the transfer to him of 4,000 shares and that his name was in the share register other facts are relied on. Firstly, the interview and incidents in October, 1934, three months following the alleged transactions in June, 1934, the objector went to the Company's premises. By that time, he had been appointed the district Agent and he would then be in a position to appoint sub-agents. Ex. A-2 is the counterfoil receipt book of the Company, the receipts bearing the name of the Company imprinted thereon, in which are four counterfoil receipts, Exs. A-2 (1), (?), (3) and (4) and dated 15th October, 1934. In respect of all these, R.S. Mudaliar's and Swaminathan's evidence is as follows: The objector arrived at the Company's premises on 15th October, 1934, and requested that the Company should issue four receipts to three persons in order to give those three persons confidence. The counterfoil receipts, Ex. A-2 (1), (2) purport to record a payment from J.

Sreeramulu of Rs. 200 in respect of each receipt, Ex. A-2 (3) of a like sum from Mr. M. Gopalakrishnamoorthy and Ex. A-2 (4) of the same amount from Mr. D. Subbarama Reddi. There is written on each of the four counterfoils that the sums of Rs. 200 were deposits of Rs. 2 per ordinary share. On the back of each counterfoil in pencil in Swaminathan's handwriting are the words "paid to Mr. Balarama Reddi." The two witnesses said that the objector informed them that he had arranged to transfer some of his 4,000 shares which he had obtained as transferee to the persons named in the receipts. The amounts in these counterfoils were not entered in any book of the Company, and so far as the Company is concerned, they are obviously fictitious documents, assuming the explanation is correct which R. S. Mudaliar and Swaminathan gave. The total amounts to Rs. 800, Rs. 400 from J. Sreeramulu and Rs. 200 each from the other two. The objector denied there was any such interview or that he made the requests as stated by the other two witnesses. He said he did not take away these receipts or share transfer forms as stated by the two witnesses. In answer to some questions I put he admitted he was negotiating with those three persons for them to become sub-agents of the Company and that he had notified the Company of this. He told me that unless and until he had appointed them as sub-agents there would be no need to send any communication to the party of such appointment. He also said that in respect of sub-agents they would each have to become the holders of 100 shares in respect of each taluq area. He had arranged for the appointment of Gopalakrishnamoorthy and Subbarama Reddi as sub-agents in respect of one taluq each, and Sreeramulu was to be the sub-agent for two taluqs. That means that the last named would, according to the objector's evidence, have to be the holder of 200 shares in respect of which he would have to pay Rs. 400 as application money and the others would each be the holders of 100 shares paying Rs. 200. It does seem to me a very strange coincidence that there should appear in the counterfoil receipt books of the Company the entries which I have mentioned, when no entry in respect of them appears in the books. The inference to be drawn is one of two alternatives, either, that the money which is the subject-matter had been stolen by R.S. Mudaliar or Swaminathan, or the explanation which they have both given.

So far as the first is concerned, if one or other or both these persons intended to rob the Company, I think it most unlikely, to say the least, that they would furnish evidence of this being done by recording in the counterfoil receipts the amounts which had come into their hands and make no entries in the books of the Company, as upon an audit or examination of the books the deficiency would at once become known. It might also be said there is the unlikelihood of receipts being given to persons who have not paid money to the Company but to one of the district agents. I think that the evidence of those two witnesses is corroborated by the evidence given by Mr. Balarama Reddi himself regarding the appointment of sub-agent and that before they could become the sub-agents they would have to obtain 100 shares in respect of each taluq. In the agreement, Ex. A-3, by which the objector was empowered to appoint sub-agents, there is not a word that the sub-agents would have to become shareholders of the Company. There is provision in the agreement for security deposits to be found by those sub-agents and the counterfoil receipts expressly say that the money was paid as Rs. 2 deposit in respect of a number of shares. I think that at this period the objector was trying to pass on some of his shares in order to recoup himself part of the monies he had paid.

Secondly, the next facts relied upon are that throughout the period following the transaction, from June, 1934 to April, 1938, when the winding up order of this Company was made, admittedly the objector never once either wrote or orally made a complaint that he had not been given shares for which he had made an application nor did he ask for the return of the Rs. 8,000 which he had paid. His explanation is that several times he saw R.S. Mudaliar at the Company's offices and spoke to him of the commencement of the Company's business and the provision of oil and petrol and other articles and was always put off by being told that shortly supplies would commence. He never made a single complaint in regard to his Rs. 8,000 being retained and his shares not having been allotted. In evidence, he said, as he expected supplies of oil he thought his Rs. 8,000 would be treated as a deposit against supplies. In considering whether one can accept that explanation, one has to bear in mind that before the winding up order he did not take up the position that he was not a shareholder and that Rs. 8,000 had been paid by way of a deposit against supplies or in respect of his agency agreement. Mr. Radhakrishnayya informed me that he was not maintaining that position although this payment of Rs. 8,000 was alleged by the objector to be a deposit in the earlier stages of these proceedings. Rs. 8,000 was paid in the first instance as a first contribution towards the 4,000 shares, namely, Rs. 2 per share. The objector is a man of some position and substance who is accustomed to dealing with and engaging in money transactions. Having sent to the Company an application form for 4,000 shares in June, 1934, and not having had any communication regarding it, one would have expected that he would have written to the company long before the expiration of four years in respect of the money he paid and the non-receipt of shares or non-allotment of shares, unless he had been a party to an arrangement by which he was to have shares transferred to him in place of allotted shares.

Thirdly, the other factors relied upon are that on occasions the objector inspected the share register. I think it most unlikely that he would have inspected it, and I am sure it is more unlikely having inspected it once he would do so on other occasions as it is suggested he did. The objector initiated a prosecution against R.S. Mudaliar. It matters not what it was for, save to mention that it was dismissed. The prosecution was in respect of the payment by the objector of Rs. 8,000, and the matters concerning the transaction were investigated by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who, on 1st September, 1937, delivered judgment dismissing the prosecution. The objector in evidence said that he obtained a copy of this judgment a few days later. Whilst he gave evidence in a vernacular language, I am quite sure he has a good knowledge of English, one of his letters, at least, has been written in English and all the documents in this case signed by him are also in that language. In the course of his judgment, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate said that the objector had filed this complaint after a long time from the date of Ex. A-3, the agency agreement, to avoid payment of Rs. 32,000, the further liability on the 4,000 shares which stood in the complainant's name in the Company's share register. The objector in evidence said he was unaware that his name appeared in the Company's register as a shareholder. It is quite clear that a day or two following 1st September, 1937, he must certainly have been aware that his name was included as a member of the Company in the share register. In his affidavit in support of his application to rectify the register, he does not say that he was unaware that his name was in the register. What he does emphasise is, he was unaware that he was in the register as a transferee and not as an allottee of shares. The objector took no proceedings or steps at all for the removal of his name from the list of members of the Company. Learned Counsel on behalf of the objector has said that the Company was in a very bad way from the middle of 1937 onwards and the registered office was difficult to find and for that reason his client took no steps, though he must have known by 1st September, 1937, or shortly after that his name was in the register. If he wished to take proceedings, he could have done so and obtained an order for substituted service of proceedings to rectify the register. He did nothing. The winding up order was made in April, 1938, and in the ordinary course, the Official Liquidator made an application to have the list of contributories settled. So far as the facts are concerned, I think the evidence of R. S. Mudaliar and Swaminathan, with regard to Ex. A-2 series the counter foil receipts, is corroborated by evidence of the objector that he had told the three persons whom he appointed as sub-agents they would have to hold 100 shares of the Company in respect of each taluq coupled with the fact that he took no steps and made no complaint throughout a period of nearly four years. I accept their evidence that there was an arrangement by which shares were to be transferred to the objector instead of being allotted. If nothing had been said and nothing had been done, the objector would not have silently stood by. The fact that he took no steps when the criminal complaint was dismissed was because he was already aware his name was on the register. When the criminal proceedings commenced the previous April, he must have been aware of those facts at that time and in my view, he was aware very shortly after 1st April, 1935. Those being the facts, the question is, what is the legal position? The objector has stood by for a long time, in my view, knowing that his name was on the register of shareholders and took no steps to have it rectified and his name removed. When a person knows that his name is included in the register of shareholders of a Company and stands by and allows his name to remain he is holding out to the public that he is a shareholder, and thereby he loses the right to have his name removed. This position has been the subject of consideration in a number of

"The delay of a fortnight in repudiating the shares makes it, to my mind, doubtful whether the repudiation in the case of a going concern would have been in time. No doubt where investigation is necessary some time must be allowed, as in *Central Railway Company of Venezuela v. Kisch*². But where as in the present case, the shareholder is at once fully informed of the circumstances, he ought to lose no time in repudiating."

In *Sewell's case*³, Lord Cairns, L.J., at page 138, in the course of his judgment, said :

"Mr. Sewell, according to the conclusion I have drawn from the facts, did know in the month of May, 1864, that regularly or irregularly, rightly or wrongly, under this authority, he had been put upon the list as a shareholder for 23 shares. If he had any doubt as to the manner in which the authority had been pursued, it was for him to have inquired whether he could have asserted any right against either Mr. Sichel, or Mr. Hankey, or the Company, arising out of the mode in which the authority had been pursued. Whether he could have disclaimed the ownership of these 23 shares may be doubtful, but I assume in his favour that he might have had a case of that kind. It appears to me that not having done so, and being aware that he was held out to the public as the holder of 23 shares, it is too late for him months or years afterwards to enter into that question."

In *Lawrence's case*⁴, Lord Cairns, L.J., at page 423, said :

"It thus appears that on the 16th of May Mr. Lawrence and his legal adviser had in their hands the whole of the documents the variance between which is the ground of the motion to remove the name of Mr. Lawrence from the register. If he had at that time a right to repudiate his shares, it was a right which, in my opinion, might be waived; and if asserted, could not be asserted with effect unless asserted promptly and distinctly. No attempt at repudiation took place for upwards of four months, and during this time Mr. Lawrence must be taken, in my opinion, to have known, not merely that his name was on the register, and that he was so held out to the world as a shareholder in and member of the Company, but also that his son was holding communications with, and endeavouring to influence the conduct of, the directors, on the footing of Mr. Lawrence being a shareholder."

From these authorities, it is clear that if any person whose name is included in the register becomes aware that circumstances are such that if proceedings are brought against the Company he would succeed in having his name removed and the register rectified, he must do so promptly. He must not stand by and wait and then at a later stage, with knowledge he has been held out to the public as a shareholder of the Company, seek to have his name removed. In the cases which I have quoted, the grounds were that the contract under which the shares were obtained could be set aside as void. Mr. Radhakrishnayya differentiated between the principles in these cases and the present. He contended that the objector applied for 4,000 shares to be allotted to him by the Company and expected to have his name in the share register for that number of shares as allottee. Whilst he might have known that his name was in the register as a shareholder, he thought it was because he was an allottee, and until he received a communication from the Official Liquidator after the winding up started he was unaware that he was a transferee. Since he is on the share register as a transferee and not as an allottee, he is entitled now to have his name removed and the register rectified. In my view, that contention must fail. If he has assented to his name being included amongst the shareholders, then how can he now say:

"Since I expected to be included as an allottee and since I find that I am included in another capacity as transferee, I am entitled to have my name removed."

The position in the present case is, I think, covered by Bowen, L.J., in Ex parte Sandys, where the learned Lord Justice at page 117, said:

"If the case stood there, there would have been an end of the matter. The original contract was not one which could have been enforced, and in giving her the shares without attaching the conditions to them, which she made a portion of her offer, the Company were not giving her what she asked for. But the matter does not rest there, and this is just the point of the case. After her name was placed on the register and after she knew that her name was on the register, she did certain acts which were only consistent with an intention on her part to be treated as a member of the Company, and to treat herself as a member of the Company in respect of these particular shares which had been so appropriated to her. If that is not evidence of an agreement to be a member, I really do not know what is. I order goods of one description from a merchant; he cannot compel me to take goods of a different description, and he does not complete his contract by giving me goods of a different description; but if he sends me goods which are not according to the contract and which are not within the description of the contract, and I nevertheless elect to take them, my act with regard to them is evidence of a new contract, which the law will imply, to pay for that which I have kept. It is not that I promise in so many words to pay; it is that I do acts from which the law will imply in favour of the opposite party a promise. Here it is not that she kept all these new shares promising expressly to release the Company from the original condition and to pay the entire sum, but she consented to allow her name to remain on the register and to keep the shares although they had not been allotted to her in conformity with the condition which she had imposed in her letter of application."

Here, the objector desired to become a member of the Company and to be on the register by having shares allotted to him; he has been included in the register by having shares transferred to him. The contention of the objector fails. In fact, he has in no way been prejudiced because the shares which would have been allotted to him would have had two rupees paid, and that is the position in regard to the share in respect of which he has been included in the register. By reason of the objector standing by in the way he did, I am quite satisfied that it was with full knowledge that his name was on the register by reason of his consent that shares should be transferred instead of being allotted to him.

The result is, the Official Liquidator's application succeeds and Mr. D. Balarama Reddi will be included in the list of contributories in respect of 4,000 shares. His application for rectification of the register is therefore dismissed. There will be no order for costs.

Where, acting under the power given to the Court by proviso to O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, to call upon a petitioner filing a petition under O. 21, r. 90 to furnish security, the Court ordered the petitioner to deposit the sale amount in cash but the petitioner tendered immovable property only as security which the Court refused to accept and accordingly rejected the petition, Held, the order rejecting the petition is an order "refusing to set aside a sale" within the meaning of O. 43, r. 1 (j), Civil Procedure Code, and therefore appealable.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam dated 20th July, 1938, and made in A. The Court delivered the following

Marudamuthu
Mudaliar
v.
Venkatarama Aiyar.

JUDGMENT.—This Revision Petition raises a question of some importance turning on the effect of the proviso recently added in this Presidency to O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code. Under that proviso, the Court to which an application under r. 90 is presented may “before admitting the application call upon the applicant to furnish security.” In the present case, the Court ordered the applicant to deposit the sale amount in cash. He tendered a draft bond offering immovable property as security. The Court declined to accept it and accordingly rejected the petition. Against this order the petitioner preferred an appeal to the lower appellate Court and that Court has dismissed the appeal on the ground that the case does not fall within the terms of O. 43, r. 1 (j) which gives a right of appeal against an order “refusing to set aside a sale.” The learned Judge was of opinion that an order contemplated by this sub-rule was one passed after the Court had entertained the application and not one whereby the Court declined to entertain the application.

There can be little doubt that at the time when the sub-clauses of O. 43, r. 1 were framed, this distinction between an order on the petition and an order declining to entertain the petition could not have been thought of, so far as applications under O. 21, r. 90 are concerned. A distinction was recognised by the Code in the case of plaints; and different provisions were made for appeals against adjudications on the merits and appeal against orders rejecting the plaint. But as the scheme of the Code as it originally stood did not contemplate any such differentiation in respect of an application under r. 90 of O. 21, it is unreasonable to expect any recognition of that distinction in the rules relating to appeals therefrom. When the proviso now in question was recently added to r. 90, the attention of the framers of the rule does not appear to have been specifically directed to the question of appealability. There has indeed been some discussion as to the legality of the proviso itself; but this Court has so far declined to hold the new rule to be ultra vires. While I follow that ruling, I do not wish to deprive the petitioner of whatever benefit he may get, even if it be a mere matter of

v.
Venkat-

accident, out of the language of sub-cl. (j) of O. 43, r. 1, as it stands.

The position so far as the present case is concerned is different from what may arise in cases where a right of appeal will be available only by treating any disposal as amounting to a "decree" because in that case the Court has to consider, in view of the definition of the word "decree" whether there has been an adjudication determining the rights of the parties. An order merely rejecting a plaint will thus not prima facie fall within the definition of "decree". But sub-cl. (j) of O. 43, r. 1, merely refers to an order "refusing to set aside a sale". The learned Judge thinks that such an order of refusal prima facie implies that the petition had been admitted. As I have already pointed out, this question could never have arisen under the scheme of the Code as it formerly stood. I cannot therefore call in aid any argument founded upon the probable intention of the Legislature. I have only to see whether the etymological meaning of the words found in the sub-clause will or will not apply to the case.

If a person applies to have a sale set aside I do not see how a rejection of his petition is any the less a refusal to set aside the sale because the Court passed that order even before admitting the petition. After all, on an appeal against such an order, the appellate Court can only consider the reasonableness or otherwise of the order refusing to admit the petition; and I prefer not to deprive the petitioner of the right to seek the opinion of the appellate Court in the matter, unless it is possible to hold that the language of O. 43, r. 1 (j) is clearly incapable of being construed as comprehending the order of rejection.

The lower appellate Court's order is accordingly set aside and the learned Subordinate Judge is directed to deal with the appeal on the merits. But the question is certainly novel and not free from difficulty; I accordingly make no order as to costs.

The High Court or any Judge of the High Court cannot issue the writ of habeas corpus in cases covered by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Where a Judge of the High Court issues a rule nisi purporting to exercise the common law jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus his order is without jurisdiction and is consequently null and void.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

ORDER.—The determination of this matter involves questions of law and of jurisdiction, including a question whether the decision of a Full Bench of this High Court is rightly decided. We therefore order under r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules that this matter be referred to a Full Bench.

Our reasons for taking this course will be stated fully later in the day.

arrested persons who were directors of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank now in liquidation, to the District Magistrate, Trivandrum, in the Trivandrum State by the Shencottah Passenger Train leaving Egmore Station Madras at about 11 A.M. The petition for issue of writ of habeas corpus and the petition for stay were made to me at my residence early in the morning of the 21st October, 1938. As the sittings of the High Court would begin only at 10-45 A.M., that is, only 15 minutes before the train by which the arrested persons were intended to be taken beyond the jurisdiction of the High Court was to leave Madras, I made the following order on the petition for stay:—

“As the matter is extremely urgent the Chief Presidency Magistrate should detain these prisoners in his custody and not send them away from Madras pending further orders of the High Court.”

It is this order, which is now sought to be vacated on the sole ground that it is an order made without jurisdiction.

This objection of absence of jurisdiction is formulated in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the present petition. The ground of objection stated in paragraph 5, namely, “it is also doubtful whether the High Court has jurisdiction over proceedings taken in pursuance of the Extradition Act” was not pressed during the learned Crown Prosecutor’s argument before me, presumably because his doubt had been resolved before the petition came up for hearing. In any case, there is no substance in the objection; there have been numerous cases arising under the Extradition Act brought up to High Courts by means of applications for issue of writs of habeas corpus and decided on their merits. The High Court’s jurisdiction to issue such writs has not been removed by any provision in the Extradition Act, and there cannot be any doubt about such jurisdiction. This objection therefore fails.

The objection that was pressed at the hearing was formulated in paragraph 4 as follows: “The Crown apprehends that the order is passed without jurisdiction as any matter relating to the exercise of powers under S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code, could be only (sic) by a Bench of the High Court as per r. 2 (a) of the Appellate Side Rules of the High Court”. This rule runs as follows: “All applications for a writ of habeas corpus shall go Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 1003 of 1938.—This is an application, purporting to be under S. 561-A of the Code, of Criminal Procedure and S. 223 of the Government of India Act, 1935, in which the petitioner prays this Court to declare that the orders made by Mr. Justice Pandrang Row, on the 21st, 24th and 26th October, 1938, are void and of no legal effect and to quash the said orders.

The petitioner is the District Magistrate of Trivandrum, the capital city of the State of Travancore. The petition is supported by an affidavit sworn by a Superintendent of Police in the Criminal Investigation Department, Travancore. The Superintendent of Police alleges that the Political Agent, Madras States, on the requisition of the Travancore Government issued warrants of arrest under S. 7 of the Indian Extradition before a Bench of Judges dealing with criminal work". The rule does not in terms prohibit a single Judge from making an interim order for the purpose of ensuring that the application for the writ will be heard by the Bench before it is too late, that is, before the prisoners concerned are removed beyond the jurisdiction of the High Court. There is an inherent jurisdiction to preserve the jurisdiction of the High Court and to prevent evasion thereof. This, however, is an argument of comparatively little significance, unless the rule relied can be said to take away the jurisdiction of a single Judge to entertain and decide applications for a writ of habeas corpus. It is obvious that no rule made under the Letters Patent and under the Government of India Acts like R. 2 (a) of the Appellate Side Rules can take away or destroy any jurisdiction conferred by the Letters Patent and affirmed by the Government of India Act; further no such rule can be inconsistent with the law as laid down by the highest judicial tribunal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. For instance, if the law is that each Judge of the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus and that he is moreover bound to hear and determine the application on its merits, notwithstanding that some other Judge has already refused a similar application, any rule which renders it impossible to perform this duty which the law lays upon the Judge to whom such an application is made must be deemed to be ultra vires as being inconsistent with law.

That there is such jurisdiction in each Judge of the High Court of Justice in England and that there is such a duty laid upon him by law are points on which no doubt is possible after the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Eshugbayi Eleko v. Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria, (1928) A.C. 459. The judgment in that case which was delivered by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Hallsham) is of unquestioned and unquestionable authority, and is binding on all High Courts in this country. In that case an application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus was dismissed on the merits by the acting Chief Justice of Nigeria on 12th October, 1925 and a fresh application for the same purpose was made before a Puisne Judge on 8th December, 1925; on objection taken by the Attorney-General that the fresh application could tion Act for the arrest of four subjects of H.H. the Maharajah of Travancore, who were at the time in Madras city, on charges of offences for which the said persons were liable to be extradited. The warrants, it is alleged, were issued to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras, and the four persons named were apprehended on the evening of the 20th of October last, and produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate for the purpose of being escorted to the frontier of Travancore and there handed over to the Travancore State Police. It is further alleged that on the morning of the 21st of October, the four persons moved the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Pandrang Row at his residence, to release them from custody by issuing a habeas corpus, and that thereupon the learned Judge ordered the not be entertained in view of the dismissal of the previous application by the acting Chief Justice, the Puisne Judge upheld the objection and dismissed the fresh application on that ground. On an appeal from this dismissal the full Court (of Nigeria), in a considered judgment, pronounced on 1st June, 1926, upheld the order of the Puisne Judge and decided that the Puisne Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. On appeal to their Lordships' Board it was contended before their Lordships that, by the common law of England which applies in Nigeria, "it is the right of any imprisoned person to apply successively to every Tribunal competent to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and that each Tribunal must determine such an application upon its merits unfettered by the decision of any other tribunal of co-ordinate jurisdiction, even if the grounds urged are exactly the same" (page 465). On behalf of the respondents Mr. (now Sir) Stafford Cripps "admitted the existence of the right to make successive applications but he argued that the applications must be to different courts" (page 465). After considering the effect of decided cases quoted on both sides, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee relied on the earlier authorities which showed that the writ was originally issuable out of the court of King's Bench and out of the court of Chancery and on the Habeas Corpus Act of 1640 which expressly recognised the right of the court of Common Pleas to order the writ to issue, and also on subsequent Act of 1679 which provided inter alia that "the Lord Chancellor or any one of His Majesty's Justices might grant a habeas corpus in vacation and impose heavy penalty upon any Judge who wrongfully refused to entertain the application." It was conceded for the respondent that under the terms of this statute applications could be made in vacation to successive Judges of the same court. This led to the curious result upon the respondent's argument that if application were made in vacation it could be renewed to each Judge of the Court, but that if it were made in term it could only be made once to the court of Chancery and once to each of the three courts of common law." (p. 467). Their Lordships then went on to say that "a far more serious consequence of the respondent's argument would be the effect upon the right to apply for this writ of the Judicature Act of 1873" which combined into one court all these four courts and others as well. Their Lordships say, "If, therefore, the respondent is right in contending that an application for a writ of habeas corpus can only be entertained once by any one court. It necessarily follows that the effect of the Judicature Act must have been to deprive the subject of the right which he had previously enjoyed of applying successively to the Court of Chancery and to each of the three common law courts and to limit him in future to one application to the Supreme Court of Judicature. Their Lordships would be reluctant to reach such a conclusion unless compelled to do so by clear words. The writ of habeas corpus is a high prerogative writ for the protection of the liberty of the subject and it would be a startling result if a statute enacted primarily for simplification of procedure should have materially cut down that protection. But in fact their Lordships do not think that the Judicature Act has had this result or that the contention of the respondent is well founded" (p. 467). I have quoted these observations in extenso as they are directly in point in deciding whether r. 2 (a) of the Appellate Side Rules is intra vires and if so whether it takes away the jurisdiction of each Judge of the High Court to entertain applications for issue of a writ of habeas corpus and absolves him from his absolute legal duty of hearing and determining the applications made to him. Their Lordships say in conclusion that in their view "each Judge is a tribunal to which application can be made within the meaning of the rule and every Judge must hear the application on the merits" (p. 468). And they add: "It follows that although by the Judicature Act the Courts have been combined in the one High Court of Justice each Judge of that Court still has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus in term time or in vacation, and that he is bound to hear and determine such an application on its merits notwithstanding that some other Judge has already refused a similar application. The same principle must apply in the case of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Nigeria. It follows that in the opinion of this Board the learned Judge was wrong in refusing to hear the application in the present case on its merits and the appeal must be allowed (p. 468).

Chief Presidency Magistrate to detain the prisoners in his custody pending further orders of the High Court. The deponent further states that at the instance of the Provincial Government the Crown Prosecutor of Madras made an application to the High Court to vacate that order, that the Crown Prosecutor's motion was heard by the learned Judge on the 22nd October, and that the learned Judge refused to cancel the order passed by him on the 21st of October.

It is well settled that the Judges of this High Court have the same jurisdiction as the Judges of the old Supreme Court which was succeeded by it, and cl. 8 of the Letters Patent of the Supreme Court clearly says that the Chief Justice and the Puisne Judges have such jurisdiction and authority as "our Justices of the King's Bench have and may lawfully exercise" within England. It is sufficient to rely on the authority of the Full Bench decision in Govindan Nair, In re, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 396: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 922 (F.B.), which approved the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J. The deponent says nothing about the order passed by the learned Judge on the 26th of October. Calling for the papers on the 27th of October, when this motion was made before us, we found that on the evening of the 26th the learned Judge had issued a writ nisi of habeas corpus for the production before him at 10-45 A.M. on the 28th of October of the bodies of the four persons named in the application. These are the three orders passed by our learned brother which the applicant desires us to declare void and to quash.

person has a right to be protected from illegal imprisonment by the issue of the prerogative writ of habeas corpus. The King's Bench in England exercised the power of issuing such writs throughout the British Empire until the statute known as the Habeas Corpus Act, 25 and 26 Vic. c. 20 was passed. By that Act the powers of the King's Bench are limited to England and such places outside England which have no local Court competent to exercise the power. It follows that these petitioners must have a right to such a writ, and it is a matter of absolute right either from a Court in this country or from the Court of King's Bench sitting in London. In our judgment it is fully established that this Court has all necessary powers and is competent to grant writ. . . . This Court has, however, succeeded under the High Courts of Judicature in India Act, 24 and 25 Vic. c. 104, and the Letters Patent issued thereunder to all the powers of the Supreme Court of Madras and that Supreme Court had by its Charter of 1800, Art. 8 given to it the powers over 'all the territories which now are or hereafter may be subject to or dependent upon the Government of Madras aforesaid and to have such jurisdiction and authority as our justices of our Court of King's Bench have and may lawfully exercise within that part of Great Britain called England as far as circumstances will admit'. These words give to the Supreme Court the right usually exercised by the King's Bench in England of issuing the writ of habeas corpus'. The judgment thereupon deals with the question whether Ss.491 and 456, Criminal Procedure Code, have reduced or limited the power of issuing writs of habeas corpus and answers it in the negative. This Full Bench decision is binding on me and its authority has not been questioned, so far as I am aware since it was pronounced 16 years ago in this province.

The conjoint effect of this Full Bench decision and of the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Eshugbayi Eleko v Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria, (1928) A.C. 459, is that the law as to the jurisdiction and the duty of each Judge of the High Court to entertain and determine applications for issue of a writ of habeas corpus is the same as the law in England and each Judge of this High Court is a tribunal to which such applications can be made and must hear them on the merits. The jurisdiction is thus of a peculiar and exceptional character as every Judge has it, and not merely the High Court of which he forms a part. Further, the Judge has no option in the matter, and cannot lawfully decline jurisdiction or refuse to entertain and determine applications made to him. It would be contrary to his oath of office to do so.

The learned Crown Prosecutor relied on the provisions of S. 108 of the Government of India Act 1915 which confers rule-making power on the High

As to what happened before our learned brother Pandrang Row, J., on the 21st of October, we take the facts from his order on Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 990 of 1938. The petition for issue of a writ of habeas corpus and the petition for stay were presented to our learned brother at his residence early in the morning of the 21st of October. As the sittings of the High Court would begin at 10-45 A.M. and as it was proposed to despatch the prisoners to Trivandrum by a train leaving Egmore station at 11 A.M. there was no time to move

Court in respect of the exercise of jurisdiction by single judges or Division Courts and requires the Chief Justice to determine what judge is to sit alone and which judges are to constitute Division Courts. This does not mean, as contended by the Crown Prosecutor, that either the single judges or the Division Courts derive their jurisdiction from the Chief Justice or that the manner in which they should exercise jurisdiction is determined by the Chief Justice. The jurisdiction is conferred by the Letters Patent and the manner of its exercise is determined by the judges who exercise it according to their own notions of what the law requires them to do. The assignment or allotment of work by the Chief Justice to the judges determines only the cases in which jurisdiction is to be exercised by particular judges. This cannot, however, deprive any judge of his individual jurisdiction to entertain applications for issue of a writ of habeas corpus; nor does it absolve him from his individual duty to determine them on the merits. The Crown Prosecutor relied on certain obiter dicta of Devadoss, J., in Kunhammad Hajee, In re, (1922) 44 M.L.J. 450: I.L.R. 46 Mad. 382 at 397, to the effect that if a judge "who has been asked to do admission work takes it into his head to do sessions work or without being asked to do original side work calls up original side cases of his own accord and disposes of them, he may be said to be acting without jurisdiction." The learned Judge did not expressly refer to applications for issue of a writ of habeas corpus and there is no reason to suppose that he had taken them in his mind when he made these observations. The jurisdiction and the duty of each Judge in this matter were declared, unmistakably by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee only five years later in 1928; till then it appears to have been hardly realised that the entertainment and determination of habeas corpus writ applications by each Judge constituted a peculiar kind of work which has to be done according to law by the judge to whom the applications are made and therefore cannot and need not be assigned by the Chief Justice, this work or case not being of an assignable nature; it has to be taken up, according to law as laid down by the Judicial Committee by the Judge, to whom the application is made and by no other Judge or Judges who no doubt must entertain further similar applications which may be made to them and determine them on the merits. A duty imposed by the law itself on a particular Judge cannot be transferred to another Judge. The jurisdiction and the duty as regards applications for a writ of habeas corpus are in genere and do not fall within the frame work of S. 108 of the Government of India Act or any rule framed thereunder. The individual jurisdiction and the individual duty of each Judge in this matter are not affected in any way by any statutory provision or rule. I am, therefore, of opinion r. 2 (a) of the Appellate Side Rules is ultra vires, because its effect is to take the High Court after 10-45 A.M. Our learned brother therefore made the following order on the petition for stay:

"As the matter is extremely urgent the Chief Presidency Magistrate should detain these prisoners in his custody and not send them away from Madras pending further orders of the High Court."

Later in the day the Crown Prosecutor presented a petition (Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 990 of 1938) under S. 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code in which he prayed the High Court to vacate the stay order passed by our learned away the individual jurisdiction which each Judge has in this matter and to prevent the performance of his legal duty to determine on the merits any application for issue of a writ of habeas corpus made to him. In my opinion, therefore, I had jurisdiction to entertain the application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus and to make the interim order; further, it was my legal duty to entertain the application and to determine it on its merits. In my view, the law left me no option in the matter—the law as laid down by the highest tribunal—the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—which is sufficient warrant for what I have done. As I observed in the course of the hearing, there would have been a failure of duty on my part if I had not exercised jurisdiction in the manner I did. I was of that opinion when I entertained the application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus and made the interim order now sought to be vacated on behalf of the Crown and I still adhere to that opinion. The Crown Prosecutor, no doubt, further contended that the application for issue of the writ should not come before one Judge in the first instance and then be posted before a Bench; I expressed my concurrence then and there and I continue to be of the same opinion. But it does not follow from this that there is any absence of jurisdiction in me to entertain and determine the application for issue of the writ.

In short, the jurisdiction and duty of every Judge of the High Court to entertain and determine applications for issue of a writ of habeas corpus made to him are, in my opinion, not affected by any statutory enactment or any valid rule made on the authority of any statutory enactment. It is a well-settled rule, as Sundara Aiyar, J., said in In re R. Nataraja Aiyar, (1912) 23 M.L. 393 at 403: I.L.R. 36 Mad. 72, that the powers of a superior Court can be limited or taken away only by some express provision to that effect and as observed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the same case at page 413 the writs of habeas corpus and certiorari are high prerogative writs vested in the King's Bench (and also in the Judges of High Courts in India as will be seen from In re Govindan Nair, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 396: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 922 (F.B.) and Eshugbagi Eleko v Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria, (1928) A.C. 459, as representing the powers of the Crown to do justice in extraordinary cases. Of all the "high prerogative writs" none is as high as the writ of habeas corpus which affords protection to the liberty of the subject and is for that reason issuable by any single Judge of the High Court. In this matter, the subject has the right to invoke any Judge's jurisdiction and thereupon the duty devolves on that Judge to determine on the merits whether a writ shall issue or not. This is the law as I understand it and it follows from this that the objection on the score of jurisdiction fails. No other objection being made to the interim order, this petition to vacate it is dismissed.

brother at his residence. This petition was heard by our learned brother on Saturday, the 22nd of October, and was dismissed by him. In a considered order pronounced by our learned brother on Monday, the 24th of October, his reasons for dismissing the Crown Prosecutor's petition were set forth at length.

Meanwhile the substantive application for a writ had been sent into the registry, of the Court and had been posted for hearing in the ordinary course. According to the rules of the Court it came before the Criminal Bench then sitting which consisted of ourselves. When it came on for hearing it was represented by learned Counsel for the petitioners that the matter was already before our learned brother Pandrang Row, J., and that we could not proceed to hear the application. A copy of the considered order just mentioned which had then been pronounced by our learned brother was placed before us in support of this contention. Learned Counsel for the District Magistrate of Trivandrum contended on the other hand that Pandrang Row, J., had never directed that the substantive petition should be posted before himself, and had never intended to dispose of it sitting as a single Judge. Here was a direct conflict of statement. The tenor of the learned Judge's considered order on the Crown Prosecutor's application appeared to be in favour of the applicant's view although we observe that the application was entitled "In the High Court of Judicature at Madras, under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code". Learned Counsel for the applicants stated categorically in answer to our question that the application was for a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus and not a petition to the High Court to exercise its powers under S. 491. We resolved the difficulty by referring the matter to our learned brother who replied that the application was pending before himself and that in his view he had power to dispose of it. We then recorded our opinion that we could not go on with the hearing of the application as it was already before another Judge of the Court. Subsequently on the 26th of October, Pandrang Row, J., allowed the application and issued a writ nisi, and for the present the matter stands there. The motion before us now is to quash his proceedings on the grounds (1) that a single Judge of the Court has no jurisdiction in such matters and (2) that for all purposes covered by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure neither the High Court nor any Judge has power to issue a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus.

The motion came on for hearing before us on Thursday, the 27th of October. It was not possible to hear the arguments of the learned Counsel for the prisoners on that day because the arguments of the learned Counsel for the petitioner had not ended till nearly 4 P.M. The matter was urgent the writ having been made returnable at the opening of the Court on the following day, and accordingly, at the close of the hearing of the 27th we directed that the operation of the writ nisi be suspended, and that further proceedings in the matter of Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 985 be stayed till the further orders of this Court. At the request of learned Counsel for the prisoners we adjourned the hearing to the 31st of October.

The chief proposition which the learned Counsel for the petitioner seeks to have established is that the High Court has no jurisdiction to issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus in a case like this. S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the High Court power to issue directions "of the nature of Habeas Corpus" in certain cases and for certain purposes; in those cases and for those purposes, learned Counsel contends, the powers conferred by S. 491 are the only powers the High Court has. In the present case the applicants before our learned brother alleged that the four prisoners had been arrested unjustifiably on warrants issued illegally, and prayed that they be set at liberty. The case is clearly covered by S. 491 (1) (a) and (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and if this Court has no jurisdiction to issue a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus in cases to which S. 491 applies, it will follow that our learned brother's order for the issue of a writ nisi is without jurisdiction and ought to be quashed.

Secondly learned Counsel for the petitioners has contended that even if this High Court still has power to issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus nevertheless r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules is intra vires and binding on all the Judges of the Court.

The third proposition which the Counsel for the petitioners has contended is that even if a single Judge of this High Court has jurisdiction to issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus, the proper procedure for issue of such writ has not been followed in the present case.

Our learned brother stated in his order of the 24th of October that the contention on behalf of the Crown was that his order of the 21st of October was without jurisdiction, since any matter relating to the exercise of powers under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code could only be disposed of by a Bench of the High Court (vide r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules). Our learned brother then proceeded to consider whether r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules was intra or ultra vires. On a consideration of the Privy Council case reported in *Eshugbayi Eleko v. Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria*¹, the Full Bench case reported in Govindan Nair, In re,² and the decisions referred to in the latter case, our learned brother held that each single Judge of the High Court has jurisdiction and indeed a duty to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus. This duty according to our learned brother's view is laid upon him by virtue of his position as a Judge of this Court, and is not affected by any statutory enactment, or any valid rule made on the authority of a statutory enactment. He was therefore of opinion that r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules is ultra vires, because its effect is to take away the individual jurisdiction which each Judge has in this matter, and to prevent the performance of his legal duty to determine on the merits any application for issue of a writ of habeas corpus made to him. "The jurisdiction," our learned brother says:

"Is thus of a peculiar and exceptional character, as every Judge has it, and not merely the High Court of which he forms part. Further that Judge has no option in the matter, and cannot lawfully decline jurisdiction or refuse to determine or entertain applications made to him. It would be contrary to his oath of office to do so."

In paragraph 5 of his order our learned brother refers to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and relies upon cl. 8 of the Letters Patent of the Supreme Court, in which it is stated that the Chief Justice and the puisne Judges have such jurisdiction and authority as "Our Justices of Our Court of King's Bench have and may lawfully exercise" within England. He goes on to point out that under the Indian High Court Act (24 and 25 Vic., Chap. 104) and the Letters Patent issued thereunder the High Court succeeded to all the powers of the "Supreme Court". Learned Counsel for the respondents before us relies strongly on these arguments. It has been pointed out however by learned Counsel for the petitioner before us that the reference to the High Courts Act and the Letters Patent issued thereunder is incomplete: In S. 9 of the High Courts Act it is provided that:

"Each of the High Courts to be established under this Act shall have and exercise all such . . . jurisdiction original and appellate and all such powers and authority for and in relation to the administration of justice . . . as Her Majesty may by such Letters Patent as aforesaid grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitation as to the exercise of original, civil and criminal jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Presidency town as may be prescribed thereby."

And save as by such Letters Patent may be otherwise directed and subject and without prejudice to the Legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court to be established in this Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts."

These provisions are reproduced in the first Letters Patent issued on the 26th of June, 1862. In the Letters Patent issued on the 28th of December, 1865, it was further provided in cl. 44 as follows:—

"And we do further ordain and declare that all provisions of these our Letters Patent are subject to the Legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council, exercised at meetings for the purpose of making laws and regulations, and also of the Governor-General in cases of emergency under the provisions of an Act of the 24th and 25th years of our Reign, Chapter 67, and may be in all respects amended and altered thereby."

This clause in the Letters Patent has been continued in the same terms until the present day. It has sometimes been objected that the Legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council are restricted by the proviso to S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (namely, 24 and 25 Vic., Chapter 67). That proviso is to the effect:

"That the said Governor-General in Council shall not have the power of making any laws or regulations which shall repeal or in any way affect any of the provisions of this Act . . . or any provisions of any Act, passed in this present Session of Parliament, or hereafter to be passed, in anywise affecting Her Majesty's Indian Territory or the inhabitants thereof."

The Indian High Courts Act was passed in the same Session as the Indian Councils Act. With regard to this contention it is sufficient to point out that the Indian Legislature's powers of modifying or taking away the jurisdiction of the High Court are specially reserved by S. 9 of the High Courts Act just cited. Since the High Courts Act was passed later in the Session than the Indian Councils Act it seems probable that this provision was deliberately made in the High Courts Act, in order to prevent any question being raised under S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act as to the power of the Governor in Council or Legislative Council to modify the exercise by the High Court of the powers previously possessed by the Supreme Court, vide the remarks of Rankin, C. J., in Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal.

We shall presently give our reasons for holding that the rules made by this Court relating to this matter are not ultra vires but on the contrary derive their power from the statute itself and the Letters Patent. Our learned brother's opinion that the powers and authority inherited by the High Court from the Supreme Court are not affected even by any statutory provision, has been strenuously attacked by learned Counsel for the petitioner. His position is that such powers can be so affected. He contends further that the power and authority to issue writs of habeas corpus in cases covered by S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code has been entirely taken away by valid and binding legislation of the Governor-General in Council.

Mr. Sitarama Rao for the respondents has not attempted to argue that the Governor-General in Legislative Council has no power to abolish the jurisdiction of the High Court to issue the Common Law writ of habeas corpus. His contention is that although the Indian Legislature has such power, the High Court's jurisdiction in this matter has not in fact been abolished. We shall proceed to deal with this contention. In S. 82 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872 (Act X of 1872) it is provided that:

"Neither the High Courts nor any Judge of such High Court shall issue any writ of habeas corpus mainprise, de homine replegiando, nor any other writ of a like nature beyond the Presidency Town."

In S. 148 of the High Courts Criminal Procedure Act, 1875 (Act X of 1875) it was provided that any of the High Courts at Fort William, Madras and Bombay might in certain cases more particularly described in clauses (a) to (g) whenever it should think fit, issue directions of the nature of a habeas corpus. This section is the fore-runner of S. 491 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure. These directions could only be issued to deal with prisoners or defendants within the local limits of the High Court's ordinary original criminal jurisdiction. It is provided further that:

"Neither the High Court nor any Judge thereof shall hereafter issue any writ of habeas corpus for any of the above purposes."

It is quite clear that the prisoners in the case before us fall within the description given in clauses (b) and (c) of S. 148 of Act X of 1875. The position taken on behalf of the petitioner therefore is that by S. 82 of Act X of 1872 the High Court's jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus beyond the presidency town was abolished, and by S. 148 of Act X of 1875 the High Court's jurisdiction to issue such a writ within the presidency town for any of the purposes indicated in that section was abolished. When the Code of Criminal Procedure was revised in Act X of 1882 it was provided in S. 2 that certain enactments mentioned in the first schedule should be repealed. Act X of 1872 and Act X of 1875, except S. 144 and portions of S. 146, are found in Sch. I and it follows therefore that the sections we have already referred to in Acts X of 1872 and X of 1875 were repealed. But it is provided in S. 2 of Act X of 1882 that the repeal shall not "restore any jurisdiction or form of procedure not then existing or followed."

The same provision is repeated in S. 2 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act V of 1898). These sections enunciate the general principle formulated in Ss. 6 and 7 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897). Mr. Sitarama Rao put forward in a half-hearted manner a proposition that the legislature in Acts X of 1872 and 1875 did not purport to abolish the jurisdiction of the High Courts or the Judges thereof to issue the Common Law writ of habeas corpus. He suggested that these Acts left the High Courts' jurisdiction unimpaired but merely restricted their power to exercise it in certain cases and that Act V of 1882, when it did not re-enact the said restriction, restored that power in its entirety. The distinction between taking away the High Courts' powers and forbidding the High Court hereafter to use such powers is one which we are not able to appreciate. We are quite satisfied that the legislature in 1872 and 1875 intended and purported to take away altogether the High Courts' power to issue writs of habeas corpus (a) in the mofussal for any purpose and (b) in the presidency towns for the purposes indicated in S. 148 of Act X of 1875. But even if the distinction suggested by Mr. Sitarama Rao were a real distinction it would not help him because S. 2 of Act V of 1882 prohibits the restoration of "any form of procedure" not existing or followed on the first day of January, 1883. With all respect to our learned brother, we think it is quite clear that the jurisdiction of the High Court in the cases and for the purposes described in S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be exercised under the provisions of that section and not otherwise. Now by cl. 2 of S. 491 it is provided that the High Court may from time to time frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section. The Appellate Side Rules have as we have shown been framed in the exercise of this power and we can see no reason for believing that they are ultra vires. It is in our view very clear that any application for directions under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be heard by a single Judge but may only be heard by a Bench of two Judges.

It was no doubt for this reason that the learned Advocate for the respondents when the matter first came before us on the 24th of October stated that the application made on behalf of the prisoners was an application for a Common Law writ of habeas corpus and not an application under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In r. 2 (4) (c) it is provided that applications "for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus" may be heard by a Bench of two Judges and r. 2-A directs that all applications for writ of habeas corpus shall go before a Bench of Judges dealing with criminal work. The expression "writ of habeas corpus" in these rules is merely a compendious description of the relief to be granted under S. 491. R. 2 (4) (c) in its present form was made in 1923 after the enactment of S. 491 with the modifications introduced by Act XII of 1923, by which the power to issue directions under S. 491 was extended from the Presidency towns to the limits of High Court's Appellate Jurisdiction. The rule which corresponded to this before 1923 provided for the disposal of applications:

"By a European British subject detained in custody alleged by him to be illegal for an order that he be brought before the High Court."

R. 2-A was introduced in 1929, under the powers conferred by S. 491 (2) and S. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915. See the High Court's notification P. Dis. 511 of 1929. The use of the expression "writ of habeas corpus" in rr. 2 and 2-A does not imply that this High Court or any Judge has power to issue a Common Law writ.

We observe in passing that in reported cases of this Court, Benches of Judges dealing with applications under S. 491 describe them as applications for writs of habeas corpus. See *In re Kochunni Elaya Nair*¹ and more particularly the observations of Spencer, J., at page 19. Considered in this light it is clear we think that r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules is not ultra vires.

Our learned brother appears to have thought that r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules was ultra vires merely because it was made in the exercise of powers conferred by S. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915. Our learned brother says:

"The jurisdiction and the duty as regards applications for a writ of habeas corpus are sui generis and do not fall within the framework of S. 108 of the Government of India Act or of any rule framed thereunder. The individual jurisdiction and the individual duty of each Judge in this matter are not affected in any way by any statutory provision or rule. I am therefore of opinion that r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules is ultra vires because its effect is to take away the individual jurisdiction which each Judge has in this matter and to prevent the performance of his legal duty to determine on the merits any application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus made to him."

It does not appear to have been brought to the notice of our learned brother that the High Court's power to provide for the exercise of jurisdiction by single Judges or Division Courts is derived from S. 13 of the High Courts Act itself. S. 13 of the Indian High Courts Act is as follows:—

"Subject to any law or regulations which may be made by the Governor-General in Council, the High Court established in any presidency under this Act may by its own rule provide for the exercise by one or more Judges, or by Division Courts constituted by two or more Judges of the said High Court, of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction vested in such Courts in such manner as may appear to such Courts to be convenient for the due administration of justice."

The Appellate Side Rules have been made in the exercise of these powers which are confirmed by S. 108 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1915 and continued in the Government of India Act, 1935, S. 223. Rules made in the exercise of these powers have statutory force and therefore are binding on the High Court and on the Judges. Therefore even if the High Court had retained the powers of the Supreme Court to issue writs of habeas corpus r. 2-A would nevertheless in our view have been intra vires and binding. We may note that in cl. 36 of the Charters of 1862 and 1865 it is declared :

"That any function which is hereby directed to be performed by the said High Court of Judicature at Madras, in the exercise of its Original or Appellate Jurisdiction, may be performed by any Judge, or by any Division Court thereof, appointed or constituted for such purpose under the provisions of the 13th section of the aforesaid Act of the 24th and 25th years of our Reign."

Thus the rule-making power of the High Court is inherent in its constitution from the beginning and regulates the exercise of the jurisdiction which it inherited from the Supreme Court. It follows, in our opinion, that the second proposition put forward by learned Counsel for the petitioner is well founded.

Our learned brother has considered himself bound by the decision of the Privy Council in *Eshugbayi Eleko v. Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria*¹, in which it was laid down that each Judge of the High Court of Justice established by the Judicature Act, 1873, has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus in term time or in vacation, and is bound to hear and determine the application on its merits notwithstanding that some other Judge has already refused a similar application. Their Lordships also laid it down that the same principle applies in the case of Judges of the Supreme Court of Nigeria. With all respect, for the reasons we have already given, we do not think that this judgment can have any application to this High Court or the Judges of this Court. There is no indication in their Lordships' judgment that the Supreme High Court of Nigeria was established and is governed by legislative enactments similar to those by which this High Court has been constituted.

Our learned brother has stated in his order of the 24th of October that he was bound by the decision of the Full Bench in Govindan Nair, In re². It is necessary we think to point out that that was a case in which application was made for a writ of habeas corpus to be issued to the Jailor of the Camp Jail of Bellary. The decision of the Full Bench is that the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus to places outside the Presidency town still continued in High Court. It does not deal expressly with the case of an application for a writ to run in the Presidency town. It must be borne in mind that this judgment was pronounced on 4th May, 1922. At that time S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gave the High Court power to issue directions of the nature of habeas corpus in respect of persons within the limits of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. It was only in 1923 that these powers were extended to the limits of the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction (S. 30, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1923). The learned Chief Justice who pronounced the judgment of the Court in Govindan Nair, In re¹, recognised that the Code of Criminal Procedure made provision for the exercise in the Presidency town of powers similar to the power of issuing a writ. It was urged by the learned Crown Prosecutor that after the enactment of S. 491, it must be taken to have been the intention of the legislature to confine the powers of the Court to such cases and that the power to issue the writ in the maffassal which had been established in *Ameer Khan's case*², must be taken to have been impliedly taken away. The learned Chief Justice held that this contention was not sound. He observes (page 927) :

"S. 491 merely substitutes or adds for the Presidency town a different form of procedure less cumbersome than the granting of a writ of habeas corpus."

The learned Chief Justice went on to observe :

"Secondly the right which had been established was a substantive right and it could hardly have been the intention of the legislature to take that right away by making rules of procedure or giving adjective rights for the exercise of similar powers. It is the sort of case where it can be fairly argued that if the legislature intended to take away such an important right from a subject it must use plain and unambiguous language."

This language we think it must be conceded does imply that in the opinion of the Court the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus still exists, or may exist even in the Presidency town alongside of the remedy provided by S. 491.

In the face of this ruling it is clearly not possible for us to hold that our learned brother's view of the law on this point was wrong. In our opinion, however, there are substantial grounds for believing that the decision in Govindan Nair, In re¹, requires reconsideration. It is obvious from the arguments addressed to the Court on that occasion and from the terms in which the order was pronounced that the attention of the Court was never drawn to Act X of 1872 or Act X of 1875. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has drawn our attention to the decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal. The learned Chief Justice of Calcutta has pointed out on page 731 that there is no question here of the legislature using ambiguous or doubtful language. The learned Chief Justice says:

"I observe that it has been stated in certain cases that if there is to be any question of the abolition of this right then the legislature must say so in the most specific terms. Whether that is a correct view in a matter of procedure of this kind need not be discussed for the legislature has used the most specific terms: and it is plain that the Indian Legislature never intended that the Courts in giving relief of this character should for any of the purposes mentioned in S. 491 be at liberty to act under it or under the old procedure"

Since it is clear that the Judges who heard the case in Govindan Nair, In re², omitted to consider the provisions of Act X of 1872 and Act X of 1875, we think it is not only desirable but necessary that this decision should be reconsidered.

We have still to consider the third proposition put forward by the learned Counsel for the petitioners. In support of his contentions on this point learned Counsel has referred us to the rules of the Crown office in force in the King's Bench Division. In r. 219 (vide Short and Mellor, 2nd edition, page 321) it is provided that no application for a writ of habeas corpus on a warrant of extradition shall be made to a Judge at chambers during the sittings. This is a proviso to r. 216, that an application for a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum may be made to the Court or the Judge. It follows therefore that even according to the procedure of the High Court in England the application made to our learned brother was irregularly made. Moreover learned Counsel for the petitioner has shown us that the practice in the High Court in England when a writ is issued by a Judge in chambers is to make it returnable in the Court during term time and not before a single Judge. There appears to be no case in which a single Judge during term time has issued a writ of habeas corpus returnable before himself. It appears to us therefore with all respect to our learned brother that even if a single Judge of this High Court can issue a writ of habeas corpus, it must be made returnable in the Court, and that his order directing the return of the writ to himself is ultra vires and without jurisdiction. It appears to us that if the Judges of this Court can exercise the powers of the Judges of the High Court in England they can only do so in accordance with the rules by the Judges of the High Court in England are governed.

Learned Counsel for the respondents has challenged our power to interfere in any way with the orders passed by our learned brother. He points out that this is a criminal matter in which under CL 24 of the Letters Patent there is no right of appeal. He has relied on the case reported in *In re Tadi Soma Naidu*¹. But we considered that this case is really an authority against him. It was a case in which a single Judge passed orders enhancing a sentence of imprisonment, without giving notice to the accused. The learned Judge afterwards suo motu purported to set his own order aside, and directed the case to be posted later on the question of enhancement. The case then came on before Waller, J., who referred it to a Divisional Bench since the Public Prosecutor proposed to argue that the learned Judge had no power to vacate his own order. The decision of the learned Judges (Odgers and Wallace) was that the order of Krishnan, J., enhancing the sentence without notice to the accused was a nullity and void and they therefore proceeded to deal themselves with the revision petition. In substance we can see no difference between a declaration that a certain order is void and direction that it should be quashed. We do not consider that we are being moved to exercise any appellate or revisional jurisdiction, but we do consider that if the order of our learned brother was passed without jurisdiction, this High Court has inherent powers to set aside his order. This Court's inherent powers to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice are saved by S. 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code.

We may observe that even if our learned brother is right in holding that a single Judge of this Court can issue a writ of habeas corpus, his order can be quashed by the Court if it is shown that the writ was issued improvidently. This is fully established by *Crawford's case*¹. That was a case in which Patterson, J., issued a writ to the keeper of Her Majesty's Jail Castle Rushen in Isle of Man. A motion was then made to quash the writ and after hearing arguments the Bench made absolute the rule nisi for setting aside the writ. On such a motion, it was stated by Erle, J., the question in effect was whether the writ if it had never issued ought to go. The decision of the Court being that the writ ought not to have issued the order that the writ should be set aside followed as a matter of course. We have also been referred to a very interesting case from Canada reported in Canada Supreme Court Reports, Vol. 12, page 140, where a writ issued by a single Judge of the Supreme Court was quashed by a Full Bench.

The last objection taken on behalf of the respondents before us is that the District Magistrate, Trivandrum, not having been a party to the application for the writ has no locus standi and ought not to be heard. Since the extradition proceedings appear to have been initiated at the instance of the District Magistrate of Trivandrum we do not consider that this objection can be sustained.

It is clear the matter before us involves a decision of three important questions:

(1) Can this High Court or any Judge of it issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus in any of the cases covered by S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code?

(2) Can an application for a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus or for directions under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be heard and disposed of by a single Judge of this Court? In other words are rr. 2 and 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules intra or ultra vires?

(3) If a single Judge has power to issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus, is the writ issued by our learned brother Pandrang Row, J., on the 26th of October liable to be quashed by this Court for the reason that it has been issued in contravention of the rules in force in the High Court in England?

F.B.
 District

 v.

These questions are of such importance that we think this matter ought to be referred to a Full Bench, and under r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules we refer it accordingly.

This petition coming on for hearing on Thursday and Friday, the 3rd and 4th days of November, 1938, in pursuance of the aforesaid Order of Reference to a Full Bench upon perusing the petition, the orders of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Pandrang Row dated the 21st, 24th and 26th days of October, 1938 and made in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition Nos. 986, 990 and 985 of 1938 respectively on the file of the High Court, and the said Order of Reference of a Full Bench, the Court made the following ORDER.—We will state the reasons for our judgment later. We hold:—

(1) The Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus does not run in British India in a case like this. Assuming that the Court formerly had the power to issue a writ of Habeas Corpus in a case like this that power has been taken away and the powers conferred by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure substituted.

(2) Rr. 2 and 2-A of the Appellate Side of this Court are intra vires the Court's powers.

(3) Mr. Justice Pandrang Row's order issuing a rule nisi was passed without jurisdiction and is consequently null and void.

(4) The position therefore is that the application filed by the respondents under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be dealt with in accordance with the rules of the Court which means that it must be dealt with by the Criminal Bench.

As Chief Justice I direct that the application under S. 491 be placed before the Criminal Bench next Monday.

The judgment of the Full Bench was as follows:

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This Full Bench has been constituted to decide a matter referred under r. 2 of the Rules applying to this Court in its appellate jurisdiction by Burn and Stodart, JJ., sitting as a Bench dealing with criminal cases. The matter involves the important question whether this Court has the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus as known to the English Common Law or whether its powers are confined in this respect to those conferred by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which gives authority to issue directions "of the nature of a habeas corpus". There are other questions involved in the reference and for their proper appreciation it is necessary to set out the course of events.

The respondents are the directors of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Limited, a company registered under the laws of the State of Travancore. A petition for the compulsory winding up of the company was recently granted by this Court and official liquidators have been appointed. On the night of the 20th October, 1938, the respondents were arrested in Madras in pursuance of extradition warrants issued under S. 7 of the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, for their arrest and surrender to the police of the Travancore State for production before the District Magistrate, Trivandrum, which is the capital of the State. It was alleged that the respondents had committed within the State of Travancore offences under the sections of the Travancore Penal Code corresponding to Ss. 409, 418, 420, 477-A, 109 and 114 of the Indian Penal Code and the District Magistrate at Trivandrum ordered their arrest. The extradition warrants were directed to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, and under his orders the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Crime Branch, Madras, arrested the respondents. The respondents were produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate at 8-30 A.M. on the 21st October and the intention was to send them under arrest to the frontier of the Travancore State by the train leaving Madras at 11 A.M. Before the respondents were brought before the Chief Presidency Magistrate an application had been made to Pandrang Row, J., for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus and for an interim order prohibiting their removal from Madras. The application was made under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as the heading of the petition shows. The matter being urgent the learned Judge granted the interim order asked for and directed the Chief Presidency Magistrate to detain the respondents in his custody pending the further orders of the High Court, which meant pending the hearing of the main application. The interim order was served on the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the respondents were detained in accordance with the order. Later in the day the Crown Prosecutor presented a petition asking that the interim order be vacated on the ground that it had been passed without jurisdiction and was therefore null and void. The petition having been filed the Crown Prosecutor applied to me in Chambers to hear it. As I considered that sitting alone I had no power to deal with the matter I declined to do so. The Crown Prosecutor then applied to Pandrang Row, J., to vacate his own order. The learned Judge heard the arguments the next morning, the 22nd October, but refused to withdraw the interim order, intimating that he would give his reasons on Monday, the 24th October. The main application was in the list for that day of Burn and Stodart, JJ., who composed the Bench dealing with criminal matters. R. 2-A of the Rules of this Court in its appellate jurisdiction requires an application for a writ of habeas corpus to be placed before the Bench dealing with criminal matters. The Court usually sits at 10-45 A.M., but Pandrang Row, J., delivered his judgment at 10-30 A.M. on the 24th October. Not only did he refuse to vacate the interim order but he held that r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules was ultra vires and that he alone had power to deal with the main application, which he treated as an application for the issue of the prerogative writ of habeas corpus and not as an application under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He considered that he had power to issue a writ of habeas corpus as known to the Common Law and based this decision on *Eshugbayi Eleko v. Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria*¹ and on *Govindan Nair, In re*². In the first case the Privy Council held that each Judge of the High Court of Justice established by the Judicature Act, 1873, has jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus and is bound to hear and determine the application on its merits, even when another Judge has refused a similar application. The same principle applied in the case of Judges of the Supreme Court of Nigeria. In the second case a Full Bench of this Court (Schwabe, C.J., Oldfield and Coutts-Trotter, JJ.) held that this Court had power to issue a writ of habeas corpus outside Madras.

When the main application was called for hearing before Burn and Stodart, JJ., counsel for the respondents took the objection that the Court had no power to deal with the matter as Pandrang Row, J., was seized of it and a copy of the judgment of Pandrang Row, J., was produced. Counsel who appeared for the District Magistrate of Trivandrum on the other hand contended that Pandrang Row, J., had never directed that the substantive petition should be placed before him and he had never intended to dispose of it sitting alone. In view of the conflicting contentions, Burn and Stodart, JJ., communicated with Pandrang Row, J., with a view to ascertaining how the matter really stood. Pandrang Row, J., replied that the main application was pending before him and that in his view he had power to dispose of it. In these circumstances the learned Judges who formed the Bench decided that they could not go on with the hearing of the application as it was already before another Judge. On the 26th October, Pandrang Row, J., ordered that a writ of habeas corpus should issue to the Chief Presidency Magistrate directing him to produce the respondents before him at 10-45 A.M. on the 28th October. In view of this order the District Magistrate of Trivandrum filed an application asking the Court to declare that the orders passed by Pandrang Row, J., on the 21st, 24th and 26th October had been passed without jurisdiction and were void and of no legal effect and to quash them. The application was placed in the list for the 27th October of Burn and Stodart, JJ., who still composed the Bench dealing with criminal matters. The hearing commenced that day but as there was no time to hear the arguments advanced on behalf of the respondents and as Pandrang Row, J., had made the writ returnable the next day the Court directed that the operation of the writ should be stayed till the further orders of the Court. At the request of Counsel for the respondents the Bench adjourned the further hearing of the case until the 31st October. The hearing was concluded on the 1st November.

It was contended on behalf of the District Magistrate that the issue of a writ of habeas corpus was without jurisdiction. The Legislature had taken away the right of the Court to issue a writ of habeas corpus and the powers of the Court were confined to those conferred by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the Court had power to issue a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus, r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules was nevertheless intra vires the power of the Court and binding on all the Judges. It was further contended that even if a single Judge had power to issue a Common Law writ the proper procedure had not been followed in the present case. The learned Judges were satisfied that the Legislature had taken away the power of the Court to issue a writ of habeas corpus in a case like the present one and were also satisfied that r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules was intra vires, but as they were bound by *Govindan Nair's case*¹ and as the matter involved a decision on three important questions, they referred the application for decision by a Full Bench under r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules. In their judgment referring the matter the learned Judges stated the three questions as follows:—

"1. Can this High Court or any Judge of it issue the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus in any of the cases covered by S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code?

"2. Can an application for a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus or for directions under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code be heard and disposed of by a single Judge of this Court. In other words are rr. 2 and 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules intra or ultra vires?

"3. If a single Judge has power to issue a Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus, is the writ issued by our learned brother Pandrang Row, J., on the 26th October liable to be quashed by this Court for the reason that it has been issued in contravention of the rules in force in the High Court in England?"

The answers to the first two questions depend upon the interpretation to be placed on legislation in England and in India and in view of the judgment in *Govindan Nair's case*¹ and other decisions of this Court I propose to examine the various enactments in some detail.

In 1861 the Parliament passed an Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 104) authorising the establishment of High Courts of Judicature in India. S. 1 declared it to be lawful for the Crown, by Letters Patent under the great seal of the United Kingdom, to erect and establish High Courts at Fort William in Bengal, Madras and Bombay for the respective Presidencies. S. 9 of the Act stated that each of the High Courts to be established under the Act:

"Shall have and exercise all such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty, Testamentary, Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdiction, Original and Appellate, and all such powers and authority for and in relation to the Administration of Justice in the Presidency for which it is established, as Her Majesty may by such Letters Patent as aforesaid grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitations as to the exercise of Original, Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Presidency Towns as may be prescribed thereby; and, save as by such Letters Patent may be otherwise directed, and subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court to be established in each Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of such last-mentioned Courts."

The Supreme Court at Madras which had been created by Letters Patent granted on the 26th December, 1800, was abolished and the High Court was constituted under Letters Patent issued under the Act on the 26th June, 1862. The preamble to the Letters Patent followed the provisions of S. 9 of the Act and the operative clauses were also in accordance with the statute. On the 28th December, 1865, fresh Letters Patent were issued to the Court. They embodied the provisions of the original Letters Patent but contained this further cl. (44) :—

"And we do further ordain and declare that all the provisions of these our Letters Patent are subject to the Legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council, exercised at meetings for the purpose of making laws and regulations, and also of the Governor-General in cases of emergency under the provisions of an Act of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of Our Reign, chapter sixty-seven, and may be in all respects amended and altered thereby."

It is manifest that the Court was given the same jurisdiction, power and authority which the Supreme Court possessed, but subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council. Counsel who appears for the first respondent would have the Court hold that the Indian High Courts Act does not contemplate the abolition of the right to issue prerogative writs, but only confers the power of regulating the issue. This contention ignores the express words of the statute and of the Letters Patent, and therefore is obviously fallacious. It is not necessary for the purpose of deciding the present application to consider whether the Supreme Court did in fact possess the power of issuing prerogative writs and I will assume that it had.

S. 81 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872 provided that any European British subject who was detained in custody by any person, and who considered such detention unlawful, might apply to the High Court for an order directing the person detaining him to bring him before the Court to abide such further order as might be made by it. The section also provided that the High Court might issue such orders throughout the territories over which it had jurisdiction, and over such other places as the Governor-General in Council might direct. The section, however, only applied to European British subjects. S. 82 prohibited a High Court or any Judge thereof issuing a writ of habeas corpus, mainprise, de homine replegiando, or any other writ of the like nature, beyond the Presidency towns. The section was inserted as the result of the decision of Norman, J., in *In the matter of Ameer Khan*¹, that the Supreme Court at Calcutta had power to issue writs of habeas corpus to persons in the mofussil and that the same power was continued to the High Court. In inserting S. 82 the Legislature wished to make sure that prerogative writs should not issue beyond Presidency towns.

The Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 was followed by the Criminal Procedure Code of 1875. In that year the High Courts were empowered to issue directions of the nature of a habeas corpus. The section conferring these powers was S. 148 and as it has a very important bearing I will quote it in full. It read as follows:—

“Any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras, and Bombay may, whenever it thinks fit, direct:—

(a) that a prisoner, legally committed and within the local limits of its ordinary original criminal jurisdiction be brought before it to be bailed;

(b) that a person within such limits be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law;

(c) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty;

(d) that a prisoner detained in any gaol situate within such limits be brought before the Court to be there examined as a witness in any matter pending or to be inquired into in such Court;

(e) that a prisoner detained as aforesaid be brought before a Court-martial or any Commissioners acting under the authority of any commission from the Governor-General in Council, for trial, or to be examined touching any matter depending before such Court-martial or Commissioners respectively;

(f) that a prisoner within such limits be removed from one custody to another for the purpose of trial;

(g) that the body of a defendant within such limits may be brought in on the Sheriff's return of cepi corpus to a writ of attachment; and neither the High Court nor any Judge thereof shall hereafter issue any writ of habeas corpus for any of the above purposes.

Each of the said High Courts shall, as soon as conveniently may be, frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section; and till such rules are framed, the practice of such Courts as to the obtaining, granting and serving of writs of habeas corpus, and as to the returns thereto, shall apply in such cases.

1. (1870) 6 Beng. L.R. 392.

Nothing in this section applies to persons detained under Bengal Regulation III of 1818, Madras Regulation II of 1819, or Bombay Regulation XXV of 1827, or the Acts of the Governor-General in Council No. XXXIV of 1850 or No. III of 1858."

It will be observed here that the power of the High Court or any Judge to issue a writ of habeas corpus for any of the purposes mentioned in the section was expressly taken away and the High Courts were given legislative authority to frame rules to regulate the procedure contemplated by the section. Cls. (b) and (c) correspond to cls. (a) and (b) of S. 491 of the Code now in force.

The Criminal Procedure Code of 1882 omitted the prohibition against the writ of habeas corpus and also made the rule making clause read:

"Each of the said High Courts may from time to time frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section."

In other respects S. 148 of the Act was reproduced. The omission of the words:

"Neither the High Court nor any Judge thereof shall hereafter issue any writ of habeas corpus for any of the above purposes"

did not, however, alter the law. S. 2 of the Act provided that the enactments mentioned in the first schedule should be repealed to the extent specified,

"but not so as to restore any jurisdiction or form of procedure not then existing or followed or to render unlawful the continuance of any confinement which is then lawful."

The whole of the Act of 1875 was repealed except S. 144 and so much of S. 146 as related to informations, but by virtue of S. 2 of the new Act the repeal of S. 148 did not restore any former jurisdiction or procedure and in effect continued the prohibition in the Act of 1875 against the issue of prerogative writs.

The Criminal Procedure Code of 1898 repealed the Code of 1882 but reproduced S. 491 as it stood in the Code of 1882 and S. 2 was to the same effect as S. 2 of the earlier Code. S. 2 of the Code of 1898 has since been repealed but the prohibition against the issue of prerogative writs contained in the Code of 1875 still continues. S. 6 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 provides that where the Act, or any Act of the Governor-General in Council or Regulation made after the commencement of the Act, repeals any enactment the repeal shall not revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect unless a different intention appears and S. 7 says that in any Act of the Governor-General in Council or Regulation made after the commencement of the General Clauses Act, it shall be necessary for the purpose of reviving, either wholly or partially, any enactment wholly or partially repealed, expressly to state that purpose. S. 7 applies also to all Acts of the Governor-General in Council made after the third day of January, 1868, and to all Regulations made on or after the fourteenth day of January, 1887. S. 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898 was repealed by the Amending and Repealing Act of 1914, but S. 4 provided that the repeal should not affect the existing position. The object of the repeal of S. 2 of the Code of 1898 was to remove from the statute book a redundant provision. The effect of the General Clauses Act and the Repealing and Amending Act of 1914 is therefore to keep in operation the prohibition of the Code of 1875.

By S. 30 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1923, sub-S. (1) and cl. (a) of S. 491 of the Code of 1898 were altered to read as follows:—

“Any High Court may, whenever it thinks fit, direct:

(a) that a person within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law.”

Previously, cl. (a) only referred to the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court. The Act of 1923 extended the clause to cover its appellate criminal jurisdiction. The effect is that any High Court can now give directions of the nature of habeas corpus throughout the whole of its jurisdiction. The Act of 1923 also did away with the distinction between European and British Indian subjects in such matters.

The High Courts Act of 1861 authorised the legislature if it thought fit to take away the powers which this Court obtained as the successor of the Supreme Court and Acts of the Legislature lawfully passed in 1875 and subsequent years leave no doubt in my mind that the legislature has taken away the power to issue the prerogative writ of habeas corpus in matters contemplated by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1893. Rankin, C.J. and Majumdar, J., came to the same conclusion in Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal and I respectfully agree with them that the Legislature has used the most specific terms in carrying out its intention. The respondents have their remedy under the Code of Criminal Procedure and it is admitted that their case comes within cl. (a) or cl. (b) of S. 491.

Before I leave the question of the powers of the Legislature, I must refer to a further argument advanced by the learned Advocate for the first respondent in this connection. He says that, inasmuch as the last proviso to S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act of 1861 prohibits the Governor-General in Council making laws which may affect any part of the unwritten laws of constitution of the United Kingdom whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown, the Legislature has no power to abolish the prerogative writ of habeas corpus. The abolition of the right to issue a prerogative writ is not a matter which can be deemed to affect allegiance to the Crown. This provision only refers to laws, "which directly affect the allegiance of the subject to the Crown as by a transfer or qualification of the allegiance, or a modification of the obligations thereby imposed".

The words which I have quoted are taken from the decision of the Privy Council in *Bugga v. King-Emperor*¹, where a similar argument was advanced. The learned Advocate has not advanced before us the argument which was raised before Burn and Stodart, JJ., that the penultimate proviso to S. 22 of the Indian Councils Act restricted the powers of the Legislature and affected its right to abolish the prerogative writ of habeas corpus. The argument was not accepted by the learned Judges and their answer has evidently satisfied the respondents. I agree with what the learned Judges say and have only to add that the argument was negatived by the Privy Council in *Empress v. Burah*².

The decision of the Judicial Committee in *Eshugbayi Eleko v. Officer Administering the Government of Nigeria*³ on which Pandrang Row, J., so much relied in holding that he had jurisdiction in the matter has in our opinion no application. The decision in that case would, of course, be binding upon this Court if the position were the same in British India as it is in Nigeria. In Nigeria the right to issue the prerogative writ of habeas corpus still exists, but here the right has been taken away. *Govindan Nair's case*¹ on which the learned Judge also relied was binding on him, but I consider that it was wrongly decided and should be overruled. The attention of the learned Judges who decided *Govindan Nair's case*¹ was not drawn to the provisions of the Code of 1872, and the succeeding enactments which affected the question under consideration. If attention had been drawn I have no doubt that the decision would have been a different one, but be that as it may, the decision cannot be allowed to stand in the light of the statutory prohibition which exists against the issue of the writ. The same objection applies to *In re Kochunni Elaya Nair*² and *Mahomedalli Allabux v. Ismailji Abdulalis*³ as Rankin, C.J., pointed out in *Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal*⁴.

This brings me to the question whether rr. 2 and 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules are ultra vires. R. 2 provides that certain matters which are set out in the rule may be heard and determined by a Bench of two Judges, provided that if both Judges agree that the determination involves a question of law they may order that the matter, or the question of law, be referred to a Full Bench. The rule expressly includes an application for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus. As in my view the Court has no power to issue a prerogative writ of habeas corpus in a matter such as is now before us the rule must be deemed to refer to an application for directions of the nature of habeas corpus, and this observation applies to r. 2-A. The right to make rules cannot be doubted. S. 13 of the High Courts Act of 1861 empowered a High Court established under the Act to make its own rules and provide for the exercise by one or more Judges, or by Division Courts constituted by two or more Judges, or the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the Court. S. 14 provided that the Chief Justice should from time to time determine what Judge in each case should sit alone, and what Judge of the Court whether with or without the Chief Justice should constitute the several Division Courts. Similar provisions are embodied in S. 108 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and the provisions of that section remain in force by virtue of S. 223 of the Government of India Act, 1935. Moreover rule-making powers were conferred upon the High Court in matters of the nature of habeas corpus by the Code of 1875 and succeeding Codes have continued the powers. If the right to issue the prerogative writ has been taken away there can be no question that the rules are intra vires but even if the right has not been abolished the Legislature can regulate the procedure which governs its issue. The argument advanced by Counsel for the first respondent when dealing with the High Courts Act of 1861 in effect recognised this. The rule-making powers conferred on the High Court by Legislature are wide and are sufficiently wide to entitle the Court to say that even an application for a prerogative writ shall go before two Judges. The English rules in fact recognise the right to place restrictions. In order of reference it is pointed out that in England no application for a writ of habeas corpus on a warrant of extradition shall be made to a Judge in Chambers during the sittings. I would hold that both rules are intra vires the powers of the Court and in these circumstances it is not necessary to enter upon a discussion of the question whether the writ issued by Pandrang Row, J., on the 26th October, 1938, is liable to be quashed on the ground that it has been issued in contravention of the rules in force in England.

4. (1927) I.L.R. 54 Cal. 727.

Counsel for the first respondent has advanced an argument based on the provisions of the English Extradition Act, 1870. This Act contemplates the right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus in certain circumstances and S. 17 (4) directs that a Judge of any Court exercising the like powers as the Court of King's Bench exercises in England may exercise the power of discharging a criminal in the circumstances contemplated by the section. It is said that this Act applies to India and therefore a Judge of this Court has the same powers as a Judge of the King's Bench when it is the question of the issue of a writ of habeas corpus in an extradition matter. The Act can only come into operation where an arrangement has been made by the Crown with a foreign state with respect to the surrender to such state of fugitive criminals. By virtue of the provisions of S. 18, a law passed by a British possession may be incorporated in the Act, and S. 23 saves the power of the Governor-General of India in Council to make treaties for the extradition of criminals with Indian Native States and to carry into execution the provisions of such treaties. India has its own Extradition Act, namely, Act XV of 1903, which has been drafted on the assumption that the Native States in India are not foreign within the meaning of the English Act of 1870. The Indian Act contains no reference to habeas corpus and only Chapter II which deals with the surrender of fugitive criminals in the case of Foreign States has been incorporated in the English Act, vide the notification published in the Gazette of India, dated 14th May, 1904. Chapter III of the Indian Act relates to surrender of fugitive criminals in case of States other than Foreign States, and is intended to apply only to the surrender of fugitive criminals to Native States in India. The present case falls under Chapter III and as this chapter has not been made part of the English Act under S. 18 of the English Act, the English Act cannot be deemed to apply here.

Counsel for respondents 2 to 4 has advanced the argument that this Court has no power to quash the order of Pandrang Row, J., inasmuch as it was passed in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction and the order of a Judge sitting alone in criminal matters cannot be the subject of an appeal or revision. There is authority for the granting of a motion to quash a writ of habeas corpus wrongly issued—In *re The Justices of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay*¹ and In the matter of *John Crawford*²—but as I hold that the Common Law Writ of Habeas Corpus does not run in British India it is not necessary for me to discuss this point. The question has to be approached from the point of view of an application under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the answer is that the order passed has been passed without jurisdiction and can be disregarded. If authority for this is wanted it is to be gathered from the decisions in In the matter of *Abdool Sobhan*³, In *re Kunhammad Haji*⁴, In *re Tadi Soma Naidu*⁵ and *Narayan Vithal Samant v. Jankibai*⁶.

As the order of Pandrang Rao, J., directing a writ of habeas corpus to be issued was an order passed without jurisdiction it must be disregarded and the application which the respondents have filed under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE BURN AND MR. JUSTICE STODART.

In the matter of C. P. Mathen and others.

Poulose Mathen and another . . . *Petitioners.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 491—"Illegally or improperly detained"—Meaning of—Warrant issued by Political Agent in Native State under Ch. III, Extradition Act, for arrest of person in Presidency Town—Warrant merely stating commission of offence by person named—Arrested person in British India at the time of commission of offence alleged—Arrested person directed to be handed over at Frontier Police Station—No date on the order and no specific place or officer named for surrender of arrested person—Effect on legality of warrant—Arrest and detention under such warrant—If illegal or improper—Right of arrested person to be set at liberty—Extradition Act, Chs. II and III, Ss. 7 and 8-A.

Mathen.*

In the case of a warrant issued by a Political Agent, it is only right to presume that the Political Agent has complied with all the rules before issuing the warrant. The fact that the warrant does not state or show on the face of it that the rules framed for the purpose have been obeyed or that the warrant merely states in general that so and so stands charged with offences is no ground for presuming that the rules have not been duly complied with or that no enquiry as prescribed by the rules has been made. A person arrested and detained under such a warrant cannot be said to be illegally or improperly detained within the meaning of S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code, so as to entitle him to be set at liberty.

When a warrant issued by the Political Agent, under S. 7 of the Extradition Act, is sent to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of a Presidency Town, the latter has no option in the matter but to execute the warrant. He is obliged to order the arrest of the person for whom the warrant is issued, and his custody of such person is perfectly legal and proper. The fact that there are defects in the warrant, namely, that it is not dated, that the direction in it is to surrender the prisoner to the Frontier Police Station in the Native State, without definitely naming a specific place, or that it does not indicate the officer to whom the prisoner is to be handed over, is not a matter of importance so as to render the warrant or the arrest and detention thereunder illegal or improper, though they might be points on which the Magistrate might make a reference and report to the Government under S. 8-A of the Extradition Act.

If it is proved that the arrested person was in British India at the time at which the offence with which he is charged is said to have been committed, that would be a good defence to the charge. It is not, however, relevant to the question whether the custody in which he is detained is legal or illegal. The arrested person cannot on that ground claim to be set at liberty as being illegally or improperly detained.

Petition under S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of habeas corpus directing that the abovenamed four persons, namely, C. P. Mathen, K. C. Mammen Mapillai, K. M. Eapen and K. V. Verghese be directed to be released from custody and produced before the High Court for being dealt with according to law.

K. Bhashyam Aiyangar and V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar for Petitioners.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.

Burn, J.—This is an application under S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code, on behalf of four persons who have been arrested on the warrants issued by the Resident, Madras States. S. 491 (1) empowers this High Court, whenever it thinks fit, to direct (a) that a person within the limits of its Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law and (b) that persons illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty. The contention on behalf of the four prisoners is that they have been illegally or improperly detained in custody and that therefore they should be brought up before this Court in order that they may be released. This application was made on the 21st October, 1938, and was supported by an affidavit sworn by Poulouse Mathen, son of one of the prisoners, in these terms:—

I Poulouse Mathen, son of Mr. C. P. Mathen, aged 21, residing at Marble Hall, 25, Sterling Road, Nungambakkam, Madras, do make oath and say as follows:

1. I am the first petitioner herein, and the second petitioner is the son of Mr. K. C. Mammen Mapillai.

2. I state that the present application has been filed for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus in respect of my father (1) Mr. C. P. Mathen, second petitioner's father; (2) Mr. K. C. Mammen Mapillai; (3) Mr. K. M. Eapen; and (4) Mr. K. V. Verghese who have been served last evening with an extradition warrant from Travancore, charging them with certain offences under the Penal Code, and I state that in pursuance of such a warrant, they have been arrested and are now in the custody of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras and are to be taken to Travancore by the Shencottah Passenger leaving Egmore Station at 11 A.M.

*In the

C.P.

3. I state that the warrant issued, apparently for a criminal offence as that would be the only medium through which such a course could be taken, is really for a political offence and I am advised that for a political offence no warrant could be issued for extradition from British India where the arrested persons have been living.

4. I state that purpose for which the warrant appears to have been issued is alleged offences under the Penal Code, Travancore, in connection with the winding up proceedings relating to the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Ltd., of which my father was the Managing Director and Mr. Mapillai was the Chairman, Board of Directors.

5. I state that this alleged purpose is only a makebelieve inasmuch as it has been openly proclaimed in the Travancore State Press Communication issued that the Travancore National Bank is aiding the Travancore State Congress and in fact a circular had been issued in the State itself to that effect.

6. Further, I state that on 25th April, 1938, a circular was issued under the authority of the Commissioner of Police, Travancore, that Mr. C. P. Mathen is a Political to be watched inside and outside the State. Moreover, Mr. Mammen Mapillai is the Proprietor of the Malayalam paper, 'Manorama', which had been forfeited for publishing articles of a political nature, and the press has been forfeited, the licence having been cancelled.

7. I state that the abovesaid circumstances would abundantly prove that the warrant of extradition is only with a view to bring the four arrested persons within the state limits so that they may be charged for alleged political offences and exposed to all kinds of humiliation and disgrace besides personal ill-treatment such as to endanger health and safety.

8. I state that the political conditions in the Travancore State are such that no one charged or alleged to be concerned in any political offences is safe and that anything may happen to them.

C.P.
Mathen.*

Burn, J.

9. I state that the alleged charge that they have wrongly dealt with a sum of one crore of rupees is obviously untenable and unfounded, and they have absolutely no idea of evading the law and they will subject themselves to such examination as soon as normal conditions of peace are restored, especially as they are sought to be politically involved.

10. I state that Mr. K. C. Mammen Mapillai is aged 65 and is having serious trouble with piles and is not at all in a fit position to stand travel and was under treatment when he was suddenly arrested.

11. I state that the issue of a warrant and the arrest are not justifiable nor are they done in the interests of public justice but with a view to clap them in jail for political offences and the Travancore Government are bent upon bringing them to trouble by securing their physical presence within the State.

12. I state that in the Madras High Court in connection with the proceedings relating to the Bank it had been found by His Lordship Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao that a major portion of the assets as ascertained by the liquidators is good and that the consideration of re-starting the Bank is worthy of attention.

13. I state that the arrest and detention of the four persons in custody are contrary to law and it is necessary that they should in the interests of their personal safety and health be ordered to be brought before this Hon'ble Court for orders.

14. It is, therefore, just and necessary that this Hon'ble Court should be pleased to order the issue of a writ directing that Messrs. C.P. Mathen, K.C. Mammen Mapillai, K. M. Eapen and K. V. Verghese now within the limits of this Hon'ble Court arrested by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, under an extradition warrant issued by the Travancore State and kept under his custody at Egmore be ordered to be brought up to this Hon'ble Court for being dealt with according to law and directing them to be set at liberty and that such other orders be passed as may be necessary in the interests of justice, as otherwise, the petitioner will be put to considerable loss and hardship.

(Signed) C. M. Poullose.

Solemnly affirmed at Royapettah this 21st day of October, 1938, and signed his name in my presence.

(Signed) A. V. Ramalingam Aiyar,

Dewan Bahadur.

No attempt has been made before us to prove the allegations made in the affidavit to the effect that these proceedings have been taken for the extradition of these four prisoners for a political offence. There is nothing in this affidavit to indicate that the prisoners are being illegally or improperly detained in custody. In a further affidavit sworn on the 26th October, the same deponent stated as follows:—

C.P.
Mathen.*

Burn, J.

I, Poulouse Mathen, son of C. P. Mathen, aged 21 years, residing at "Marble Hall", 25, Sterling Road, Nungambakkam, Madras, do make oath and say as follows:—

1. I am the petitioner herein and I have filed the application praying for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus in respect of my father, (1) C. P. Mathen, (2) Mr. K. C. Mammen Mapillai, (3) Mr. K. M. Eapen and (4) K. V. Verghese.

2. I state that the aforesaid four persons were arrested on the night of 20th October, 1938, by the police at the instance of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, to whom an extradition warrant has been issued by the Resident, Travancore State, directing that they be apprehended and handed over to the Frontier Police of Trivandrum for production before the District Magistrate, Trivandrum. The warrants were not, however, even shown to the arrested persons, and the substance thereof was ascertained only next morning in the office of the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

3. I state that the extradition warrant issued by the Resident purported to state, in so far as I have been able to gather, that charges have been laid as against them for having committed offences of breach of trust by bankers, falsification of accounts, cheating and abetment thereof as directors of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Ltd., now in liquidation.

4. I state that the fourth person is not at all a Director of the Bank and the offences with which they are charged are made to appear as if they have been committed in Travancore.

5. I state that the Travancore National Bank was no doubt incorporated in Travancore in 1912, and the Quilon Bank in 1919, but the latter went into voluntary liquidation and both the Banks were amalgamated in September, 1937, under the name and style of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Ltd., till it went into liquidation.

C.P.
Mathen.*

Burn, J.

6. I state that even though it was incorporated in Travancore State, Madras was the central place of business and the branches were all controlled from Madras only where all the Bank's accounts were kept. In fact in the application now pending in this Hon'ble Court for re-construction of the Bank it was observed by his Lordship Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao as follows:—

"The policy of the Bank was directed from the central office (at Madras) as aforesaid and from the affidavit filed by Mr. K. M. Eapen, the centre of administrative control was in Madras, all the branches including the branches in Travancore and other states have to send their statements of accounts and other returns to the central office at Madras and they have to take orders from the central office for all matters connected with the business in their respective branches. All the information regarding the assets and liabilities of all the branches was available at Madras and only those books which were statutorily required to be kept under Travancore Companies Regulation were kept at the Registered Office at Quilon."

7. I further state that of the 80 branches of the Bank, 40 branches existed in the Madras Presidency, 18 in the Travancore State and the remaining were situated in Bombay, Ceylon, and other places. The bulk of the business was in the Madras Presidency and about $1\frac{1}{3}$ Crores of rupees represents the assets outside the Travancore State.

8. I state that the liquidation and winding up proceedings have been filed in this Hon'ble Court and Official Liquidators having been appointed, their first report shows that about 88 per cent. of the assets is good.

9. I state that under those circumstances no offence of any of the kinds above referred to, such as criminal breach of trust, falsification of accounts or, cheating could have been committed by the aforesaid four persons in the Travancore State and the warrant is illegal. They have ever since the beginning of 1937 come over to Madras and have been permanently staying with their families at Madras only with a view to have direct supervision over all the branches, and for discharging their functions in connection with other institutions as well.

10. I state that in any view the offences could at all be alleged to have been committed in Madras only within the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts and no offence could be said to have been committed in the Travancore State justifying issue of the extradition warrants. I state that neither the complaint nor any materials on which the charges are said to have been laid are available and in the absence of any reference thereto I state that the issue of the warrant itself is illegal and contrary to the statute, as there is nothing to indicate how the offences are said to have been committed in the Travancore State before demanding extradition. On account of the secrecy of the entire proceedings and rush of events I have not been able to ascertain the particulars on which the offence or offences could be said to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the Native State.

C.P.
Mathen.*

11. I state that the warrant itself is defective and is not in conformity with the provisions of the statute under which it purports to have been issued.

12. I further state that the political situation at present in Travancore is tense, and the Bank is somehow or other sought to be connected with the Travancore State Congress as is apparent from a circular issued by the State and my father, Mr. C. P. Mathen, was by a circular dated 25th April, 1938, declared to be a political to be watched inside and outside the State while the Malayalam paper "Manorama" run by the second of the arrested persons was forfeited for publishing articles of a political nature and the press itself has been confiscated and the licence cancelled.

13. I state that under the above circumstances it is not proper to issue the extradition warrant as, if under colour of such a warrant they are taken to the State limits, they would be arrested for alleged political offences and exposed to the greatest and most humiliating hardships both for their person as well as for their reputation. They have absolutely no intention to evade law and will be ready to answer any charge if lawfully made.

14. I state that the issue of an extradition warrant in the light of the above state of facts is not only illegal but is also improper. In fact the learned Advocate-General of this Hon'ble Court on behalf of the Official Liquidator, Quilon, had requested for a month's time to send a report as regards the conditions and affairs of the Bank and time was granted till 7th November, 1938, and without any report or examination of the 4th of the arrested persons who had attended Court, the criminal charges have been levelled and they were to have been removed with dramatic speed.

15. I further state that the second of the arrested persons Mr. K. C. Mammen Mapillai is aged 65 and is suffering from

C.P.
Mathen.*

Burn, J.

strangulated piles and is confined in the General Hospital, Madras, and the Doctor has advised that he may have to remain there for some time.

16. I applied for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus at a time when none of us had any idea of the nature and scope of the warrants of extradition. In fact, the Official Liquidator, Quilon, has been here to find out if any information could be available from the liquidators appointed by this Hon'ble Court inasmuch as there were no materials available to him from the records there to bring home any offence against the arrested persons.

17. I further state that owing to the strong and powerful influence of the Dewan of Travancore who is bent on bringing the arrested persons to trouble on account of their supposed connection with the State Congress which is considered as a disloyal and subversive political organisation formed to secure the removal of the Dewan and question the supreme authority of the State, the Resident has either been persuaded or induced to believe that offences had been committed by the arrested persons without any definite or reliable particulars before him.

18. I further have every reason to believe that none of the essential conditions necessary to be observed before issuing the warrants under the Act has been complied with or even shown to have been taken into account, and that the warrants were got issued on account of the peculiar position he was placed in, in relation to the State and the governing authorities.

19. It is therefore apparent that considerations other than legal or proper have weighed with the Resident in issuing the warrants and if the true state of affairs or real and tangible particulars have been placed before him without any other consideration the warrants would not have been issued as against the arrested persons who are respectable and law-abiding citizens holding responsible position in life.

20. I further state that if the charges relating to their connection with the Bank of which Madras was the central source should be levelled against them and tried in any Court of British India, they are ready and willing to vindicate their position and I am advised that they could be tried only in Courts of British India and not in the State for any consequences that could have ensued thereby. I apprehend that no justice would be available to them from Courts subordinate to the State which has been apparently taking direct interest in the case.

21. Further, there are ample provisions in the Penal Code of British India for punishing the offenders for all or any of the offences they are charged with and the atmosphere that has been sedulously created in the Travancore State against the arrested persons leaves no ray of hope that there will be justice meted out to them, and the Resident being perfectly aware of all the circumstances and being in touch with the State acted improperly in ordering the issue of the warrant for extradition.

22. It is therefore just and necessary that this Hon'ble Court should be pleased to call for all the records relating to extradition and to order the issue of a writ of habeas corpus directing that Messrs. C. P. Mathen, K. C. Mammen Mapillai, K. M. Eapen and K. V. Verghese arrested by and in the custody of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, under Extradition warrants issued by the Resident, Travancore State, be ordered to be brought up and set at liberty and that such other orders may be passed in the interests of justice, as otherwise, I will be put to serious loss and hardship.

The only allegation in this affidavit which, we think, requires notice is that in paragraph 11 in which it is stated that the warrant itself is defective and is not in conformity with the provisions of the Statute under which it purports to have been issued. The other allegations are, in our opinion, irrelevant for the present purpose. If it is proved, for example, that the prisoners have been in British India at the time at which the offences with which they are charged are said to have been committed, that would be a good defence to the charges. It is not, however, relevant to the question whether the custody in which they are now detained is legal or illegal. The allegations about the political situation in Travancore are also quite irrelevant.

The warrants upon which the prisoners have been arrested have been produced before us and Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar for the prisoners has invited us to say that an examination of the warrants will show that they have been illegally or improperly issued. The warrants are all in the same form and they run as follows:—

"Whereas Director of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Ltd., which is now under liquidation, who is now reported Resident for the Madras States."

These warrants have been issued under S. 7 of the Extradition Act of 1903, Travancore being a State which is not a Foreign State and the allegations being that the persons whose arrest is required are in British India. Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar has pointed out that Chapter 2 of the Extradition Act which deals with the surrender of fugitive criminals in case of Foreign States, there is provision made for a preliminary enquiry by the Magistrate in British India before extradition is ordered. The Magistrate is obliged to hold an enquiry in the same manner as if the case were one triable by the Court of Session or the High Court; he is obliged, if he thinks that a prima facie case is made out to commit the criminal to prison to await the orders of the Government of India. He is obliged also to report the result of his enquiry to the Government of India and await their orders. In Chap. III, there is no such provision for an enquiry by a Magistrate in British India. It is, however, provided in the rules made under the Act which by S. 22, sub-S. (3) have effect as if enacted by the Act that in such cases as the present, the Political Agent (vide r. 4) shall in all cases before issuing the warrant under S. 7 satisfy himself by preliminary enquiry that there is a prima facie case against the accused person. By r. 5 the Political Agent is required before issuing the warrant under S. 7, to decide whether the warrant shall provide for the delivery of the accused persons to the Political Agent or to a British Officer subordinate to him with a view to his trial by the Political Agent, or to an authority of the State with a view to his trial by the State Courts. Sub-r. (2) of r. 5 requires the Political Agent to take certain matters into consideration before coming to a decision. By r. 7 the Political Agent is required to satisfy himself in the case of an accused person who has been made over for trial to the Court of the State that the accused person receives a fair trial and that the punishment inflicted on conviction is not excessive or barbarous and if he is not so satisfied he shall demand the restoration of the person to his custody pending orders of the Governor-General in Council. It is clear therefore that this procedure before the Political Agent in cases falling under Chap. III takes the place of the preliminary enquiry and other proceedings provided in Chap. II in the case of criminals whose extradition to foreign states is required. The warrants issued in this case do not show that the Political Agent has obeyed the rules framed for his procedure under the Act. Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar invites us to hold that the Political Agent or someone else on his behalf should be called upon to satisfy us that everything required by the rules has been done. He even contends that the form of the warrants shows that the Political Agent has not complied with the rules. The warrant merely states that so and so stands charged with offences. Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar suggests that this implies that the Political Agent has not made an enquiry such as is prescribed under r. 4 already alluded to. We do not think we shall be justified in making any such presumption. On the contrary since the rules have the force of law, we think it is right to presume that the Political Agent has complied with the rules before issuing the warrants. The warrants do not in our opinion show that the rules have not been complied with.

The question which we have to consider is whether the prisoners are being illegally or improperly detained in the custody of the Chief Presidency Magistrate. This we think is a simple question in this case. S. 7 of the Extradition Act, sub-S. (1) says that:

"Where an extradition offence has been committed or is supposed to have been committed by a person not being a European British subject in the territories of any State not being a Foreign State and such person escapes into or is in British India and the Political Agent in or for such State issues a warrant addressed to the District Magistrate of any District in which such person is believed to be or if such person is believed to be in any Presidency Town to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of such town, for his arrest and delivery at a place and to a person or authority indicated in the warrant, such Magistrate shall act in pursuance of such warrant and may give directions accordingly."

In the face of this provision of law, it is clear to us that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has no option in the matter. When he receives the Political Agent's warrant, he is obliged to act in pursuance of it and to obey it. It has been pointed out by Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar for the prisoners that in S. 8-A there is a provision made for the accused person who is arrested making a statement to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and provision is made that the Magistrate if he thinks fit, may, before proceeding further report the case to the Central Government and pending the receipt of orders on such report, may detain such accused person in custody or release him on his executing a bond with sufficient sureties for his attendance when required. In the report made by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate to the writ nisi issued by Mr. Justice Pandrang Row, he has reported that the four prisoners were produced before him at 9 A.M. on 21st October, 1938. He says further that Mr. V. Rajagopalachariar who appeared for the arrested persons wanted him to make a reference under S. 8-A of the Indian Extradition Act to the Local Government (in accordance with the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order, the word "Central" must now be substituted for the word "Local" in S. 8-A) and pending reference to enlarge the prisoners in custody on bail. This application was opposed by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar who appeared on behalf of the Travancore Government. While the learned Magistrate was hearing the petition, Rao Bahadur V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar produced the order passed by Mr. Justice Pandrang Row, directing the Magistrate to keep the prisoners in his custody and not to send them away. The Magistrate, therefore, remanded three of the four prisoners to the Penitentiary and one who was said to be suffering from strangulated piles to the General Hospital. It is clear therefore that the learned Magistrate was interrupted by our learned brother's stay order while he was considering the desirability or otherwise of making a reference to the Government under S. 8-A. The learned Magistrate expressed the view that under S. 7 he had no option but to execute the warrants and that he had acted so far in strict conformity with the provision of law. In this we support the learned Magistrate. We consider that he was obliged to order the arrest of the persons for whom warrants were issued and that his custody of them is perfectly legal and proper.

The only criticisms of the warrants of which we feel obliged to take any notice are, firstly, that the warrants are not dated and secondly that the direction in the warrants to surrender the prisoners to the Frontier Police Station of the Travancore State, is somewhat indefinite. It is represented by Mr. Bashyam Aiyangar for the prisoners and we think it is highly probable that there is more than one Police Station on the Frontier between British India and the Travancore State. The warrant does not instruct the Magistrate in terms with regard to the particular Frontier Police Station at which the prisoners should be delivered nor does it indicate the officer to whom they are to be handed over. But we have already pointed out that the learned Magistrate when his proceedings were interrupted by the service upon him of our learned brother's stay order, was considering an application for making a reference under S. 8-A of the Act and it is quite conceivable, we think, that this is a point upon which the Magistrate might have thought it necessary to make a report to the Government. We note, however, that the warrants require the prisoners to be surrendered at the Frontier Police Station for production before the District Magistrate of Trivandrum. For all practical purposes it seems to us that this indefiniteness with regard to the Frontier Police Station is not a matter of any importance.

On the only point, that is material, namely, whether the custody in which the prisoners are, is illegal or improper we are quite clear that his custody of them was legal and proper prima facie, and we see no reason to suppose that there is any illegality or impropriety connected with the issue of the warrants for the arrest of these prisoners. We therefore dismiss this application under S. 491.

The plaintiffs brought actions against the defendants within the jurisdiction of the Chief Court of Oudh in respect of matters involving, apart from extensive disputes of fact, a number of important legal questions. The actions having been heard and dismissed by the Chief Court in its original jurisdiction, the plaintiffs applied to that Court under Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. That application having been refused, the plaintiffs petitioned His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal to His Majesty, on the ground that S. 12 (1) of the U. P. Act (IV of 1925) gave a right of appeal under S. 109 (b) of the Code. The defendants were not represented on the hearing of the petition, and the Board gave leave to appeal with liberty to the defendant-respondents to take the preliminary objection that special leave to appeal ought not to have been given. On presentation of the appeal, on the respondents raising the preliminary objection, Held, that the Board had a full discretion to hold, as it did hold, that special leave ought not to have been given, and that they had that discretion notwithstanding the undoubted right of the provincial legislature to give powers to, or to withhold them from, the new Chief Court, and having regard to the interests of the administration of justice in the province, which interests would be detrimentally affected by any procedure under which the appellate functions of the Chief Court were ignored.

It is not to be regarded as either orderly or practicable that an unsuccessful litigant before the Chief Court of Oudh in its original jurisdiction should have the optional right to appeal to His Majesty in Council under Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure either after first appealing to an appellate bench of that Court or by omitting that tribunal as he chooses, and it was not the intention of the provincial legislature by the Oudh Courts Act, 1925, to introduce any such system. The effect of Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure taken together seems to be to provide an appeal to His Majesty where no further appeal lies in India. The Indian legislature was not claiming by the terms of the Code to abridge or to extend the prerogative, and the discretion which S. 112, Civil Procedure Code, affirms applies to the rejecting as well as to the receiving of appeals, the prerogative not being finally concluded for either purpose by S. 109.

Quære, whether the expression "an appeal shall lie" merely signifies authority to appeal to the named tribunal or implies a prohibition against appealing to any other tribunal.

Appeal by special leave from two decrees dated 22nd December, 1930, of the Chief Court of Oudh in its original civil jurisdiction (Nanavutty, J.).

[The facts are sufficiently set out in the judgment.]

The respondents raised the preliminary objection that special leave ought not to have been given.

R. F. Roxburgh, K.C. and S. Hyam, for the respondent Raja Saadat.—Special leave to appeal to the Board ought, it is submitted, not to have been granted. There is certainly no appeal as of right direct to His Majesty in Council from the decision of a single judge of the Chief Court, Oudh and it would be undesirable that such a course should be allowed. [Counsel reviewed the relevant statutory provisions: S. 80-A of the Government of India Act, 1915, the Oudh Courts Act, 1925, and Ss. 4 (1), 109, 111, 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure.]

It is impossible to define exhaustively the prerogative to grant or refuse leave to appeal. (Counsel referred to Safford and Wheeler's Privy Council Practice at p. 732.) But where an appeal lies to an appellate Court in India, the implication, it is submitted, is that appeal direct to the Privy Council should not be permitted.

J. P. Eddy, K.C., T.F.R. McDonnell and Rashid, for the legal representatives of Mumtaz Ali Khan, referred to Barker v. Edgerl, *Nicoll v. Nicoll*² and *Sadar Ali v. Dalimuddin*³.

Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for Appellants.—The fact that S. 12 of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925, gives a right of appeal to an appellate bench of the Chief Court does not mean that there may not be other concurrent rights of appeal. At the material date, S. 12 began with the words "except as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force", the effect of which was to preserve the effect of S. 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That latter section expressly provides for appeal direct to the Privy Council from a decision of a High Court given in its original jurisdiction. The Chief Court, Oudh, is a High Court within the meaning of that term in S. 3 (24) of the General Clauses Act, 1897.

Roxburgh, K.C., in reply.

17th March, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—This appeal is brought from two decrees of the 22nd December, 1930, made in the exercise of the original jurisdiction conferred upon the Chief Court of Oudh by S. 7 of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925, an Act of the Local Legislature of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. By these decrees Nanavutty, J., as trial Judge, after a protracted hearing, dismissed two suits (numbered respectively 11 and 12 of 1928), which had been instituted on the 2nd November, 1928. The two suits were tried together, and one judgment was given covering the issues in both. They came on for hearing on the 15th July, 1929. Evidence both oral and documentary was adduced in great quantity; the hearing continued until the 2nd August, 1929, when the case was postponed until the 13th February, 1930; thereafter the case was heard on a number of dates in February, March and April of that year. Sixteen issues in one case and fourteen in the other had been framed, and in a lengthy judgment the learned Judge considered and decided a number of important and difficult questions both of fact and of law.

Suit No. 11 was brought by 16 persons, now appellants, and may be summarily described as brought to establish the right of the first plaintiff to the taluqdari estate of Nanpara, and the rights of some or all of the plaintiffs to certain non-taluqdari property—villages, houses and movables—in succession to Raja Mohammad Siddique Khan, who had died on the 30th December, 1907 (and who is herein referred to as the late Raja). The first defendant in that suit (now respondent No. 1) was Raja Saadat Ali Khan; he was a son of the late Raja's sister, but he claimed to have been adopted by one of the late Raja's widows, Saltanat Begum, under the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) and in accordance with the provisions of the late Raja's will, whereby he left successive life estates and power of adoption to each of his four widows in a certain order. In November, 1925, the Court of Wards had given possession of the Nanpara estate to this defendant. The second defendant, Mumtaz Ali Khan (who died in 1934 while these suits were pending) was Raja of Utraula (another taluqdari estate); he had married Mohammad Kaniz Begum, sister to the late Raja of Nanpara, and on her death in 1919 had come into possession of some of the suit properties under a compromise made in 1910 which need not here be detailed. The third defendant was Rani Quamar Zamani Begum, who had been the first of five ladies whom the late Raja of Nanpara had married and who had been given a certain interest in his estate for her life by the compromise already mentioned.

In this suit the plaintiffs' case involved several different inquiries. In the first place, they had to displace the adoption of Saadat Ali. In the second place, they had to prove their pedigree so as to connect themselves with the admitted pedigree of the late Raja of Nanpara. This required that they should establish that an ancestor of the late Raja of Nanpara called Jehan Khan who lived in the middle of the seventeenth century, had besides his eldest son Mohammad Khan a second son called Mahmud Khan, and that this second son was father to one Mahabat Khan, ancestor of the plaintiffs. Thirdly, the plaintiffs had to show that certain specified individuals among them were the persons entitled to succeed on an intestacy, by proving that there was a custom of male lineal primogeniture or a custom to exclude females from succession. On all these points, and on others, the learned trial Judge found against the plaintiffs.

Suit No. 12 was brought by the same 16 plaintiffs together with two other persons of whom no mention need here be made. The first defendant was Mumtaz Ali Khan, Raja of Utraula, and Saadat Ali Khan was the second defendant. The plaintiffs' claim in this suit was laid as the nearest male agnates of Mohammad Kaniz Begum, the first defendant's wife, who had died in 1919. The claim was that the plaintiffs were entitled, as her heirs under the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), to 17 villages, part of the taluqdari estate of Utraula which had been transferred to her by her husband, the first defendant; also that three pattis which had been purchased by her had descended to one or other of the plaintiffs as non-taluqdari property governed by a custom of male lineal primogeniture. The main defences in this case were four, first, that the deeds of gift executed in his wife's favour by the Raja of Utraula had been purely benami and colourable transactions not intended by either party to be operative but only to shield the property from creditors; secondly, that the pedigree put forward by the plaintiffs to connect themselves with the lady was false; thirdly, that none of the plaintiffs was her heir; and fourthly, limitation. On these points the finding of the trial Judge was against the plaintiffs.

It is not necessary to set out in any fuller detail the circumstances or subject-matter of the litigation in order to make clear that it covered a wide area of disputed fact, and that unless the plaintiffs' claims could be dismissed on facts in limine they involved a number of important legal questions both as regards the application to Muslims of the right of adoption conferred by the Oudh Estates Act and other aspects of the law and custom of succession.

The first question for consideration by the Board is presented by the fact that their Lordships are asked to act as a Court of first appeal from the decision of a learned Judge of the Chief Court sitting at first instance. In a case of importance and complexity involving fact and law special to the province of Oudh, the experience and judgment of an appellate Bench of the Chief Court would contribute greatly to clarify the matter in dispute and the principles of law applicable to Oudh families and taluqdari estates; indeed it is only to be expected that some at least of the issues of fact would have been settled by concurrent findings of the Indian Courts..

The learned trial Judge having pronounced judgment on the 22nd December, 1930, and signed the two decrees on the 16th February, 1931, the plaintiffs on the 18th May, 1931, filed in the Chief Court applications under Ss. 109 and 110 and O. 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure asking for a certificate that the case was fit to be taken on appeal to His Majesty in Council. Two days later (20th May, 1931), they presented to the Chief Court a further application asking that if the Court should hold that their request for a certificate could not be granted their application therefor might be treated as a memorandum of appeal to an appellate Bench of the Chief Court. On the 21st September, 1931, a Bench of the Chief Court (Wazir Hasan, C.J. and Srivastava, J.), refused the certificate on the ground that an appeal to His Majesty from the decree of the trial Judge did not lie under S. 109 of the Code, and on the application of the 20th May, 1931, an order was passed in the following terms: "This application is not pressed and is therefore rejected." The next step taken by the plaintiffs was to apply for special leave by a petition lodged on the 9th March, 1932, where it was contended that the opening words of sub-S. (1) of S. 12 of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925—"except as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force"—gave them a right to appeal from the trial Judge direct to His Majesty under S. 109 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, and that in any event the former Act, being an Act of a local legislature, could not repeal the rights given by an Act passed by the Indian legislature. This petition having been heard by the Board on the 5th April, 1932, in the absence of anyone appearing for the respondents, though not without notice to them, by an Order in Council dated the 9th April, 1932, it was ordered that leave ought to be given to the petitioners to enter and prosecute their appeal and that the respondents ought to be at liberty upon the hearing of the appeal to take the objection that special leave to appeal ought not to have been granted. Their Lordships have before them a transcript of a few observations made at the conclusion of the hearing of the application for leave, but they are unable to interpret these as intended to restrict the discretion of the present Board after hearing full argument upon the effect of the Indian enactments. Indeed they are not of opinion that the question whether special leave ought to have been granted can be confined to a bare question of jurisdiction or can otherwise be regarded as made up of separate and distinct questions of which some are, but others are not, before the present Board. They observe, however, with some concern, that though this preliminary point was specially reserved by the Order in Council some seven years ago, no party took any steps to bring it expeditiously as a preliminary point before the Board so as to avoid useless expenditure of time and money in preparing the case for hearing on the merits, should the Board be of opinion that special leave should not have been granted. This failure to take such steps is, in their Lordships' opinion, difficult to justify and much to be regretted, and it cannot be permitted to influence the decision of the Board on the question whether special leave ought to have been granted.

The definition of "High Court" given by cl. (24) of S. 3 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) and Ss. 4 (1), 109, 110, 111 and 112 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code are as follows:—

"3.—(24) 'High Court,' used with reference to civil proceedings, shall mean the highest Civil Court of appeal in the part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates.

(C.P.C.) "4.—(1) In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by or under any other law for the time being in force.

"(a) from the decree or order of one Judge of a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of such High Court, or of a Division Court constituted by two or more Judges of such High Court, where such Judges are equally divided in opinion and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the High Court at the time being; or

"(b) to interfere with any rules made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and for the time being in force, for the presentation of appeals to His Majesty in Council, or their conduct before the said Judicial Committee."

The Oudh Courts Act (U. P. Act IV of 1925) was passed to amend and consolidate the law relating to the Courts in Oudh. Before 1925 the highest Court in Oudh was the Court of the Judicial Commissioner; the system of land tenure obtaining in the province under the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) gave rise to complex litigation, and suits to establish rights of succession to valuable taluqdari estates were tried at first instance by a Subordinate Judge and went on appeal to two judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court. By the Act of 1925 the legislature of the province set up a Chief Court. It gave to the new Court jurisdiction as the highest civil and criminal court of appeal and revision (Ss. 8 and 9), thus making it a High Court within the definition clause of S. 3 of the General Clauses Act. It also conferred upon the new Court an exclusive original jurisdiction which might be exercised by a single Judge, unless statute or rule otherwise provided. This original jurisdiction was not a local jurisdiction confined to the precincts of the chief town or any other town, but was a jurisdiction over all suits valued at five lakhs of rupees or over. It was not confined to suits in respect of taluqdari estates; on the other hand it is not in doubt that these were the suits for which the new jurisdiction was mainly designed.

By the Lower Burma Courts Act, 1900 (VI of 1900), the Indian legislature had established a Chief Court for Lower Burma with original jurisdiction within the town of Rangoon. Ss. 14 and 15 of that Act, which were followed in their wording by Ss. 12 and 13 of the Oudh Act of 1925, began with the same opening words—"except as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force". The Punjab legislature used the same opening phrase in the parallel sections. (9 and 10) of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914 [Punjab Act III of 1914]. S. 12 (1) of the Oudh Act was a condensed version of its predecessors, and S. 13 introduced little variation save for the reference to S. 98 of the Code which was new.

(b) in other cases the Bench before which the difference has arisen shall either refer the question to a Full Bench and dispose of the case in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench or refer the whole case for decision to a Full Bench "

No decisions on these sections of the Acts of 1900 or 1914 have been cited in argument, and their Lordships have no knowledge of any difficulty having been occasioned in Burma or the Punjab by their terms in the years before 1922 and 1919 respectively when the Chief Courts became High Courts; or of any attempt to claim that the duties of a court of first appeal from original decrees were thereby cast upon the prerogative whether exclusively or at the option of the appellant in each case. The Civil Procedure Code of 1882 applied to British Burma in 1900 and the Code of 1908 applied to the Punjab in 1914, but it does not follow that the effect of the words of exception as they appear in the three Acts was necessarily the same, and their Lordships will make no assumption on that point. In any case the words of exception which introduce each part of S. 12 and S. 13 of the Act of 1925 were found in Oudh to produce somewhat surprising results. They nullified altogether the meaning of S. 13, and gave rise to contentions upon S. 12 that rent suits as a class were outside sub-S. (2), and that appeals, notwithstanding sub-S. (1), lay direct to His Majesty from the decisions of a single judge. Accordingly at the instance of the Chief Court a bill was introduced into the local legislature in 1934 and passed (U. P. Act XIV of 1934) to substitute for the words of exception words of different and indeed contrary significance. "Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any enactment for the time being in force" are now the opening words of both sub-sections of S. 12, and S. 13 now begins: "Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, or in any other enactment for the time being in force." It does not appear, however, that there is anything in the Act of 1934 to say that it should operate retrospectively, nor is it clear whether S. 219 of the Government of India Act, 1935, has any effect to bring the Chief Court of Oudh under the provisions of S. 111 of the Code.

Apart from the Federal Court established by the Government of India Act, 1935, there is no Court in India having jurisdiction over the courts of the various provinces in a manner comparable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada over the Provinces of Canada or the High Court of Australia over the States of Australia. Moreover, from the decisions of the Supreme Court or High Court on appeal from the courts of a Province or State an appeal to His Majesty does not lie save by special leave. The alternative right to appeal either to His Majesty in Council or to the Supreme or High Court of the Dominion or Commonwealth affords no parallel whatever to the right which would accrue to an appellant from Oudh if he could come under Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code either after going first on appeal to an appellate bench or by omitting that tribunal as he chose.

Indeed it is only with great difficulty that such a state of things could be regarded in India as either orderly or practicable. In the particular circumstances of Oudh, apart altogether from Act XIV of 1934, the intention to introduce such a system could hardly without paradox be imputed to a provincial legislature. That this should be held to be within the intendment of general words of saving is yet more difficult. If intended at all it must have been intended as a new departure and a noticeable deviation from accepted methods.

Their Lordships, however, have to construe the Act of 1925 as it stood originally. Many cases not affected by Act XIV of 1934 have been decided by an appellate Bench on appeal, and a substantial number have thereafter come before the Board. Their Lordships were not asked by learned counsel for the appellants to hold that an appeal to an appellate Bench would be incompetent in a case, such as the present, where the requirements of S. 110 of the Code as to value are satisfied; and they think it right to state expressly that they cast no doubt upon the competence of such an appeal. The opening clause of sub-S. 1 of S. 12 makes the section give way only to a provision which negatives in the particular case either (a) the existence of any right to appeal or (b) the right to go to the particular tribunal mentioned, namely, a Bench of the Chief Court.

Where the Code or the Oudh Act says "an appeal shall lie" to a named tribunal, it is not easy to say with confidence whether a negative implication is or is not part of the intention of the phrase—that is, whether the phrase means only that an appellant can go to the named tribunal or that if he appeals at all he must go to that tribunal and to no other. If no other appeal be provided there can be no difficulty. Hitherto alternative or optional jurisdiction in appeal has never been a feature of the Indian system of judicature. On the other hand their Lordships have difficulty in regarding Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code as directed to prohibiting an appeal being brought within a Chief Court in like manner as a Letters Patent appeal is brought within a Chartered High Court. The two sections taken together seem rather to be intended to provide an appeal to His Majesty on the footing that no further appeal in India is provided. Moreover, if these sections negative any other forum of appeal save that mentioned therein, the opening words of S. 12 of the Oudh Act must either be taken with some unexpressed qualification or they lead in effect to the result that the appeal provided for within the Chief Court is limited in the case of original decrees and final orders to cases under Rs. 10,000 in value. It is not, of course, impossible that in a suit valued at five lakhs—even a suit claiming a taluq—an appeal may be brought over some matter that is in value under Rs. 10,000, but whatever is meant by S. 12 it is not, in their Lordships' view, an attempt to provide for that.

This may indeed be further demonstrated by a reference to clause (c) in S. 109 of the Code and to the passage in the middle of S. 110: "or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value".

There is nothing in the objection that an Act of the Local Legislature could not repeal a provision of the Code [cf. S. 80-A of the Government of India Act], and this objection was not repeated at the hearing of the appeal; but their Lordships do not propose to base the advice which they will tender to His Majesty upon any decision to the effect that the language of S. 12 is effective to exclude the provisions of S. 109 of the Code. They wish to minimise neither the difficulty which the opening words of S. 12 place in the way of any reliance upon sub-S. (1) of S. 4 of the Code nor the ambiguity which lurks in the phrase "an appeal shall lie." They have to give effect in a matter of practical and indeed constitutional importance to general words of exception which have been used by the provincial legislature in circumstances which make it difficult to define their scope with complete exactness.

If the right to appeal to an appellate Bench of the Chief Court has by this provincial legislation been given to the appellants without excluding them from the terms of S. 109 or bringing them within S. 111, their Lordships, before advising that His Majesty in Council should at the appellants' option assume the duties of a concurrent court of first appeal for the province of Oudh as regards cases brought in the Chief Court, may reasonably be expected to examine with some care the nature of the right asserted to have been vested in the appellants by S. 109 of the Code. To define the jurisdiction vested in His Majesty in Council and expound the principles which govern the exercise of the prerogative in reviewing the decisions of the Courts in different parts of the Empire is a task not lightly to be undertaken; and as the appellants stand upon the terms of S. 109 it will suffice for their Lordships to call attention to the fact that this section is qualified, not only by its opening words and by S. 111, but also by S. 112. It is plain from the terms of the Code that the Indian legislature was not claiming or proposing to abridge or extend the prerogative, and their Lordships have no reason to suppose that the legislature of the United Provinces was not fully aware in 1925 of the constitutional position when it was setting up a Chief Court for Oudh. The discretion which S. 112 affirms and maintains applies to the rejecting as well as to the receiving of appeals, and the prerogative is not wholly or finally concluded for either purpose by the provisions of S. 109. Their Lordships would certainly be more slow to impair than to extend provisions of this character; but the former power can be evoked by an occasion which requires it. By the express statement of the right which they assert the appellants are disabled from maintaining that His Majesty in Council is obliged at their option to function as a concurrent court of first appeal from the Chief Court of Oudh; and before such new obligations are accepted their Lordships have a duty to see that a proper exercise of the prerogative requires them to be accepted. In the present case they consider that they have a full discretion in the matter, and they have considered the circumstances of the case with due regard to the undoubted right of the provincial legislature to give powers to the new Chief Court or withhold them, and to the interests of the administration of justice in the province, which in their Lordships' view would be detrimentally affected by any procedure under which the appellate functions of the Chief Court were eliminated or ignored.

By the terms of the Order in Council of 9th April, 1932, they have to consider whether special leave to appeal ought to have been granted, and upon an examination of the various enactments they have reached a conclusion adverse to the appellants. If the appellants can still claim to come before an appellate Bench of the Chief Court nothing is here said to prejudice their claim, but their Lordships must humbly advise

His Majesty that special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council ought not to have been granted, and that this consolidated appeal should accordingly be dismissed. The appellants must pay one set of costs to be divided equally between Raja Saadat Ali Khan and Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan's representatives.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), S. 41—Decree setting aside sale deeds executed by plaintiff during minority and giving possession—Power to order refund of the consideration.

The statutory discretion vested in the Courts of this country by S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act is of wider amplitude than the corresponding rule of equity administered in England, where there is no such statutory counterpart. Once it is found that the requirements of the section are satisfied and there exist circumstances which call for the exercise of the discretion the Court is bound to afford relief without being hampered by reference to the limitations which surround the corresponding rule of equity as administered elsewhere.

Mallacheruvu Raghavaya v. Mallacheruvu Subbaya, (1917) 7 L.W. 124, followed.

Even where there is neither knowledge of minority on the part of the alienee nor misrepresentation on the part of the minor the Court has power under S. 41 to order a refund of the consideration received by the minor. The question whether S. 41 can afford relief only in a case where the minor as plaintiff seeks the assistance of the Court and is inapplicable if he happens to be merely a defendant, was left open.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bapatla dated 31st December, 1929 and passed in O. S. No. 143 of 1925.

V. Govindarajachari, P. Satyanarayana Rao, S. Vepa and K. Viswanatha Sastri for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the appellant to set aside a number of sale deeds executed by him during his minority and to recover the properties sold together with mesne profits. The defendants 1, 2, 4 and 5 were the purchasers under different sale deeds, all of which have been set aside by the trial Court. But the decree for possession has been made conditional on the appellant refunding to the several purchasers the amounts of the consideration received from them. The first defendant died after the institution of the suit and his legal representatives are defendants 10 and 11. The main object of the appeal is to get rid of the condition imposed on the appellant to repay the purchase moneys.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the appellant was a minor when he executed the several deeds of sale, that he did not make any misrepresentation as to his age. He has not found that any of the purchasers except the fourth defendant had knowledge that the appellant was a minor when the sales were made. As regards the fourth defendant, however, he came to the conclusion that he must have known of the appellant's minority at the time of the sale in his favour. These findings of fact have not been challenged in appeal.

The learned Judge has held that the appellant was not estopped from pleading that the sales were void, a point concluded by authority and very properly not questioned before us. It was however urged on behalf of the appellant that the learned Judge was in error in imposing the condition referred to above, as neither S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act nor S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act justifies it. It is unnecessary for us, in this appeal to consider the scope of S. 65 of the Contract Act, as the first respondent's advocate has not chosen to support the judgment by reference to that section but took his stand on S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act, which according to him is sufficient to justify the conclusion of the trial Court. This argument has found favour with the Subordinate Judge, and we also are of opinion that it is sound.

* On adjudging the cancellation of instrument, the Court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require."

Read in the light of S. 39 which authorises the cancellation of a written instrument, whether void or voidable, S. 41 cannot be understood as limited in its operation to void instruments only, and accordingly it was conceded before us that that section is applicable to both classes of instruments. What is however urged is that though such may be the effect of the section, it must be deemed merely to embody the familiar rule of equity that he who seeks equity must do equity but limited and circumscribed by the qualification laid down in *Thurstan v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society*¹, namely:

"That a Court of Equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which, as against that person, the legislature has declared to be void."

So qualified, the rule would seem to preclude Courts from granting compensation in all cases of void transactions, for we cannot see any difference in principle or reason, between transactions void by statute and those void under the general law. An argument of the kind proves too much, runs counter to the concession made earlier by the appellant's counsel and is, in our opinion, against the plain intendment of the section and must accordingly be rejected. In our judgment the statutory discretion vested in the Courts of this country by S. 41 is of wider amplitude than the corresponding rule of equity administered in England, where there is no such statutory counterpart. That discretion is of course not to be arbitrary but sound and reasonable and guided by well-settled judicial principles. But once it is found that the requirements of the section are satisfied and there exist circumstances which call for the exercise of the discretion, the Court is bound to afford relief without being hampered by reference to the limitations which surround the corresponding rule of equity as administered elsewhere. We think we are bound to give effect to the plain words of the section and are not at liberty to import into it, considerations derived from the English or any other system of jurisprudence. It is scarcely necessary to add that the exercise of such a power is not to invent a new head of equity, but merely to act in obedience to a statutory injunction. The view here expressed is, we think, supported by a decision of a Bench of this Court in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*², where the facts were almost on all fours with those found in the present case. Coutts-Trotter, J., as he then was, expressed himself in favour of a wider interpretation of the section. After referring to the English decisions he said:

"But it is clear that in this country we have a statutory right to impose conditions by S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act, and that right is clearly recognised in *Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose*¹. I regard this as a proper course for exercising that discretion and make it a condition that the plaintiffs shall repay . . . before recovering possession of the property."

The passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in the above case to which the learned Judge apparently alluded is obviously the one at the top of page 549:

"Another enactment relied upon as a reason why the mortgage money should be returned, is S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) which is as follows."

After setting out the terms of the section their Lordships proceed:

"S. 38 provides in similar terms for a case of rescission of a contract. These sections no doubt do give a discretion to the Court, but the Court of first instance and subsequently the appellate Court, in the exercise of such discretion, came to the conclusion that under the circumstances of this case justice did not require them to order the return by the respondent of money advanced to him with full knowledge of his infancy, and their Lordships see no reason for interfering with the discretion so exercised."

The italics are ours and the italicised portion points unmistakably to the correctness of the wider interpretation of this section. The appellant's Counsel repeated before us an argument presented before the learned Judges who decided the case in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*² and rejected by them after full consideration. That argument is that in the very next passage their Lordships equated the principle enacted in the section to the rule of equity in England to which reference has been made. The passage is this:

"It was also contended that one who seeks equity must do equity. But this is the last point over again and does not require further notice, except by referring to a recent decision of the Court of Appeal in *Thurston v. Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society*³

To appeal to the limited rule of equity after the refusal of remedy under the ampler rule of the statute may not inappropriately perhaps be described as an attempt to argue the same point over again. However that may be we find that the point has been directly dealt with and answered in the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the same case. He said at page 129:

"The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that this succeeding paragraph" (the reference is to the second paragraph at page 549 in *Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose*¹ referred to above), "must be taken to have given the final answer to the contention as to compensation. I do not think so. In my opinion, the two paragraphs are consistent with each other. In the second paragraph their Lordships must be taken to have held that if the matter rested purely on principles of equity, they would not be prepared to order compensation as that claim was negatived under similar circumstances by the House of Lords in *Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Thurston*². Their Lordships should not be taken to have held that the statutory rule contained in S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act should not be given effect to as it only contained a rule of equity. The net import of the two paragraphs is to declare that the statutory discretion as to compensation does exist and can be exercised by the Courts, but that if relief is claimed on general equitable grounds apart from the statute, such a claim is inadmissible as that would be opposed to the principles laid down by the House of Lords."

We are in substantial agreement with this view of the judgment of the Privy Council the more so as we find that it is in consonance with our understanding of what we regard as the plain language of the section. The decision in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*³ has not only not been challenged since, but has been cited in several subsequent cases without dissent. (See *Rahima Bee v. Mannan Bee*⁴, *Abdul Majid v. Ramisa Bibi*⁵ and *Guruswamy Pantulu v. Lall Khajanchee*⁶.) We must therefore repel the plea for the narrower interpretation of the section contended for by the appellant. Before finally leaving this subject, we must also notice a further submission on behalf of the appellant that the decision in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*³ is in conflict with an earlier Bench decision of this Court in *Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiar*⁷ and that the latter must be followed in preference to the former or that the conflict must be resolved by a reference to a Full Bench. It is to be observed that the ruling in *Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiar*⁷ was cited and relied upon in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*³, but was held to be either inapplicable, distinguishable or untenable. It is enough to point out that the question of repayment did not arise for direct decision in *Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiari*¹, but arose only incidentally for the purpose of deciding whether the plaintiff an assignee of a mortgage by a minor could be regarded as fulfilling the character of a creditor so that he might sue under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to set aside a subsequent settlement by the mortgagor. Secondly, S. 41 is not referred to at all in the judgment, much less its language considered for a comparison of the statutory rule with the pure rule of equity of the English Law. We do not therefore feel obliged to follow the one course or the other suggested by the appellant.

Holding as we do that the learned Subordinate Judge had power under S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act to order a refund of the consideration received by the appellant, it still remains for us to consider whether the power was properly exercised on the facts found in the present case. It is settled law that where the alienee chose to advance the money to a minor with knowledge of the minority, it would be improper to order a refund. It is equally settled that where an innocent purchaser or alienee was induced to part with money to a minor by a misrepresentation as to his age, an order for refund would be made almost as a matter of course. Where, however, there is neither knowledge of minority on the part of the alienee, nor misrepresentation on the part of the minor the answer is not quite so easy. Cases of this type have been somewhat rare, for, our attention has not been drawn to any of the decisions than those in *Mallacheruvu Raghavayya v. Mallacheruvu Subbayya*² and *Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiari*¹. The appellant's argument is that no order for refund could be made against a minor except when the money was paid to him as result of a fraud practised upon or a fraudulent misrepresentation made to, the person who was thereby induced to part with the money. There are no doubt dicta in *Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiari*¹, which seem to lend colour to such an argument, but we must on this point again be guided by the clear pronouncement contained in the later case.

2. (1917) 7 L.W. 124.

Reference may finally be made to an argument of the respondent's advocate that the observations in *Vaskuntarama Pillai v. Athimoolam Chettiar*¹ are explicable on the footing that the minor in that case was a defendant. According to him, S. 41 is framed so as to afford relief only in a case where the minor himself as plaintiff seeks the assistance of the Court and the section is inapplicable if he happens to be merely a defendant in a suit by the person who dealt with him when he was a minor. On the soundness of this argument, it is unnecessary to express a final opinion as in this case the minor has come into Court as plaintiff seeking the assistance of the Court as such. When the question arises, it would be a matter for consideration whether such a marked difference in the substantive rights of parties could have been intended to be based on the accident of the claimant being a plaintiff or defendant and whether there is not implicit in the language of the section a rule of wider significance affording under proper circumstances relief to a purchaser or alienee irrespective of his being a plaintiff or defendant.

We are therefore of opinion that the learned Judge in the Court below was right in invoking the provisions of S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act for imposing the condition inserted in the decree, except as against the fourth defendant who is the third respondent in the appeal. The Subordinate Judge has found that he must have known of the appellant's minority when he took the sale. Nobody has appeared on his behalf to challenge the correctness of this finding which we must therefore accept. By reason of this finding he is disentitled to claim a refund and we do not understand why in spite of it, the Subordinate Judge has directed a refund to him also, along with the other defendants mentioned in the decree. The decree must be modified by omitting the fourth defendant from among the persons for whose benefit the condition for repayment has been inserted. As against him there will be decree for recovery of possession together with mesne profits from the date when he took possession till the date of the recovery of possession. The appeal is dismissed with the costs of the first respondent and as against all other respondents except the fourth. As against the third respondent the appeal is allowed and the condition for repayment

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 30—Incriminating statement made for the first time at the preliminary enquiry by one of several accused being jointly tried—If can be taken into account as against the other accused.

Where a confession is made by one of several accused being jointly tried, for the first time, at the preliminary enquiry at the dock, and in the presence of the other accused and the verbatim record of it by the Magistrate is filed at the sessions trial in proof of it, the other accused are not prejudiced as they had as much opportunity of explaining or rebutting it as if it had been made before the preliminary enquiry and proved at that enquiry and it can be taken into account against the other accused.

Trial referred by the Court of Session of the North Arcot division for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon the said prisoner in C. C. No. 39 of 1938 on 21st December, 1938 and appeals by the prisoners against the said sentences.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by . . .

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—The two accused who are cousins have been convicted of the murder of Thayarammal and sentenced to death. They have filed separate appeals both numbered as Criminal Appeal No. 17 of 1939.

(Crl. App. No. 17 of 1939).

On the 13th July, Srinivasalu Naicken made a long statement to the Sub-Magistrate admitting the crime and stating that he and first and second accused had murdered the woman by throttling her at the threshing floor where she slept on the night of the 27th June to guard her paddy. He said that they put the body into a gunny bag which was there and carried it to a distant field and buried it at the place which he had subsequently shown to the police. He said that before burying it they had removed the jewels and that he had been given a gold coin which he calls a quarter sovereign and one of the trinkets from the tali which he sold at a shop in Arkonam. P.W. 17 a shroff of Arkonam deposed that on the 30th June Srinivasalu Naicken sold him a quarter sovereign. He said he had melted this before the police questioned him about it. There is an entry in his accounts Ex. K-1, that gold weighing 9 pagodas was sold to him by Pallur Srinivasalu Naicken on 30th June. On the 13th July also Muniammal, P.W. 28, the second wife of the first accused made a statement on oath to the Sub-Magistrate about the jewels which she had produced before the police. That statement is Ex. T.

On the 12th August Srinivasalu Naicken reiterated his confession in a long statement to the District Magistrate and a pardon was tendered to him on that day which he accepted. He has been examined as P.W. 6 in the committing Magistrate's Court and as P.W. 1 at the Sessions.

The proof of the case against these two accused consisted principally in the evidence of this approver Srinivasalu Naicken. He was corroborated in a material particular by the fact that the murdered woman's jewels were found in the possession of the first accused's wife, Muniammal. Muniammal examined as P.W. 28 did not deny that she produced the jewels to the police on the 8th July the day the body was exhumed but she said that a head constable gave them to her first. Then she was confronted with Ex. T the sworn statement she had made to the Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 13th July. She there deposed that at daybreak on the morning of 28th June the first and second accused had roused her from sleep and the second accused had given her a little cloth bundle. Her husband told her it contained jewels and that she was to keep it safe until he asked for it. At the trial Muniammal did not deny making this statement but she said that she made it because she was told to do so by P.W. 14 and a head constable. It was filed in evidence to contradict her under S. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act.

P.W. 14 is a man called Vajravelu Asari. He is not a reputable witness having been convicted once of receiving stolen property. He deposed that on the Amavasai night at about 8 P.M. when he was in the street near the house of the approver Srinivasalu Naicken P.W.1, accused 1 and 2 came in company and called out to P.W. 1 and P.W. 1 replied that he was still at his meal. P.W. 15 deposed that on that same night he saw the two accused pass along the street together and he commented on this to a neighbour, P.W. 16, as he thought it strange that these two who were enemies should be together. It will be remembered that it was on information given by P. W. 14 and P.W. 15 to the head constable that the approver was first suspected and detained by him for examination on the night of the 7th July.

All this evidence was placed before the committing Magistrate and when the accused were examined under S. 209, Criminal Procedure Code, for the purpose of enabling them to explain the evidence against them there took place a dramatic and somewhat unusual incident. The first accused had made a fairly long statement which had been read out to him and which he had attested by his thumb mark. He admitted that he had gone to the threshing floor that night but said that when he reached it, Thayarammal who had been there all day had gone. He said he had slept there all night and returned home at 8 in the morning. He admitted that the jewels produced in the case belonged to Thayarammal and were on her person when she was at the threshing floor but said that he did not know how they came to be found out. He denied all complicity in the crime. Then the second accused made his statement giving at length the history of his quarrels with Thayarammal and ending up with the assertion that the approver had implicated him out of enmity, the enmity arising out of the fact that on a certain occasion in May, 1937, when the first accused was away from home he had found him, the approver, in bed with first accused's wife and quarrelled with him on that account. At the conclusion of this statement the first accused turned to the second accused in the dock and said: "It was you who put your foot on her neck and pressed it" and turning to the Magistrate against him saying that the second accused's accusation against his wife was made out of spite because he had had to warn the second accused, to keep away from his house in his absence and when his wife's sister was absent. And the first accused still speaking to the Magistrate requested him to put it on record that he the first accused and the second accused and Srinivasalu Naicken had murdered Thayarammal and taken her jewels and buried her. The Magistrate warned the first accused that this very statement would be sufficient to hang him and then asked the accused to repeat what he had said and the accused said :

"Srinivasalu Naicken, Singara Naicken (second accused) and myself, the three of us together committed the murder. It was Singara Naicken that placed his foot on her neck and pressed it. It was Srinivasalu Naicken who tied the fibre cord round the neck. We put her into the gunny bag, tied it up, took it, dug a pit, and buried it. It was Srinivasalu Naicken and Singara Naicken who removed the jewels. I dug the pit. After burying her we took the jewels and came home. At the bund of the tank Singara Naicken gave Srinivasalu a quarter sovereign and an amulet. After that I went away to the threshing floor. I do not know to whom Singara Naicken took the jewels and gave them."

Examined at the Sessions when this statement was filed under S. 287, Criminal Procedure Code, the first accused merely said that he never made it.

The evidence of the approver and the statement just referred to made to the Magistrate at the preliminary enquiry by the first accused is that the deceased was killed by throttling. First, as she lay asleep, one of the murderers placed his foot on her throat and pressed on it. Then when she struggled, another of the murderers throttled her with his hands while his accomplices held her legs and arms. The approver says that she died when he was tying the cord round her neck and therefore he did not tie it tight. This is borne out by the medical evidence. The sub-assistant surgeon found no mark of the cord on the neck. It was tied to the neck when the body was found but that was probably due to the fact that the neck had swollen through decomposition. The body was too far advanced in decomposition to afford any evidence of the cause of death. But the fact that the deceased was apparently well and active when she was last seen alive and that her body was found bundled up in a sack and buried in the ground strongly supports the inference that she was murdered.

It is argued here as it was argued in the lower court that if the deceased was killed in the manner stated by the approver and by first accused there would have been injury to the neck which would have been visible at the post-mortem; for instance fracture of the hyoid bone. But if the object which is employed to compress the windpipe is broad and pliable there need be no injury to the bony structures of the neck. Pressure by the sole of the foot or by the palm of the hand placed across the neck of an unresisting victim would cause death by asphyxia without necessarily causing injury to the bones or tissues of the neck. The absence of such injury does not therefore indicate that the approver is not telling the truth, when he says that the accused was throttled.

The principal argument addressed to us is that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that the evidence of the approver was corroborated in material particulars not only bearing on the facts of the crime but upon the accused's implication in it. See the Privy Council decision in Mahadeo v. The King. But here we find that as regards the facts of the crime the approver is corroborated by the circumstances in which the body was found and by the statement of the first accused in the committing Magistrate's Court. As for the first accused's part in the crime there is in addition to the said statement the fact that the deceased's jewels were in the possession of his second wife Muniammal. Against the second accused there is the confession made by the first accused in open Court at the time of the preliminary enquiry. We think that not only may that confession be taken into consideration against the second accused but also that having regard to the circumstances in which it was made it has considerable probative value. The first accused had just made a statement denying all knowledge of the crime. But when the second accused in his turn made his statement and incidentally made the allegation of adultery against first accused's wife, the first accused, voluntarily and in spite of the Magistrate's warning withdrew his former statement, confessed the crime and implicated the second accused. He deliberately made himself liable to the extreme penalty of the law in order that the second accused should suffer too.

Learned counsel contends on behalf of the second appellant that this incriminating statement made by the first accused at the preliminary enquiry cannot be taken into account as against the second accused. His argument is that a confession made by one of several accused who are being tried jointly is governed by S. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act and that S. 30 refers only to confessions made before the enquiry begins and proved at the enquiry. S. 30 is:

"When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession."

We do not think there is any force in this argument. It is true that the confession was made for the first time at the preliminary enquiry. But it was made in the dock in the presence of the second accused and there was no question of its having to be proved at that stage. Then at the Sessions trial two months later it was proved under S. 287, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Magistrate's verbatim record of it. The second accused was in no way prejudiced. He had as much opportunity of explaining or rebutting it as if it had been made before the preliminary enquiry and proved at that enquiry.

We think that the case is established against the second accused equally as against the first accused. The principal fact proved apart from the evidence of the approver is the recovery of the jewels from the first accused's second wife. She stated both at the preliminary enquiry and at the trial that they were foisted on her by the police. But that is not only inherently improbable for where could the police have got them but also is contradicted by the statement made by her to the Magistrate on the 8th July under S. 164, Criminal Procedure Code, in which she gave an entirely different version of how she came into possession of them. Then against the second accused we have the first accused's dock confession which substantially corroborates the evidence of the approver.

And lastly against both the accused there is the evidence of P. W. 14 that these accused came to the approver's house about 8 P.M. on the night of the 27th June, and of P.W. 15 that he saw the two accused going in company along the street about the same time. This evidence is of some importance. The approver says that he and the accused met together at his house at Pallur before proceeding to the scene of crime. The evidence of these two witnesses corroborates him in that particular.

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the approver's evidence is credible and acceptable and that it is corroborated in material particulars bearing on the accused's complicity in the crime. These two accused had a powerful motive to get rid of the deceased. In our opinion there can be no doubt that they murdered her on the night of the 27th June last. We dismiss their appeals. As for the sentence imposed by the learned Sessions Judge it was eminently justified. The sentence of death on the accused is confirmed.

Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882), Sec. 88 and 90—Co-owner and guardian in possession of minor's property—Liability to account in full.

The appellant was entitled to a half share of her father's estate. Her father's three brothers—respondents 1 to 3—after her father's death took charge of all his assets including the business which they continued to carry on. The appellant claimed that she is entitled to a half share in these properties and in all the accretions to the estate arising from the business.

Held, respondents 1 to 3 were guardians of the appellant and the minor's property being in their hands they must account in full. The fact that they were co-owners of the estate of the appellant's father does not affect their liability as guardians and their relationship was essentially a fiduciary one.

Muhammad Abdul Rahim Baig Sahib v. Muhammad Abdul Hakim Baig Sahib, (1930) 61 M.L.J. 139; I.E.R. 54 Mad. 543, relied on.

On appeal from the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Lakshmana Rao, dated 7th April, 1936 and passed in C. S. No. 145 of 1930 on the file of the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

G. Ramakrishna Aiyar for Appellant.

Srinivasaraghavan, Thyagarajan, S. Nagaraja Aiyar and R. Swaminatha Aiyar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether respondents 1 to 3 at times material to the suit stood in a fiduciary position with regard to the appellant. The appellant is the only daughter of one Abdul Rahiman Sahib, who died on the 18th June, 1921, when she was about six years of age. The appellant's mother had pre-deceased the appellant's father, who was a Sunni Mohammadan. Under the Sunni Law, his heirs were: the appellant, his three brothers, Waheb, Majeeth and Hameed (respondents 1 to 3), his second wife, Sakina Bi (who died during the pendency of the suit) and his mother Rabia Bi, who died before the suit was instituted. Abdul Rahiman was a dealer in rope, thread, coir, carpets and other articles. His business was a very successful one and when he died he left a considerable fortune. All the members of his family lived together and the heirs continued to live together after his death. In the year following his death the third respondent married his widow, Sakina Bi, and by her had four children, respondents 4 to 7. After his death the appellant lived with respondents 1 to 3 until 1929 when she left the family house and married one Abdul Aziz. She was then more than 15 years of age. According to the appellant's uncles, respondents 1 to 3, Abdul Aziz removed the appellant from their lawful custody. In fact they filed a complaint charging him with kidnapping the appellant. The complaint was dismissed and the appellant having married Abdul Aziz instituted the suit out of which this appeal arise.

Kathoom Bi

v.
Abdul Wahab
Sahib.

Abdul Rahiman carried on the business in his own name, but the day after he died, respondents 1 to 3 changed the name of the business to "Abdul Rahiman Sahib and Brothers" and set up a claim that they had throughout been partners in the business, each brother having a quarter share. In the month of October, 1921, respondents 1 to 3 caused a panchayat to assemble with a view to the Panchayatdars distributing the estate on the footing that respondents 1 to 3 were each entitled to a fourth share in the business. The proceedings of the Panchayatdars have been referred to here and below as arbitration proceedings and for the purposes of this appeal this description may be adhered to. The arbitrators submitted their award on the 10th October, 1921, but as it was unstamped a fresh award was made on the 24th April, 1922. It has not been suggested in the proceedings before us that the arbitrators acted improperly.

Kathoom Bi
v.
Abdul
Sahib.

They gave an award distributing the assets of the deceased's estate on the basis that respondents 1 to 3 were partners. So far as the arbitrators were concerned this was not in issue. Respondents 1 to 3 were not in fact partners and the arbitration proceeded on an entirely wrong basis. At the trial of the suit an issue was framed on the question whether respondents 1 to 3 were partners with Abdul Rahiman and the issue was found against them. This finding has not been challenged before us and the appeal has been argued on the footing that it was a false claim. It is not suggested that the appellant is in any way bound by the award. In fact it is conceded that she is not. The appellant's grandmother, Rabia Bi, purported to act as her guardian when the question of the distribution of the estate was before the arbitrators, but she was not in law the guardian of the minor's property and so far as the minor was concerned the proceedings were a nullity.

The appellant filed the suit on the Original Side of this Court on the 7th March, 1930. She claimed that on the death of her father she became entitled to one-half share of his estate, her grandmother to one-sixth, her step-mother to one-eighth, and respondents 1 to 3 to the remaining 5/24th share in all the assets left by Abdul Rahiman. It is not disputed that Sunni Law requires the estate to be distributed in these proportions. The appellant, however, alleges, and again the truth of her allegation is accepted, that after her father's death her uncles took charge of all his assets, including the business, which they continued to carry on. The business continued to prosper and out of the profits respondents 1 to 3 purchased the properties set out in Part 1 of Sch. B in the plaint. The appellant claimed before the trial Court and contends now that she is entitled to a half share in these properties, and in all the accretions to the estate arising from the business. In law the heirs became tenants in common of the estate as it stood at the time of his death and the learned trial Judge held that the appellant was entitled to a moiety of the estate distributed by the arbitrators with profits from the date of her father's death, but he rejected her claim to a half share in the profit made out of the business after her father's death on the ground that a co-owner in management "does not per se stand in a fiduciary relation". In accordance with his decision the learned trial Judge passed a preliminary decree directing the Official Referee to take accounts on the basis that the appellant was entitled to a moiety of the properties left by her father, but to no share in the acquisitions made by respondents 1 to 3 out of the profits of the business subsequent to the death of Abdul Rahiman. This meant that the appellant was not to be given any share in the properties set out in Part 1 of Sch. B. It is this finding which the appellant challenges. She says that the learned trial Judge should have held that respondents 1 to 3 were in the position of trustees and have given her a half share in all the profits made in the business after the death of her father.

Kathoom Bi

Abdul Wahab
Sahib.

The learned Advocate for the appellant conceded that if there was no fiduciary relationship, the preliminary decree passed by the learned trial Judge was the correct one. On the other hand it is not disputed that if respondents 1 to 3 are to be regarded as being in a fiduciary position the appellant is entitled to succeed in the appeal. Therefore, the sole question which the Court is called upon to decide is whether respondents 1 to 3 in carrying on the business of their deceased brother should be regarded as trustees for the appellant to the extent of one half of the profits. The case of the appellant is that the respondents 1 to 3 stood in a fiduciary position because she was a minor living with them under their care and control and that while she was in this position they took charge of her share in the estate. The facts on which the appellant's case is based do not admit of dispute, and for eight years, that is, until 1929, respondents 1 to 3 had the appellant under their care and control. Moreover, they claimed to be her legal guardians as the pleadings in this case show. The second respondent applied for letters of administration to the estate and effects of the appellant's father for her use and benefit till she attained majority, and on the 18th December, 1922, obtained a grant of letters, but the business and all the other assets of her father's estate remained with respondents 1 to 3.

A trustee is not permitted to make a profit out of his trust and a guardian of a minor is in the position of a trustee when in possession of the minor's property. In *Morgan v. Morgan*¹, Lord Hardwicke observed that where a person, whether a father or a stranger, enters upon the estate of an infant and continues the possession the Court will consider such person as a guardian of the infant. In *Dormer v. Fortescue*¹, Lord Hardwicke declared that the Court will decree an account from the time of the infant's title accrued, "for every person who enters on the estate of an infant enters as a guardian or a bailiff", and in *Doe v. Keen*², Lord Kenyon, C. J., said that nothing can be clearer than that an infant may consider whoever enters on his estate as entering for his use. This principle has many times been affirmed and is now embodied in the Indian Trusts Act.

S. 88 of the Indian Trusts Act provides that where a trustee, executor, partner, agent, director of a company, legal adviser or other person bound in fiduciary character to protect the interests of another person, by availing himself of his character, gains for himself any pecuniary advantage, or where any person so bound enters into any dealings under circumstances in which his own interests are, or may be, adverse to those of such other person and thereby gains for himself a pecuniary advantage, he must hold for the benefit of such other person the advantage so gained. S. 90 provides that where a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee or other qualified owner by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage he must hold for the benefit of all persons so interested the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted in gaining such advantage.

It is not necessary to review the Indian authorities which are in line with the English authorities, but in the course of the arguments our attention was drawn to the case of *Muhammad Abdul Rahim Baig Sahib v. Muhammad Abdul Hakim Baig Sahib*³, where a Bench of this Court (Wallace and Pandalai, JJ.) applied the principle referred to in a case relating to the business of a Muhammadan family. There a Muhammadan cloth merchant died leaving a widow, two major sons, two minor sons, and three minor daughters. The plaintiffs' case was that the major sons on the death of the father continued his business and taking advantage of their position as the eldest male members of the family used in the business the assets of the other members of the family, including the shares of the widow and the minors. The Court held that by this assumption of family management—it did not matter whether the position of the major sons was that of trustees de son tort or executors de son tort—the relationship was essentially a fiduciary one.

1. (1744) 3 Atk. 124: 26 E.R. 875.

3. (1930) 61 M.L.J. 139: I.L.R. 54 Mad. 543

Kathoom Bi
v.
Abdul
Sahib.

We are of opinion that the position of respondents 1 to 3 in this case was essentially a fiduciary one. They took charge of the estate of Abdul Rahiman in which the appellant had a half interest at a time when she was a child and in their care and control and they have continued in possession of the estate. Having got possession of the estate they set up a false claim to be partners in the business in order to get a greater share in the estate than the law allowed and utilised monies belonging to the appellant for themselves. When the appellant eventually escaped from their control they alleged that she had been kidnapped from their custody as her lawful guardians and they have acknowledged their guardianship in the pleadings in this suit. On their own showing respondents 1 to 3 were the guardians of the appellant and the minor's property being in their hands they must account in full. The fact that they were co-owners of the estate of Abdul Rahiman does not affect their liability as guardians.

We hold that respondents 1 to 3 were in the position of trustees and are liable to account to the appellant for her half share in the profits arising out of the business. We understand that an account has already been taken on the basis of the preliminary decree. It will now have to be taken on the basis that the appellant is also entitled to a half share in the profits which have accrued from the business, and the preliminary decree will be varied accordingly. The appellant having succeeded she will be entitled to her costs, which will be paid by respondents 1 to 3.

Mortgage—Assignment of mortgagee's rights—Some of the assignees realising their own share of the mortgage debt—If liable to account as agents or constructive trustees of their co-assignees—Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882), S. 90—Applicability.

A mortgagee owed Rs. 80,000 to the plaintiff and sixth defendant on a promissory note and Rs. 41,079-9-4 to defendants 1 to 5 on a promissory note. The mortgagee on 6th July, 1925, assigned his rights under a mortgage for Rs. 1,16,650 to the plaintiff and the defendants. The consideration for it was the entire debt payable to defendants 1 to 5 and Rs. 61,525-11-11 out of the debt payable to the plaintiff and the sixth defendant. The mortgagor paid defendants 1 to 5 between April, 1926 and November, 1930, a sum of Rs. 46,000 towards their share of the mortgage amount. The plaintiff averred that there was a partnership between him and defendants or in the alternative defendants 1 to 5 were acting or must be deemed to have been acting on his behalf also and having given a partial discharge they must be held to have acted and realised the money not only for themselves but also for the plaintiff and the sixth defendant and claimed accounts against the defendants. In an earlier suit by the plaintiff (to which defendants 1 to 5 were parties) for the sale of the mortgaged properties, it was held that the amounts realised by defendants 1 to 5 should be credited towards the interest due on the mortgage. The partnership alleged, was found against, but the Sub-Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim holding that defendants were constructive trustees. On appeal, Held, the defendants were merely co-assignees with the plaintiff of the mortgage and co-assignees are not entitled to give a complete discharge to a mortgagor on behalf of the other co-assignees. If a co-assignee is found to have realised his own share of the mortgage debt, he cannot be said to have been acting in the capacity of an agent or much less of a constructive trustee and any receipt by him cannot be considered to be a receipt on behalf of the others. In the present case the realisation of the Rs. 46,000 was not in excess of what was due to the defendants 1 to 5 for principal and interest and was paid to them expressly towards the debts due to them for which they could give a complete discharge not as agents or trustees but in the capacity of co-assignees of the mortgagee's rights and they are not liable to account to the plaintiff. On the facts there was no bar of res judicata against the defendants by reason of the decision in plaintiff's suit for sale of the mortgaged property.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore in O. S. No. 17 of 1934.

The Advocate-General (Sir A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar) and K. Venkatarama Raju for Appellants.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Respondents.

Abdur Rahman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted originally by one Muttangi Jaggiah alias Jaggarao as one for dissolution of partnership and for accounts but really for the recovery of a proportionate share claimed by him and one Sitaramayya (sixth defendant) from defendants 1 to 5 out of the money collected by them from the late P. Ramarayanan Garu, Rajah of Panagal, who had executed a mortgage deed for Rs. 1,16,650 on the 9th September, 1913, in favour of the Rajah of Badrachalam (Ex. I). This mortgage was assigned to the plaintiff, Sitaramayya (sixth defendant) and the defendants (1 to 5) by the Rajah of Badrachalam on the 6th July, 1925, under Ex. II as the latter owed a sum of Rs. 80,000 to the plaintiff and Sitaramayya on a promissory note dated the 22nd March, 1924, and a sum of Rs. 41,071-9-4 to the defendants (1 to 5) on a promissory note dated the 13th July, 1923. The consideration for the assignment as given in the deed consisted of the entire debt of Rs. 41,071-9-4 payable to the defendants and a sum of Rs. 61,525-11-11 out of the debt payable to the plaintiff and Sitaramayya. The Rajah of Panagal paid a sum of Rs. 46,000 to the defendants on various dates between April, 1926 and November, 1930, expressly towards the share of the mortgage amount due to them and it is out of this sum that a proportionate share was claimed in this suit. Sitaramayya was impleaded as a defendant but was subsequently transposed as a plaintiff.

The plaintiff had come to Court with an averment that a partnership had been entered into between him and Sitaramayya on the one hand and the defendants (1 to 5) on the other on certain terms stated in paragraph 7 of the plaint. It was pleaded by him in the alternative that even if the agreement relating to the alleged partnership be found not to have been established, the defendants (1 to 5) would be liable as they were acting or must be deemed to have been acting on his behalf as well as on that of the sixth defendant and having given a partial discharge, which as co-mortgagees they were competent to do, they must be held to have acted and realised the money not only for themselves but also for the plaintiff and the sixth defendant. It was further urged that inasmuch as the money realised by the defendants (1 to 5) from the mortgagor was ordered to be appropriated first towards interest and the balance towards the principal in a suit instituted by the plaintiff and the sixth defendant on the basis of the mortgage deed, to which the defendants (1 to 5) were also parties, it was no longer open to them to contend that the money was realised by them for their own share and the money must in accordance with the decree passed in the suit, be held to have been paid towards the mortgage as a whole.

The various positions taken up by the plaintiff were denied by the defendants who set up an agreement, on the other hand, in paragraph 2 of the written statement to the effect that they had a prior right under it to collect the money due to them. It was also contended on their behalf that they were not co-mortgagees with the plaintiff and the sixth defendant, but the assignees of the mortgagee's rights, and could not be held to have been acting on behalf of the plaintiff and the sixth defendant or to be competent to give a discharge on the latter's behalf particularly when they had not realised any money from the mortgagor in excess of what was due to them. In the end it was pleaded on behalf of these defendants that the suit was barred by limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge on a consideration of the evidence in the case found against the agreements pleaded by the parties but on an examination of the legal position he came to give a valid discharge on behalf of the plaintiffs and must therefore be taken to have collected the money not merely for their share but for that of the plaintiffs as well. Having regard to the provisions contained in S. 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, he held them to be constructive trustees and thus found them to have realised the money not only for their own benefit but also for that of the plaintiffs. The defendants were consequently ordered to render an account to the plaintiffs and to pay them their share of the money in proportion to what was due to them at the time when Ex. II was executed. The plea of res judicata was found against the plaintiffs and that of limitation against the defendants. Aggrieved by this decree the defendants have appealed.

It might be stated here that the plaintiff had instituted a suit (O. S. No. 21 of 1931) in the Court of the Subordinate

Judge of Chittoor for the sale of the mortgaged properties, against the original mortgagor, the Rajah of Panagal. These defendants (1 to 5) were impleaded in that suit as defendants. This was decreed and although no contention was raised on behalf of the parties to the suit that the amount paid to the defendants (1 to 5) should be appropriated towards the interest due on the entire mortgage debt, the Court in decreeing the claim gave credit to the amount received by the defendants (1 to 5), towards the interest which was due on the mortgage bond. The decree was not appealed against and became final. This has given rise to the contention on behalf of the respondents that the money having been ordered to be credited by the Court decreeing that claim towards the interest due on the mortgage bond, it must be held to have been decided between the parties that the money realised by the appellants was on behalf of the respondents as well and the appellants were therefore precluded by the rule of res judicata from raising any contention to the contrary in this suit under the provisions of S. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In regard to the agreements pleaded on behalf of the parties, no attempt was made before us by the learned Counsel for the respondents to canvass the finding arrived at by the lower Court against his clients. Nor do we think it likely that if an agreement was arrived at between the parties, it could have been on the terms stated in the plaint. The learned Advocate-General however urged on behalf of the appellants that although the statement made by the fifth defendant as a witness could not in view of its inconsistency with what was pleaded on behalf of the defendants, be relied upon and was rightly rejected by the trial Court, yet the agreement mentioned in the written statement was to a large extent supported by some of the letters which were written on behalf of the plaintiffs themselves. The first letter to which our attention was drawn was a registered notice (Ex. IX) sent by the first plaintiff to the defendants asking how much was collected by them jointly or separately towards that deed. This was followed by another notice sent by the plaintiffs on the 27th February, 1931, informing the fifth defendant that the plaint had been prepared and calling upon him to deposit Rs. 500 towards the costs of the suit which was to be filed by them against the mortgagor for the sale of the mortgaged property. The requisite court-fee for that suit was of the value of Rs. 3,392 and yet they had asked the fifth defendant for a sum of Rs. 500 only, which would be approximately required to recover the balance of the money due to the defendants after giving credit to what had been realised by them from the mortgagor. This notice was expressly referred to by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment in O. S. No. 21 of 1931. From the fact that an agreement was being pleaded even by the plaintiffs, although the terms alleged on their behalf were undoubtedly different and bearing the two notices referred to above in mind it would appear to be more likely than not that there was some understanding either explicit or implied to the effect that the parties would be entitled to recover their shares from the mortgagor and as long as they did not realise anything in excess of their shares, they would not be accountable to each other. The reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for the finding that no agreement was arrived at between the parties are not convincing. He was mainly persuaded to come to that decision as he found that the statement of the fifth defendant was contrary to what had been pleaded on his behalf. This criticism was perfectly justified but the other reasons which he has given are not very convincing. Having regard to all the circumstances we are rather inclined to the view that an agreement was on some such terms as have been stated above, arrived at between the parties.

If this were all, we would have had to seriously consider if the material on the record was sufficient to reverse the finding arrived at by the lower Court in this respect but in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived in regard to the other points discussed by the learned Counsel for the parties, it seems to us to be unnecessary to rest our judgment on this inference of fact. We propose to devote our attention to the main question involved in the second issue framed by the lower Court which concerns the plaintiff's rights to demand an account from the defendants for the collections made by them. Since the question of res judicata was argued with great persistence by the learned Counsel for the respondents, we would have to examine this contention in the course of this judgment. The question of limitation raised by the appellants stands however on a different footing. Its decision depends on the finding whether the defendants are liable to account to the plaintiff. If they are found to be liable, it is apparent that the suit would not be barred by time. If on the other hand, they are found to be entitled to retain the amount realised by them from the mortgagor, the suit against them would be as they had realised the amount more than three years before the institution of the suit, be barred by limitation. It would therefore be unnecessary to give any finding on this question.

Turning our attention to the crucial question regarding the liability of the defendants to account we must point out that they were not co-mortgagees with the plaintiffs but only assignees of a mortgage executed by the Rajah of Panagal in favour of the Rajah of Bhadrachalam. It is all the more necessary to keep this in view as the learned Subordinate Judge seems to have lost sight of this distinction and held that the parties to the suit were joint promisees under the mortgage deed (Ex. I) and must therefore be regarded as co-mortgagees. This is obviously not so. The definition of 'promisee' given in S. 2 of the Indian Contract Act must not be ignored. So far as the mortgage is concerned, the Rajah of Panagal was the promisor and the Rajah of Bhadrachalam the promisee. It was the Rajah of Bhadrachalam who could be said to have accepted the proposal made by the Rajah of Panagal. It may be that so far as the assignment of the mortgage is concerned, the Rajah of Bhadrachalam may be the promisor and the parties to this suit the promisees. We are not concerned here with the jural relationship which was brought into existence by the deed of assignment but by the original mortgage executed by the Rajah of Panagal. There can be no doubt that as between the Rajah of Panagal and the parties to this suit even if privity of estate is held to exist the former cannot be described to be the promisor and the latter not the promisees. The heirs of a promisee may be entitled to claim what their ancestor (the promisee) could have claimed, but by standing in his shoes they do not become, in the eye of the law, the promisees themselves. Similarly an assignee of a promise may be able to claim what his transferor could have claimed but he would not become a promisee by reason of the assignment so far as the original promisee is concerned.

We have thus not to decide what the position would have been if a co-mortgagee would have accepted payment from his mortgagor either in full or in partial satisfaction of the mortgage but what it is if a co-assignee realises a portion of the money due from the mortgagor when that portion does not exceed the recipient's share of the consideration for which the assignment was made in his favour. There is divergence of opinion between this and several other High Courts on the point whether a mortgage debt would be discharged by paying it to one of two or more mortgagees. It has been held by this Court that a payment to one would discharge the mortgage-debt. (*Barber Maron v. Ramanna Goundan*¹ and *Annapurnamma v. Akkayya*².) The other High Courts have, on the other hand, taken the opposite view in *Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Chakia*³, *Sitaram v. Shridhar*⁴, *Jauhari Singh v. Ganga Sahai*⁵, *Ray Satindra Nath Choudhury v. Ray Jatindra Nath Choudhury*⁶, *Sukh Lal v. Kanjman*⁷, Syed Abbas Ali v. Misri Lal and *Mathra Das v. Nizam Din*⁸. But no case has been brought to our notice, even of this Court, where a co-assignee or a co-heir may have been held entitled on behalf of the other co-mortgagees or co-heirs to give a complete discharge of a mortgage debt which has been assigned to or which devolved on the other co-assignees or co-heirs. The principle on which this Court has recognised the power of a co-mortgagee for giving a valid discharge of the whole mortgage debt was largely based on a consideration of S. 38 of the Indian Contract Act, but a reference to this section would show that it is confined to the promisees as defined in the Act and not to his heirs or assignees. Indeed while expressing their opinion in the Full Bench case, both the learned Judges whose view prevailed in that case observed that the rule which they were applying to a co-mortgagee could not be extended to co-heirs. The same distinction was made in *Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Saheb*⁹ by no less than an eminent Judge of this Court than Sir V. Bhashyam Aiyangar.

In view of these authorities an attempt was made by Mr. Rajah Aiyar to distinguish these cases on the ground that they have gone only to the length of holding that the position of a co-heir or a legal representative is not the same as that of a co-mortgagee where the latter could, and the former could not, give a valid discharge to a mortgagor. But he says that the same principle which has been held to apply to co-heirs or legal representatives cannot be made to apply to co-assignees on the ground that while the interest of a propositus devolves on his heirs by operation of law and independently of the deceased's desire, an assignor's interest is conveyed to an assignee by a volition of the former and can be favourably compared with the case of a co-mortgagee where both decide to take a mortgage jointly. The distinction made between a co-heir and a co-assignee is in our opinion of no avail as from what we have already said in regard to the definition of a promisee used in the Indian Contract Act, it would be clear that under that definition, both of them would stand in the same position. If the term 'promisee' cannot be applied to a co-heir or a legal representative it can neither be held to apply to a co-assignee. The situation then seems to be that on a devolution of a mortgagee's interest either on his legal representatives or on his assignees, the legal representatives or co-assignees would be, at least amongst themselves, entitled to recover their own shares and be able to give an acquittance to that extent only and not for the shares of other legal representatives or co-assignees. It would thus follow that if a co-assignee is found to have realised his own share of the mortgage debt, he cannot be said to have been acting in the capacity of an agent or much less of a constructive trustee and any receipt by him cannot be considered to be a receipt on behalf of the others. (Ankalamma v. Chenchayyal.) It may be that a devolution of interest upon a co-heir or a co-mortgagee, may effect a severance of the mortgagee's interest between them (Mahamed Ishaq v. Sheikh Akramul Huq) but if the theory of representation is correct, so far as the heirs are concerned, it would neither be illogical nor unsatisfactory to extend the same although to a limited extent, to the assignees of a mortgage debt as well. The case is Sunitibala Debi v. Dhara Sundari Debi Choudhuranis, cited by the learned Counsel for the respondent does not at all help him. We are not concerned here with the form in which the suit has to be filed. Nor are we concerned in this case with the rights of co-mortgagees inter se or with the release or redemption of any part of the security by one of the mortgagees. It was on these points that this case is an authority and not on those which are before us for decision in this appeal. The next case relied upon by him was that of Lakshmi Narasimha v. Lakshammal. This is also not of much assistance as the co-mortgagee had in that case admittedly received more than his share of the debt and had exceeding his rights given a release in respect of the unrealised portion. He was therefore held and rightly, if we may say so with respect, to be incompetent to give a release to the mortgagor on behalf of his co-mortgagee or to receive any money in excess of his share, which he was ordered to refund. The third case cited by Mr. Rajah Aiyar was that of Ramachandra Aiyar v. Sivarama Aiyar, where it was held by Pandrang Row, J., that in the absence of a covenant to pay the amount due to any particular co-mortgagee a suit by one co-mortgagee for his share of the mortgage money was not maintainable and that the recital in the mortgage deed of the debts due to each co-mortgagee did not amount to an agreement by the mortgagors to pay the mortgagees separately. In view of the distinction that we have already tried to emphasise between the mortgagees and the assignees of a mortgagee this case is of no value to us here.

Reference was made in the end to English cases such as Tyson v. Faircloughs, where it had been held that a Court would regard a tenant-in-common who had received the rent as in the nature of a bailiff or an agent for his co-tenants-in-common respecting their shares of the rent. This proposition is in accordance with the cases decided by this Court where a co-mortgagee would be able to give, by receiving the debt due under a mortgage, an acquittance to the mortgagor. This is only because he is held to be a person to whom an offer of performance can be validly made by a promisor under S. 38 of the Indian Contract Act, and by accepting the offer not only on his own behalf but on that of his co-promisees, he would be deemed to have been acting as their agent to the extent of their shares in the mortgage and would therefore be liable to account to them. But the same principle cannot be applied to the assignees of a mortgagee's rights, who cannot be held to be joint promisees in the sense in which that expression has been used in the Indian Contract Act.

In view of what has been said it is unnecessary to consider the liability of a tenant-in-common when he has received income or rent in respect of the property of which he was a co-tenant with others but there is an authority of this Court where it had been held that a tenant-in-common would not be bound to share his receipts with another co-tenant if they did not exceed the recipient's proper share. In the present case, the realisation of the sum of Rs. 46,000 by the defendants was not in excess of what was due to them on account of principal and interest and was paid to them expressly by the mortgagor towards the debt due to them and for which they could give a complete discharge not as agents or trustees on behalf of the plaintiffs but in the capacity of co-assignees of the mortgagee's rights. They must consequently be held not to be liable to account for the sum realised by them.

The next question to decide is whether the defendants are barred by the principle of res judicata from contending that the sum of Rs. 46,000 was realised by them towards their share alone. It has been already observed that this contention was raised on behalf of the respondents on account of the decision in O. S. No. 21 of 1931 where the Subordinate Judge in decreeing the claim gave credit to the amount realised by the defendants towards the interest due on the mortgage bond although no such plea was raised by any party to that suit. (Vide plaint Ex. VIII and the written statement of the defendants Ex. III.) The suit was filed by the plaintiffs for the whole of the amount due under the mortgage deed Ex. I, and the mortgagor had pleaded that a sum of Rs. 46,000 had been paid to the eleventh defendant, that is (the fifth defendant in the present case) for which he had naturally asked for a credit. It was also pleaded on his behalf that the rate of interest stipulated in the deed was of a penal character. The copy of judgment has been exhibited and is marked as Ex. IV. A perusal of this judgment would show that not only was no issue framed in that suit on the question whether the payment received by the defendants should be credited towards the interest on the mortgage debt, but what is more, the only issue (Issue 9) which was framed with the object of arriving at a finding in regard to the disputes between plaintiffs and the present defendants was left undecided. In fact the Subordinate Judge has after stating the issue framed in the case started with the words:

"The only two questions that were agitated at the trial were (1) as regards interest claimed and (2) costs to be decreed and against which set of defendants."

Holding that the interest claimed was not in the nature of a penalty and being of the opinion that the costs should be paid by the mortgagor and the present defendants in equal shares, he gave a finding in regard to Issues 3 and 4, which related to the fact and the validity of payment pleaded by the mortgagor in the following words:—

"As regards Issues 3 and 4 it has to be found that payments pleaded are true and binding on plaintiffs in the sense they have to be given credit to."

The ninth issue reads as follows:

"Whether the agreement set out in paragraph 4 of the written statement of the defendants 7 to 11 is true and plaintiffs are bound to pay any amount as per schedule of expenses attached to the written statement of defendants 7 to 11 to them?"

This was not decided by the Subordinate Judge who observed:

"As regards Issue 9, I have ruled that a consideration of this matter of dispute as between plaintiffs on the one hand and defendants 7 to 11 on the other, is not germane to this suit which is one for sale and the question may be left open. I therefore refrain from giving any finding on Issue 9."

This was the only issue which might have settled the disputes raised by the present defendants and this the Court refused to adjudicate upon. How could it be seriously urged then that the matter was decided between the parties? The learned Counsel for the respondent however urged that it was incumbent on the defendants to plead in that suit that the payment was realised by them for their own share. In other words he tried to bring his contention within Explanation IV of S. 11, Civil Procedure Code. But a reference to paragraphs 4 and 5 of the written statement filed by the defendants would show that the point that they were entitled to recover the money due to them before the plaintiffs could do so, was raised by them specifically. They had also pleaded in that suit that the mortgagor had paid a sum of Rs. 46,000 expressly towards their share and prayed for a direction in the decree that out of the balance of the money found due from the mortgagor they should be paid in the first instance. We fail to see what other plea could have been raised by the defendants. It was this plea which formed the subject-matter of the ninth issue and was left undecided. The Explanation IV imports a fiction into S. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Having provided that a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in a former suit it introduced a fiction that it shall not only be deemed to have been raised, but also to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit. This would not have been however enough for the purposes of S. 11, Civil Procedure Code, until the matter was presumed to have been decided. It therefore imported a further fiction that it should also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided. In view of an express order by the Court that the matter would be left open, it is impossible to permit any such fiction to be introduced in this case. The contention is devoid of any force and must be repelled.

For the above reasons we allow this appeal and order the suit to be dismissed. The appellants will be entitled to their costs both in this and in the lower Court.

A puisne usufructuary mortgagee, who is made a party to a suit by the first mortgagee which is decreed, is not a debtor within the meaning of S. 3 (iii) of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938). The Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was a puisne usufructuary mortgagee. In a suit by the first mortgagee he was impleaded and the suit was decreed. Petitioner, though in terms directed to redeem, that is, to discharge the first mortgage, was in reality merely granted a privilege—the privilege of freeing his own security and preserving his possession. In no sense of the word is he a debtor. The decree is not against him for a debt payable by him, but in his favour allowed him a right in equity to redeem the first mortgage. To use the language of S. 3 (iii) of the Debt Relief Act, petitioner is under no liability under the decree. His is not a debt.

The learned District Munsif of Tirupathi has in my judgment rightly dismissed his petition under S. 20 of the Debt Relief Act. I dismiss the revision petition with costs.

A suit for a mere declaration that the plaintiff is the proper manager of a school and not the defendant, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from functioning as the manager of the school, and asking only for possession of the office without asking for recovery of possession of the school and its endowments does not fall under S. 7, cl. Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 224 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Manamadura dated 23rd December, 1937 and made in O. S. No. 97 of 1937.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Petitioner.

V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar and V. V. Ramadurai for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Two questions arise for discussion in this Revision Petition. One is as to proper court-fee payable on the plaint and the second is whether the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction is above Rs. 3,000 in which case the suit cannot be entertained by the District Munsif's Court.

These two questions form the subject-matter of issues 8 and 9.

Issue 8 raises the question whether the suit is properly valued and whether proper court-fee is paid.

Issue 9 raises the question whether that Court has jurisdiction to try the suit.

The District Munsif of Manamadura before whom the suit was filed, tried these two issues as preliminary issues and held that the suit was properly valued, that proper court-fee was not paid and that he had jurisdiction to try the suit.

The dispute between the parties is with regard to an Educational Institution known as Illupaiyur Nadar Kshatriya Vidya Sala situate in the village of Illupaiyur in Pallimadam Taluk of the Ramnad District.

The plaint alleges that the plaintiff and defendants 1 to 13 were elected on 25th January, 1936, as members of the School Committee, that at a meeting of the School Committee the first defendant was chosen as the manager of the institution, that the first defendant assumed management of the institution on 19th February, 1936, and that some time later he began to act in defiance of the Committee and did not discharge his duties properly. The plaint states that in order to consider the conduct of the first defendant, a meeting of the School Committee was held on 25th April, 1937, and that on the same day there was also a meeting of the General Body of all the persons in whom

Karuppanna
Nadar,
v.
Karuppa

the ownership of the institution is said to vest and that due notices of the meeting of the Committee and of the General Body were given to the first defendant. By those notices the first defendant was informed that his conduct would be considered and the question whether he should be in further management of the institution would be decided. The plaint states that the first defendant did not attend the meeting of either body and that both the Committee and the General Body considered the charges against the first defendant and passed a resolution removing him from the office of the Committee member and manager and appointed the plaintiff in his place. The plaint states that after the resolutions of the Committee and of the General Body were duly communicated to the first defendant, the first defendant refused to hand over the management of the institution and was doing various acts likely to seriously endanger the institution.

In paragraph 18, the plaintiff asks that the first defendant should be declared to have been validly removed from the office of the membership of the Committee and of the managership of the institution, that the plaintiff may be declared to have been duly appointed as a member of the Committee and as the manager thereof and that as such he alone is entitled to be in management of the school. He asks for a perpetual injunction restraining the first defendant from functioning as the manager of the plaint institution. The plaint further asks that if need be the plaintiff should be put in possession of the office of the managership through process of Court.

As regards the prayers for declaration of plaintiff's right and consequential injunction, the suit was valued at Rs. 100 under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act and a court-fee of Rs. 11-3-0 was paid.

The alternative relief of possession of the office of managership is stated in paragraph 17 to be incapable of valuation and the plaintiff valued that relief at Rs. 20 and paid a court-fee of Rs. 2-3-0 thereon.

The lower Court accepted the contentions of the plaintiff that the suit was properly valued for the purpose of jurisdiction. The first defendant now comes up in revision and urges that the plaintiff is not entitled to value the relief for possession of the office of managership at Rs. 20 and to pay Rs. 2-3-0 court-fee thereon. First defendant urges that if this relief is really incapable of valuation, the plaintiff cannot value it at Rs. 20 and states that if such a relief is incapable of valuation the fixed court-fee provided under Art. 17-B of the II Schedule should be paid and that for the purpose of jurisdiction the suit should be properly valued having regard to the principles governing such cases. The questions that arise for consideration before me are these:

Karuppatna
v.
Karuppa
Nadar.

In a case where the plaintiff does not ask for recovery of possession of the school building and its endowments but asks merely for possession of the office of the managership, is it a case where a relief is really incapable of valuation and if so, how should the suit be valued for the purpose of jurisdiction.

It is contended by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that a suit for recovery of the office of the managership is in effect and in substance a suit for recovery of possession of the school building and its properties and endowments movable and immovable—and that the Court should treat the suit on the footing that all these reliefs are asked for and require the plaintiff to value the same accordingly and pay the requisite court-fee. With this contention I am unable to agree. The office of the managership of an institution such as the present may no doubt carry with it certain other rights flowing from it, namely, a right to be put in possession of the school building, the right to collect the outstandings due to the institution (it is said there are outstandings of the face value of Rs. 12,000) and also to recover the movable and immovable properties belonging to the institution. The petitioner before me who is the first defendant in Court below, does not claim either the institution or the properties of the institution, as his private property. He, like the plaintiff claims to be entitled to manage the institution and nothing more. In a case where the only question that is involved is the right to manage the institution it is not correct to treat the suit as though it is a suit to recover the school building and its properties, movable and immovable. The question whether any particular property is the property of the institution, is not involved in this suit and it is still open to question in a later proceeding. For aught we know, once the plaintiff's title is established in this suit all the persons who owe money to the institution may recognise the title of the plaintiff and willingly pay him. Similarly the persons who are in actual possession of the

v.
Karuppa
Nadar.

properties may put the plaintiff in possession of the same. It may even be that if the first defendant fails in his contention that he is the manager of the institution good sense will prevail and that he would give up possession of the properties of which he is in possession. Further the school building is not in the possession of the first defendant. It is occupied by the pupils of the institution, by the teachers and the other staff and it is an extraordinary contention to advance that the first defendant is in possession of the school building and to require the plaintiff to value the suit on the footing that the first defendant is in physical possession of the building and that plaintiff should ask for recovery of its possession and value the suit under S. 7 (5) or other appropriate section of the Act. The petitioner's counsel relied very strongly on the decision of Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair in Syed Mahamad Gouse, In re¹. There the plaintiff asked in express terms recovery of possession of the properties of the institution. In a suit where the plaintiff is not content with suing for the recovery of the office of trusteeship but chooses to sue for recovery of the properties as well, there is no escape from valuing the relief for possession in accordance with the Act and from paying the appropriate court-fee. This is the real ground of the decision of the learned Judge as will be seen from the order which he passed on a review application which was filed requesting him to review his original judgment. Therein, the learned Judge points out that in the case before him the plaintiff rightly or wrongly asked for actual possession and therefore the plaintiff should value the suit accordingly and pay the requisite court-fee. As the learned Judge says at page 577:

"It is not necessary for me to decide whether even in this case the plaintiff is bound to ask for possession. But as possession has been asked for and as the decree also directs that the Durga should be taken possession of, I think the court-fee should be paid under S. 7, cl. 5 of the Court-Fees Act."

Similar observations are to be found on page 576 and also in the earlier portions of the judgment. There are, no doubt, some observations in that case which might seem to support the contention of Mr. Raja Aiyar that in all such cases, the plaintiff should in this suit itself ask for possession of the building and of the other properties, value the suit as for possession and pay ad valorem court-fee on the value as determined by S. 7, cl. 5. As the learned Judge ultimately based his judgment on the facts present in that case, namely, that the plaintiff did in fact ask for possession, the observations relied upon by Mr. Raja Aiyar are obiter. As pointed in a very early decision of this Court in *Govindan Nambiar v. Krishnan Nambiar*¹, a suit such as the present, does not come under S. 7, cl. 5 but really under Art. 17, cl. 6 of the II Schedule of the Court-Fees Act. In that case the suit was to depose the karnavan from management and to appoint in his place the plaintiff as the karnavan of the tarwad. The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Innes held that the suit could not be treated as one for recovery of the family properties, movable and immovable in which case S. 7 would apply and they pointed out that to a suit of that kind, Art. 17, cl. 6 of the II Schedule is the article applicable. They say:

Karuppanna
v.
Karuppa
Nadar.

"The claim for removal of the karnavan is incapable of valuation. S. 17, cl. 6 of the II Schedule is therefore the section under which such suits are to be valued for the purposes of the Court-Fees Act. It would be clearly erroneous to value such a claim as if it were a claim for the recovery of possession of land, for the possession of the property is throughout in the tarwad and is not affected by a change in the person who fills the office of the Manager."

I therefore hold that the suit should be treated as one coming under Art. 17-B of the II Schedule and that the proper court-fee payable would be Rs. 15 if the suit is filed in the District Munsif's Court or Rs. 100 if in a District Court or a Sub-Court.

This brings me to the next question as to how the suit is to be valued for the purpose of jurisdiction. As the Court below has pointed out the properties owned by the institution consists among other things of the school building, and out-standings of the face value of about Rs. 12,000. This question has been the subject of an elaborate discussion in the decision reported in *Vasireddi Veeramma v. Butchayya*² by Mr. Justice Wallace and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair. As pointed out in pages 651 and 652 by the learned Judges:

"The general principles deducible for valuation for purposes of jurisdiction where no special method of valuation has been provided by statute, then, would seem to be (1) that where the subject-matter of the suit is wholly

1. (1881) I.L.R. 4 Mad. 146.

2. (1926) 52 M.L.J. 381: I.L.R. 50 Mad. 646.

Karuppanna

v.
Karuppa

unrelated to anything which can be readily stated in definite money terms, then the plaintiff, having to put some money value for the purpose of jurisdiction, must put a more or less arbitrary value, and there being no factors in the case from which the Court can say his valuation is wrong or dishonest, the Court will accept that valuation"

"and (2) that where the subject-matter is so related to things which have a real money value that the relief asked for will affect these, then the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction is to be taken as the market value of the property affected".

In this latter case the value must be the market value of the whole of the property affected.

Examples of the former class where the subject-matter of the suit is not related to anything which can readily be stated in money value, are a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is a member of a charity committee. Of the second class we have suits to establish a right to a fishery or a right to a royalty, to set aside an award or to establish or set aside an adoption. In this latter class of cases though the suit is to establish an adoption or a right to a royalty or a right to a fishery, the relief asked for is so related to things which have a real money value that the relief will and must affect those things.

The question in this case is, under which class does the present case fall? In para. 16 of his judgment the District Munsiff held that the case comes under the first category. I think he is wrong. It cannot be said that the relief of possession of the office of the managership is not related to things which have a definite money value and that the reliefs do not affect those things. The right to the managership certainly affects the right to be in possession of and to manage the institution and its properties. Hence the value for purpose of jurisdiction is the value of the properties affected.

Such properties are certainly worth more than Rs. 3,000. Even apart from the school building there are outstandings of the value of Rs. 12,000.

The suit cannot therefore be tried by the District Munsiff's Court.

The order of the lower Court is set aside and the plaint is directed to be returned to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court. I make no order as to costs in the circumstances of this case.

Where a mortgage was over two items of properties treated as separate items and one of them was a vacant site earmarked for house building purpose but not treated as part of the other item upon which a house stood, the mortgage cannot be said to be of house property only within the meaning of S. 4 (d) of the Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938). A decree on foot of such a mortgage is therefore liable to be scaled down under the Act, Granting that the site is suitable for building purposes and that there is an intention to build houses upon it, it would not be considered house property until at least building operations are started.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The question in this petition is whether defendants are entitled to the benefits of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. It has been found by the learned District Munsiff from whom a report was obtained, that the defendants have not been assessed to property tax on an aggregate annual rental value of Rs. 600 and that therefore Proviso (c) to S. 3 of the Act does not apply to them.

v.
Ambalam
Raman

The remaining question is whether the mortgage in respect of which the decree was passed comes within S. 4 (d) of the Act, that is to say, whether it is a debt contracted on the security of house property alone in a Municipality. The relevant clause of the mortgage deed recites certain boundaries within which the one-fourth share of two items is conveyed. The first item is a vacant site (Kalimanai Nilam) in the south-western side, its measurements being recited, and the second item is another site with a shop building thereon in the north-western side of the area within the boundaries. The question is whether the first item, that is, the vacant site in the south-western side of this area, can be termed "house property". If it can, then the mortgage is a debt contracted on the security of house property alone within a Municipality. If it cannot, then the inclusion of this piece of unoccupied land within the mortgage takes the debt out of the exception recited in S. 4 (d) and the debt as a whole comes within the mischief of the Act. It is well established that the term "house" includes the land appurtenant to the house and necessary for its enjoyment. The case-law on the subject is summarised in a Calcutta ruling, Ghosal v. Mitra. It is contended that the term "house property" is a wider term than the term 'house' and that it will include not only land appurtenant to a house which is in existence, but also land earmarked for house-building purposes. I doubt very much whether this contention is in accordance with ordinary English usage. When we speak of house property, we certainly include buildings of all kinds and the sites thereof. We should probably also include the gardens, compounds and yards attached thereto. But I doubt whether the ordinary connotation of the term 'house property' in every-day language would include land earmarked for building purposes, but unoccupied by any buildings. After all, it is a common experience to see agricultural land advertised for building or even sold for building, but used for agriculture until it is actually converted to the purpose for which it is destined. To my mind, one would not in ordinary English speak of agricultural land as house property merely because the owner thereof is trying to sell it or has sold it to a speculative builder. Granted that the land is suitable for building houses and that there is an intention to build houses upon it, I do not think that it would be considered to be 'house property' until building operations had, at any rate, started. The alternative line of argument is that this site, item 1, is included in a larger plot with certain boundaries and is adjacent to a site upon which there was actually a building at the time when the deed was executed. It is contended that the building and its site and the vacant site adjacent to it must be deemed to be a single unit and that the whole will fall within the term 'house property.' Now, if in fact these two sites were a single unit, there would, I think, be some substance in this argument. But all the materials available go to show that this is not the fact and that the house and its site on the north-western side were treated as a separate unit, separately recited in the mortgage deed, separately assessed in the union registers and separately numbered for the purpose of assessment. There is nothing to show that the vacant site in the south-western corner was treated as part of the property upon which the house stands. The fact seems to be that the two plots had been separately demarcated; in one of them at the time when this mortgage was executed a house had been built, the other was destined for building purposes, but was still vacant. In fact a house, I am told, has been constructed since the mortgage came into force. This fact alone is an indication that the vacant site was not at the time of the mortgage a part of the compound of the existing house. If, as seems to be the case, it was a separate unit, a piece of land with no building upon it, though destined for building purposes, it would not, in my opinion, be properly described as house property and the inclusion of this site is therefore sufficient to prevent this mortgage from being immune from the operations of the Agriculturists Relief Act.

I find therefore that the petitioners (judgment-debtors) are entitled to have the decree scaled down in accordance with S. 8 of the Act, the mortgage being one of 1924.

The decree will therefore be amended accordingly. The petitioners will be entitled to their costs in this petition.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Conversion into absolute estate—Permissibility—Surrender—Compromise whether amounts to—Essentials of valid compromise—Transaction ignoring legal rights of reversioner—Validity as family arrangement—Invalid compromise by father—Son claiming as reversioner whether bound—Res judicata between co-defendants.

The Hindu Law does not permit a widow or any other limited owner to convert her limited estate into an absolute estate. A surrender by the widow genuinely intended and validly effected in favour of the next reversioner is no doubt recognised as valid in spite of the reservation of a reasonable portion of the estate for her maintenance. The particular mode by which such a surrender is to be effected may differ, but it must in substance amount to an effacement of her estate. A compromise is no doubt one of the modes recognised, if in other respects it satisfies the conditions of a valid surrender.

A compromise made bona fide for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the limited owner will bind the reversioner quite as much as a decree on contest. Bona fides in this connection has reference to the state of mind of the parties not in relation to their personal claim in the dispute but in relation to the estate, that is, to the rights of the prospective reversioner to whom it is to descend unimpeded and undiminished except to the extent to which the intermediate holder is permitted to deal with it by law. Consequently a transaction which ignores the rights of the reversioner and aims at securing a personal benefit to the limited owner is not allowed to prejudice the rights of the former. A compromise may in some cases also amount to a family arrangement, and from that point of view, justified if it is prudent and reasonable and bona fide effected to secure family peace. But an arrangement made in violation of the law, and in conscious disregard of the right of the reversioner will not be upheld even though it is made to assume the cloak of a family arrangement. In a suit in which the presumptive reversioner or for the matter of that even a stranger is ranged on one side and a widow or widows claiming as heir or heirs of the husband on the other, it is not permissible for either or both of the parties to enter into an arrangement calculated to enlarge the limited estate of the widow into one of an absolute character.

One reversioner does not trace his title through another, and even if they are related to each other as son and father, the son will not be bound by an invalid compromise to which he was not himself a party and from which he did not directly derive any benefit.

Neither the fact that a defendant did not contest but supported the plaintiff's claim, nor the fact that he was merely joined as pro forma defendant nor again the fact that the suit finally ended in a dismissal is a good reason for negating a plea of res judicata between co-defendants if they occupied a position of conflict.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore in O. S. No. 1 of 1932.

R. Ramamurti Aiyar for Appellants.

A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, R. Sundaralingam and S. Seshadri for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—This is an appeal by a reversioner whose suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore. He sued to recover possession of certain lands in Panayur village, Mannargudi Taluk, which admittedly formed part of the estate of one Appa Pillai who died in January, 1879, leaving considerable properties movable and immovable. At his death, Appa Pillai left two widows Thayyamuthu and Kamalathachi, a daughter Neelambal by his pre-deceased first wife, and another daughter Palanivelu by Thayyamuthu, the second of his three wives. Thayyamuthu and Kamalathachi the two widows who survived Appa Pillai died in 1887 and 1907 respectively. Palanivelu died in 1908 and Neelambal the last of the intermediate limited owners died on 28th May, 1923. Neither of them has left any issue and the estate would devolve on the reversioners unless it had been validly disposed of in the meanwhile.

The nearest reversioners according to the finding of the Subordinate Judge were Appasami Pillai the plaintiff-appellant and his brother Thiagaraja. They were the sons of Swami Pillai related to the deceased Appa Pillai as his nephews through their father Thiagaraja, a natural brother of Appa Pillai but adopted to his separated uncle Kathaperumal. The members of the family and their relationship to each other are accurately shown in the Genealogical table set out in paragraph 6 of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The particulars contained in that table have not been disputed before us.

By a deed of release evidenced by the original of Ex. H dated 14th June, 1923, Thiagaraja released his interest in the reversion to the plaintiff who thus became entitled to claim the whole of the estate for himself exclusively.

The lands in suit form only a fraction of the original estate. There were a number of litigations relating to it, some during Appa Pillai's life and some after. The earliest was a suit O. S. No. 2 of 1871 in the Civil Court of Tranquebar, instituted by Durayappa, a natural brother of the plaintiff's father Swami Pillai, but adopted to his uncle Appasami. In that suit Durayappa claimed partition of the family estates, on the footing that he was an undivided member of a joint family along with his uncle Thiagaraja, his natural brother Swami Pillai, a cousin Panchanada the son of his uncle Muthusami, and his juniormost uncle Appa Pillai, who were all joined as defendants 1 to 4 in the order of enumeration. Though in form the suit was against all the four defendants it was in fact directed against Appa Pillai and for obtaining a share in his separate and self-acquired properties. Defendants 1 to 3 seem to have really colluded with Durayappa whose success would enure to their benefit also. The acting Civil Judge who tried the case found that Durayappa's natural father Thiagaraja had been adopted away to Kathaperumal his divided uncle and ceased thenceforth to belong to the branch of Appa Pillai's father Ramu Thevar. This finding cannot be regarded as irrelevant or unnecessary for the decision of the suit. For it will be seen that though the suit was ultimately dismissed on the ground of limitation, that conclusion was arrived at on a consideration of the question whether the lands in Appa Pillai's exclusive possession belonged solely to him and was enjoyed absolutely by him without reference to the other members of the family. The fact that by his adoption Thiagaraja ceased to belong to the family of his birth was undoubtedly a circumstance and a material one for negating the joint status set up by Durayappa. The learned Civil Judge expressed his conclusion in the following terms:

"I decide generally that the plaintiff's case is false and the fourth defendant (Appa Pillai's) case substantially true and particularly that the plaintiff and defendants have not dwelt together in unity but on the contrary the first and second and fourth defendants have dwelt apart and separate from the plaintiff and from other members of the family for a very long space of time largely exceeding twelve years before suit brought."

That conclusion was among others based on two documents produced and marked Exs. I and II in that case, which made it abundantly clear that Thiagaraja had been adopted away from the family to a divided uncle, a fact which was not seriously disputed in that case and has not been disputed in the present appeal. An appeal, Regular Appeal No. 31 of 1873 was preferred to this Court against the decision of the Civil Judge, and was disposed of by Innes and Kindersley, JJ., on 17th June, 1873. The opening words of the judgment fully express the view they took. They said:

"That this is in part at least a dishonest and collusive suit is apparent from the admission which plaintiff was compelled to make in the course of it and which he must have been well aware of all along that first defendant (Thiagaraja), his natural father, having many years ago, been adopted into the family of Kathaperumal, a divided branch, had no title whatever to be included as a coparcener entitled to take advantage of the partition as against the fourth defendant (Appa Pillai) except on the ground of reunion with him which is not asserted. Had the suit succeeded upon its original footing plaintiff's natural father and his issue the plaintiff and the second defendant would have fallen into half of the property which plaintiff alleges to be family estate."

The learned Judges then proceeded to consider the merits, and concurred with the finding of fact and of law by the trial Judge, and dismissed the appeal so far as Appa Pillai was concerned. But as regards the lands in the possession of the other defendants, they directed a division on the ground of reunion which appeared to them to have been established as between themselves. It is noteworthy that in this division Appa Pillai neither shared nor claimed to share.

Swami Pillai, the father of the present appellant, was the second defendant in O.S. No. 2 of 1871 and must have known that by reason of his father Thiagaraja Pillai's adoption to Kathaperumal he ceased to possess any interest in the property belonging to Ramu Thevar's branch, and could not therefore advance any claim to the properties of Appa Pillai on the footing of a joint status. He must have also known that Appa Pillai's properties were his own separate properties so found either on the footing of self-acquisition or by limitation. These two cardinal facts were clearly established by the above litigation and would in our opinion be res judicata if the same questions should be re-agitated between the parties. The reasons adduced by the Subordinate Judge for the contrary view do not convince us as they proceed on an incorrect appreciation of the facts and an erroneous view of the law.

We have already adverted to the circumstances that the interests of Durayappa and those of Thiagaraja and Swami in the suit of 1871 were identical, in that the success of the former would enure to the benefit of the latter as well, and further that all the defendants except Appa Pillai were colluding with the plaintiff in the attempt to establish the joint and therefore the divisible character of Appa Pillai's properties. That Swami Pillai and Appa Pillai were ranged as co-defendants is a matter of no consequence in view of the obvious conflict of interest between the two. To say that 'they were not allowed to be heard' or that 'they were refused to be heard' is to say something which is not borne out by the facts as disclosed in the judgment of the Civil Judge. From it it appears that they were placed ex parte on account of their non-appearance at the framing of the issues, an order which they themselves did not choose to question, being apparently content to leave the plaintiff to fight the common battle. They never appeared later nor did they take any step to approach the Court with a view to their being heard. Even otherwise a decision by a competent Court cannot cease to be binding on the parties in a later suit for this or any similar mere irregularity. We are again unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge's view that the only question decided was a preliminary question of limitation. According to our reading of the original as well as the appellate judgment, the findings as to the adoption of Thiagaraja and the separate enjoyment and hence the exclusive title of Appa Pillai formed the true basis on which the binding of limitation was rested, and were in this sense necessary for the decision of the suit. Nor can we find any support for the view that the defendant, who sailed with the plaintiff, could not have appealed against the decision in a suit of this kind. We are again unable to discover why the decisions of the Privy Council in *Maung Sein Done v. Ma Pan Nyun*¹ following an earlier decision of the same Tribunal in *Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath*² have not been acted upon by the Subordinate Judge. From them it is clear that neither the fact that a defendant did not contest but supported the plaintiff's claim, nor the fact that he was merely joined as a pro forma defendant nor again the fact that the suit finally ended in a dismissal is a good reason for negating a plea of res judicata between co-defendants if they occupied as they in fact occupied a position of conflict. We are therefore of opinion that the decision in the suit bound Swami Pillai, and precluded him from re-agitating questions settled by it. It is unnecessary, however, to stress the point further for the purpose of the present appeal. For even if that decision does not constitute res judicata the materials referred to in it are sufficient to incline us to the identical conclusions on an independent consideration. The result then, of this discussion is that it is impossible for Swami Pillai to have believed that he was still a member of a joint family with Appa Pillai, or that on the latter's death his properties could survive to him as the surviving member of that family. Yet this was the position he boldly took up in the suit O. S. No. 1 of 1880 filed by him in the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam to which we shall immediately refer.

Aiyangar, J.

When Appa Pillai died in 1879, there was at the time pending in the Sub-Court, Negapatam, O. S. No. 27 of 1878, a suit instituted by him against his nephew Panchanadam, and certain others for the recovery of about 31 velis of land in the village of Thiruvanchuli on the ground that Panchanadam had unlawfully trespassed on the property. Panchanadam had filed a written statement setting up a gift of the land in his favour by Appa Pillai himself. After the latter's death his senior widow Thayyamuthu alone was brought on the record in his place. The suit was finally settled by a compromise Ex. E, dated 1st March, 1880, made a rule of Court by the judgment Ex. E, on 2nd March, 1880. By this compromise Thayyamuthu accepted the truth of the defendant's case subject only to his paying a sum of Rs. 700 for her costs of the suit. About the end of 1879, while this suit was yet pending, Swami Pillai, the father of the present plaintiff, instituted O. S. No. 1 of 1880 on the file of the Sub-Court, Kumbakonam, laying claim to the entire estate of Appa Pillai, on the allegation that while he, his father Thiagaraja and Appa Pillai were living together as undivided members of a joint family, Appa Pillai had died, and that consequently all the properties in the possession of Appa Pillai had survived to him as a surviving member of the family. According to plaint his two widows Thayyamuthu and Kamalathachi who had in the meanwhile obtained a succession certificate for the collection of the outstandings left by Appa Pillai, had no right whatever to the estate and were merely entitled to maintenance. Neither Panchanadam nor Durayappa was recognised as having any right to the property the former on the ground that he had received for his share the lands, which formed subject-matter of his claim O. S. No. 27 of 1878, and the latter on the ground that his suit O. S. No. 2 of 1871 had been dismissed, and he thereby lost all right to a share. About himself he added the somewhat singular remark that the decree did not stand in his way:

"As he was on the same side as a defendant with Appa Pillai, and as he was unable to prefer an appeal for himself inasmuch as he also contested that the family was undivided."

We have not the faintest doubt that this suit was but a knowingly dishonest and disingenuous attempt on the part of Swami Pillai to secure Appa Pillai's estate from his two helpless and probably ignorant widows. The importance and the serious nature of the obstacles in the way of his success in such a bare-faced attempt must have been fully present to the mind of Swami Pillai himself and very likely also of his legal advisers who must have had access to the records of the suit of 1871. It is scarcely possible that they could have thought that there was the remotest chance of getting away with a claim so unsubstantial. What subsequently happened is certainly as mysterious as it is surprising. On 16th March, 1880, each of the two widows filed a separate written statement urging what appears to us a cogent defence, but it is remarkable that within three days, namely, on 19th March, 1880, a razinama, Ex. G, was filed and on 23rd March, 1880, made a decree of Court in Ex. VII. The very brief interval between the written statements and the razinama raises a natural doubt as to whether the defence was meant seriously or whether it was put in merely to invest the compromise with a colour of genuineness. If up till three days prior the widows were bent on fighting the suit, it is scarcely likely that a suit of these dimensions involving rights of substantial value could have been so quickly settled. With our knowledge of prevalent conditions, we are inclined to think that there is force in the appellant's argument that the so-called defence was nothing but a pretension devised by Swami Pillai with the willing concurrence of the widows, who were perhaps for their own reasons agreeable to lend themselves to the scheme. We shall presently examine this compromise more closely, but we may at once say that on the validity of its terms that the Subordinate Judge has rested his judgment, and the respondent has almost entirely relied in the present appeal.

By the razinama decree Swami Pillai secured for himself almost three-fourths of the estate straightaway. Thayyammuthu got 27 velis absolutely out of which she gave up 10 velis to Neelambal, retaining about 17 velis equivalent to about 102 acres for herself. She also got a sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash. Kamalathachi was given absolutely lands of the extent of $11\frac{1}{2}$ velis equal to 70 acres, besides a sum of Rs. 3,000 in cash. The extent of the land and the amount of the cash received dispel the idea that they were reserved to them by way of maintenance, which indeed was not seriously asserted before us. Looking to the cash alone which was very considerable if we remember its value at the time, it seems to us that the widows were in the main prompted by self-interest rather than by any consideration for the estate. It is not unlikely in the then state of the knowledge of the law, that the parties did not realise the legal incidents of a widow's estate under Hindu law, or the true nature of the restrictions which bound such an estate for the benefit of the ultimate reversioners. It was not till the decision of the Privy Council in Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan was pronounced that the correct principles became clarified. Very likely Swami Pillai, the widows and their advisers thought, wrongly thought, that if the then nearest reversioner was himself a party, the compromise was incapable of being challenged at any time by the remoter actual reversioner. So they set about getting rid of all possible chance of the widows themselves challenging it on one ground or another, by surrounding it with those indicia which would tend to show that the parties dealt with each other at arms length with a full knowledge of their respective rights, so as to avoid any suspicion of over-reaching or fraud. The result was a division of the estate satisfactory enough to the actual parties to the compromise but entirely destructive of the rights of the ultimate reversioner if he should happen to be a person other than Swami Pillai. The learned Judge in the Court below has accepted the respondent's contention that the actual reversioner was bound by the compromise, and could not claim any portion of the properties which the widow took absolutely under it. We are clearly of opinion that the Subordinate Judge's conclusion cannot be supported.

It cannot be disputed that Swami Pillai was at best only a remote reversioner with a bare expectancy. Nor can it be said that the transaction approximated to a surrender by the widows, a case neither suggested nor considered in the Courts below. We are again not concerned in this appeal with a claim to that portion of the estate which was cut out and carried away by Swami Pillai under the compromise. If that were indeed the case, some of the considerations adverted to by the learned Subordinate Judge may perhaps have a bearing. If the claimant were a stranger, and not the son of Swami Pillai and were not himself in possession of the properties which went to Swami Pillai under the compromise, he would perhaps be in a position to claim it back with a prospect of success. This appeal is however not concerned with that portion but with the other portion of the estate which was retained by the widows and to be more exact, with that part of it which was taken by Thayyamuthu under the compromise with absolute rights.

The Hindu Law does not permit a widow or any other limited owner, to convert her limited estate into an absolute one. A surrender by the widow genuinely intended and validly effected in favour of the next reversioner is no doubt recognised as valid in spite of the reservation of a reasonable portion of the estate for her maintenance. The particular mode by which such a surrender is to be effected may differ, but it must in substance amount to an effacement of her estate. A compromise is no doubt one of the modes recognised, if in other respects it satisfies the conditions of a valid surrender (Sureshwar Misser v. Maheshwari Misraini). In the present case, however, the compromise cannot be justified by an appeal to the doctrine of surrender in so far as it conveys an absolute interest to the widows in the properties allowed to be retained by them. No such case has, as we have said, been advanced, but apart from it, it is definitely ruled out by reason of the fact that Swami Pillai was not the nearest reversioner at the time. In fact both Durayappa and Panchanadam who were both alive then, were nearer reversioners, belonging as they did to the same branch as Appa Pillai, whereas Swami Pillai belonged to the branch of Kathaperumal to whom his father Thiagaraja had been adopted.

The ground upon which the Subordinate Judge has rested his judgment is that the compromise should be regarded as a bona fide settlement of doubtful claims, amounting in fact to a family arrangement brought about in the interests of all parties and with a view to bring peace to the whole family. As we have already indicated, if the claim is made by the actual reversioner to recover properties conveyed away to a stranger under a compromise by the widow, the considerations adverted to by the learned Subordinate Judge may have a material bearing. But the question we have to consider is different, for we are concerned with that portion which had been left with the widows with rights of full ownership. It was urged that the compromise must be regarded as having been bona fide entered into in the circumstances in which it was brought about and must therefore be held binding on the actual reversioner. It is impossible for us to accept this argument in the face of the fact that Swami Pillai was putting forward what was to his knowledge a thoroughly unfounded and dishonest claim. When the reversioner acted with such knowledge, the compromise cannot be supported as it is devoid of the essential element of bona fides (*Kondama Naicker v. Kandasami Goundar*¹, *Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh*² and *Baijnath Rai v. Mangla Prasad Narayan Sahi*³). The compromise also fails for another and an equally potent reason. The rule of law governing a compromise can be stated in this way. A compromise made bona fide for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the limited owner will bind the reversioner quite as much as a decree on contest (*Ramsunran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari*⁴ and *Raoji v. Kunjalal*⁵). Bona fides in this connection has reference to the state of mind of the parties not in relation to their personal claim in the dispute, but in relation to the estate, that is, to the rights of the prospective reversioner to whom it is to descend unimpeded and undiminished except to the extent to which the intermediate holder is permitted to deal with it by law. In other words the protection of the estate, that is, of the interests of the ultimate reversioner, appears to be in part at least the policy underlying the rules of Hindu Law in this behalf, and the restrictions which that law places on a limited owner's powers of disposal are in part at least referable to this end in view. So it is that a transaction which ignores the rights of the reversioner and aims at securing a personal benefit to the limited owner is not allowed to prejudice the rights of the former. A compromise may in some cases also amount to a family arrangement, and from that point of view, justified if it is prudent and reasonable, and bona fide effected to secure family peace. But an arrangement made in violation of the law, and in conscious disregard of the right of the reversioner will not be upheld even though it is made to assume the cloak of a family arrangement. It is not the form but the substance that the Court will consider in judging of its validity.

Looking at the facts of the present case, we are unable to find any circumstance which can warrant our holding that the widows obtained in fact an absolute interest as against the actual reversioner, namely, the plaintiff. It may be that if Swami Pillai himself had ultimately turned out to be the actual reversioner, he might be held bound by the compromise in every detail (Ram Gowda Anna Gowda v. Bhausahabi and Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal). But the appellant, though a son of Swami Pillai, does not claim through him, but in his own independent right, and hence is not bound by an invalid compromise to which he was not himself a party and from which he did not directly derive any benefit. That one reversioner does not trace his title through another even if they are related to each other as son and father is too well settled to require any citation of authority. It will also be observed that the widows did not put forward any personal rights in the subject-matter of the litigation, and indeed it is clear they had none. They merely claimed a widow's estate in the properties which in the written statement they asserted were the separate and self-acquired properties of the husband. It is consequently inadmissible to view the compromise as an acknowledgment of an antecedent title in them on the basis of the principle enunciated in *Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain*¹. The decision of the Privy Council in *Nathu Lal v. Babu Ram*², relied on by both sides before us, does not afford any support to the respondent's contention in the appeal. The award which was the bone of contention in that case was passed in a dispute between Mussamat Jamma the widow of Ji Sukh on the one side and Ram Sahai his undivided brother who had taken the estate by survivorship on the other. The award was held to have conferred an absolute right to a portion of the estate on the widow though before the arbitrators she had claimed only a widow's estate as the heir of her husband. At page 168, their Lordships explain the principle on which the decision was based. They observe:

"No doubt, had the facts been that Ji Sukh at the time of his death was separated from his brother, this award could have availed the plaintiffs nothing against a claim by Ji Sukh's reversioners. On the face of the transaction it is not such a compromise by a Hindu widow as could be held binding upon her husband's reversioners. In the present case, however, as it has been established that Ji Sukh at the date of his death left no heritable interest in the property in suit, the sole question decisive of the rights of the parties is the true construction of the bargain made by Musammatt Jamma with Ram Sahai. Their Lordships consider that the absolute title of Musammatt Jamma is established and that the learned Judges of the High Court were wrong in thinking that, because her claim before the arbitrators was originally a claim by a Hindu woman to take her husband's estate by inheritance, the estate which she in fact obtained under the award was confined to a limited estate. By the bargain which she drove the reversioners of her husband were not damnified. She did not bind them or represent them, and she was not their agent or trustee to acquire property for her husband's estate. She is not estopped as against them from setting up the title which she took from Ram Sahai: nor have they any claim to share in what she gained."

It will thus be seen that the absolute estate which the widow got under the award was in fact sustained on the footing of a grant by Ram Sahai who was the full owner according to the finding of their Lordships. What is specially worthy of note for the present purpose is the opinion of the Privy Council expressed in the first two sentences of the above extract, which leaves no room for doubt on the principle to be applied to the determination of this appeal. If Ji Sukh had been divided from Ram Sahai, Musammat Jamma would have held only the limited estate of a widow in the properties of her husband. Ram Sahai would have then occupied the position of a presumptive reversioner. If in such circumstances a conflict arose between the widow on the one hand and the presumptive reversioner on the other, could it be properly resolved by an award or a compromise giving to the widow or recognising in her an absolute right to a portion of the estate, so as to bind the actual reversioner? The answer is a definite No. In the words of their Lordships, "on the face of the transaction it is not such a compromise by a Hindu widow as could be held binding upon her husband's reversioners", and could not therefore prevail against the actual reversioner when the estate falls in. If their Lordships' decision recognised the absolute character of the estate obtained by the widow in this case, it was because Ram Sahai was not a reversioner in any sense of the term, but had actually become the owner of the property by survivorship on the death of his brother Ji Sukh. He was consequently in a position to dispose of it in any way he liked, by parting with it in favour of any person he pleased. The conclusion of their Lordships was that Ram Sahai, competent as he was to deal with the property as full owner, should be held to have parted with it in favour of Musammat Jamma. This is clearly implied in the last sentence in the above extract. We think that this decision of the highest tribunal is of much assistance in disposing of the respondents' contention in this case. It follows that in a suit in which the presumptive reversioner or for the matter of that even a stranger is ranged on one side and a widow or widows claiming as heir or heirs of the husband on the other, it is not permissible for either or both of the parties to enter into an arrangement calculated to enlarge the limited estate of the widow into one of an absolute character. The presumption in a transaction of this kind is that the estate taken is merely the limited interest of a widow, though special circumstances may outweigh it. *Sahab Rai v. Shafiq Ahmad*¹. Not only has the presumption not been rebutted, but on the contrary there is reason to think that the widows were prompted by a desire to take advantage of the situation for securing a substantial benefit for themselves in the shape of considerable amounts in cash, besides the immovable properties taken by them absolutely. It is true that in the result the widows were deprived of about three-fourths of the estate which they could have enjoyed for their lives on what was but a flimsy and unsubstantial claim. It is unnecessary however to enquire why they acceded to such a preposterous claim. It might have been due to their ignorance and helplessness, or to the fear that they might lose the whole of the estate and be left only with a bare right of maintenance or it might have been the result of undue influence or even coercion. It is equally possible that the compromise presented an attractive proposition in that it would enable them to obtain a substantial amount of liquid cash for themselves, and for their immediate purposes, and would also leave in their hands considerable immovable properties which they could divert at pleasure in favour of any person or persons on whom they might choose to confer a bounty. This appears to us, to be the more likely alternative. But no materials are now available to enable us to probe into the question and arrive at a definite finding; and further as we have said this enquiry is rendered unnecessary in the view we have taken of the nature and effect of the compromise. We must therefore hold that the terms of the compromise notwithstanding, the widows had no more than a limited interest in the properties allotted to them though in absolute terms by that compromise.

Although the validity of the compromise is the main question to be considered, certain other contentions were also advanced by the respondents and had been accepted by the lower Court. Before we examine them ourselves it is necessary to refer to a few more facts.

The claim in the suit relates to a portion of the properties allotted to Thayyamuthu under the compromise. As we have already mentioned Thayyamuthu got about 27 velis of land besides a sum of Rs. 4,000 in cash, while Kamalathachi got only about 11½ velis and Rs. 3,000. The discrepancy in the shares is due to the fact that out of Thayyamuthu's share, Neelambal the daughter had to be given the lands promised to her by her father Appa Pillai and included in the deed of gift, Ex. B dowry deed, which was later executed by Thayyamuthu but to the registration of which she withheld her consent for the reasons contained in Exs. D and D-1. It would appear that a portion of the land comprised in Ex. B was allotted to Kamalathachi under the compromise, and a house which was to have been taken by Neelambal was under the same compromise conveyed to Swami Pillai. The balance alone of the property covered by Ex. B was taken by Neelambal, and formed after her death, the subject-matter of the litigation evidenced by Ex. IX series to which we shall presently refer. Thayyamuthu bequeathed the properties she got under the compromise to her daughter Palanivelu by a will dated 12th June, 1887, who in her turn bequeathed it to one Kandasami by her will of 11th January, 1908. Kandasami took possession of the property and enjoyed it till his death in 1914, when the defendant his widow succeeded to it. She is the first respondent in the appeal, the second respondent being one Ramu Thevar added as a party on his application in order to enable him to watch his reversionary interest in view of a compromise sought to be effected between the legal representatives of the plaintiff-appellant, and Kandasami's widow, the first respondent. She did not take part in resisting the appeal which was in fact contested by the second respondent only. No new or special case has, we may observe, been put forward by him in the arguments presented to us. Among the other contentions advanced by the first respondent in the Court below and accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge, one was, we think rightly, abandoned, namely, that the plaintiff was debarred from contending that the compromise in O. S. No. 1 of 1880 was not binding on him by reason of the decision of the Tanjore Sub-Court in O. S. No. 1 of 1924 which held that it was valid and binding. This contention formed the subject of issue No. 5 in the Court below, which was found in the affirmative. In O. S. No. 1 of 1924 one Ramu Thevar sued as trustee to recover the properties which were gifted to Neelambal subject to the deductions mentioned above. His case was that Neelambal had obtained an absolute interest in the property, which she dedicated to certain charities appointing Kandasami Thevar to conduct and manage the same. Kandasami was unwilling, it was said, to undertake the duties of a trustee, and further predeceased Neelambal. Thereupon she managed them herself during her lifetime and died on 28th May, 1923, having appointed Ramu Thevar to manage the trust after her. It was also alleged that Swami Pillai and his brother Thiagaraja trespassed upon the properties, and they were accordingly made parties to the suit along with the widows of Kandasami. The compromise in O. S. No. 1 of 1880 was impugned by Swami

Pillai and his brother, but without success, in the trial and the appellate Courts. In second appeal however, that question was not gone into, as it became unnecessary in view of the finding that the properties were held to have been gifted to Neelambal even during the lifetime of Appa Pillai himself. In view of the abandonment of this contention, we do not think it necessary to enter into a discussion of the legal effect of the decisions arrived at in the said suit and evidenced by the judgments marked as Ex. IX series in the present suit.

The next contention which we have to consider is that covered by issue No. 6 which is as follows:—

"Is the plaintiff estopped from questioning the absolute rights of the deceased Thayyamuthu Achi for reasons mentioned in paragraph 12 of the written statement."

The acts of the plaintiff on which the estoppel is sought to be made out are:

(i) A partition between the plaintiff and his brother of the properties their father, Swami Pillai, got under the compromise.

(ii) The acceptance by plaintiff of a gift from Kamalathachi of the properties she got under the same compromise, the gift deed containing a recital that the properties had been got by her absolutely with full powers of alienation.

(iii) The purchase by plaintiff of a property from Purnathachi, the daughter-in-law of Panchanadam, who got it under a compromise with Thayyamuthu on a suit instituted by Appa Pillai himself during his lifetime, for recovery of the property on the ground that Panchanadam had trespassed on it. This was O. S. No. 27 of 1878 which was settled on 1st March, 1880, by Thayyamuthu accepting the defendant's case that the property had been gifted to him by Appa Pillai.

(iv) Lastly that plaintiff was a party to certain exchange deeds which dealt with the properties he had purchased from Kamalathachi, whose title was traceable to the compromise.

Having given our careful consideration to this plea we are clear that there is no substance in it. Here again the conduct of the plaintiff evidenced by these transactions has little bearing on the nature of the estate which the widows originally purported to obtain under the compromise. It is difficult to see how the partition referred to above would raise an estoppel. The brothers had succeeded to the properties which their father rightly or wrongly managed to secure, and how the partition which they effected could be said to amount to conduct or representation on which any body could be said to have acted to his prejudice is impossible to see. The conduct implied in the other heads referred to above, can no doubt prevent the plaintiff

Appaswami
Pillai
v.
Thayammal.

Krishna-

from impeaching those transactions themselves, as against the parties or privies and in respect of the properties comprised therein. But no higher efficacy than that can be attributed to them. The defendants who are strangers cannot take advantage of them, as they have neither acted on them nor have in any way been prejudiced by them. Reliance was placed in this connection on the case reported in *Ramakotayya v. Viraraghavayya*¹. The proposition of law is succinctly stated in the headnote of the report in these terms:

"If the next presumptive male reversioner consents, though for no consideration, to an alienation without necessity by a Hindu widow (for example, a gift as in this case), the transaction will be binding on him when he actually succeeds to the estate."

The correctness of this proposition is beyond question, but it is to be observed that it has no application to the present case. As explained by Coutts-Trotter, C.J., the essence of the doctrine (of estoppel) is that the person who acted on the faith of the assertion was damnified and this feature is as conspicuous by its absence in this case as it was in that case. Nor is there any reason for the application of the other principle, termed the third doctrine at page 560, whether its true label is election or ratification. It is enough to say that so far as the plaintiff is concerned he did nothing to affirm or validate the absolute right of Thayyamuthu in the properties in suit. Further we are not in this case dealing with an alienation by the widow which is voidable, and therefore capable of being confirmed or ratified by the reversioner. As we have already observed we are concerned to decide the character of the estate retained by the widow, and not of that which was conveyed away by the compromise. This contention must also accordingly be overruled.

Lastly there is the objection that plaintiff could not make out a full title to the property claimed, as the release deed Ex. H is inoperative for want of specification of the properties covered by it. By this deed Thiagaraja released his interest in the properties which accrued to both the brothers as reversioners on the death of Neelambal, in consideration of a sum of Rs. 6,000 received by him from the plaintiff in the manner mentioned in the document. The document has been registered though it did not set out the properties for some reason which has not been made clear to us. In spite of this omission, there is and can be no difficulty in ascertaining what were the properties which were released by Thiagaraja. Thiagaraja himself never objected to the validity of the deed, and far from it he appears to have affirmed it as second defendant in his written statement in O. S. No. 1 of 1924. In these circumstances we cannot find a justification for refusing to recognise the claim of the plaintiff in full. We may also say that this point was not reiterated before us.

The appellant a building contractor was employed by the four trustees of a pagoda. The contract was in writing signed by the appellant and the four trustees. The respondent (who was the trustee of the estate of a lady who had left certain property for charitable purposes) was not a party to the contract but orally guaranteed its due performance by the trustees. The appellant's action was for the sum due on the contract, against the four trustees and the respondent, claiming relief against each defendant personally. After the suit had been commenced, the four trustees of the pagoda were removed and eight others appointed in their place. The appellant by interlocutory application got the eight new trustees substituted and the names of the four original trustees were struck out. At the trial it was suggested by the Judge that the liability of the original trustees was a personal one. The appellant's application to have three out of the four original trustees who were then alive, replaced as defendants, was refused and in the suit the claim against the new trustees was dismissed and the respondent found liable as guarantor.

On appeal to the High Court the respondent was held to be discharged by the act of the appellant in foregoing his claim against the original trustees, and on appeal the Judicial Committee, Held, if no terms are inserted in an order substituting new trustees for old, as defendants the effect of withdrawing the suit against the old trustees is to be ascertained from O. 23, r. 1, and as the order does not give liberty to the applicant to institute a fresh suit the plaintiff is precluded from instituting a fresh suit. However, the result is not to release or discharge the debt but merely to prevent the creditor from suing the principal debtor. The appellant's act in continuing to sue the surety though he withdrew his action against the principal debtors was a clear reservation of his rights. A mere failure to sue within the time specified by the statute of limitation or an inability to sue by reason of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code would not cause a contract to become void. As the only result of the striking out the original trustees from the action is to preclude the bringing by the appellant of a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter against them, and is not to release or discharge the principal debt, the debt remains a debt, though the creditor by reason of a rule of procedure cannot himself bring an action upon it.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court, Rangoon, dated 27th January, 1937 (Sir Goodman Roberts, C.J. and Leach, J.) (A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 302) reversing a decision dated 9th April, 1936, of the same Court in its original civil jurisdiction (Braund, J.).

L. M. D. de Silva for Appellant.—The proceedings taken by the appellant to have the original trustees replaced by the new trustees as defendants did not bring into operation the provisions of O. 23, r. 1, because they were taken under O. 1, r. 10, and did not preclude the appellant from bringing a new action against the original trustees.

But even if he was so precluded that did not extinguish the debt or discharge the respondent as surety, for, whatever the position between the appellant and the principal debtors, he clearly reserved his rights against the respondent by proceeding with the action against him after withdrawing it as against the original trustees.

The reasoning by which the High Court held that, the plaintiff having lost his right of action against the original trustees, his contract with them became void, involves, it is submitted, a misconception of S. 2 (j) of the Indian Contract Act. The contract between the appellant and the principal debtors has not become void in the sense envisaged by that sub-section. The surety could only pray in aid of his release Ss. 134 and 139 of the Act, but that is not open to him because the appellant has reserved his rights against him.

R. W. Leach for Respondent.—The appellant's application to have the four original trustees removed as defendants was a withdrawal of the action against them under O. 23, r. 1, with the result that he was precluded from bringing another action against them in respect of the same subject-matter. That operated, it is submitted, to release the respondent as surety.

But the surety is in any event discharged by virtue of S. 2 (j) of the Indian Contract Act as a result of which the contract between the appellant and the original trustees, having ceased to become enforceable by the operation of O. 23, r. 1 became void. There is no warrant for limiting the meaning of S. 2 (j), and any contract in respect of which an action cannot be brought is void. The surety derives his discharge from the absolute release which the principal debtors have consequently obtained through the appellant's actions.

3rd March, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD PORTER.—The facts in this case can be shortly stated. The plaintiff, who is a building contractor, was employed by the four trustees of a pagoda known as the Kyaikasan Pagoda. The terms of the employment are set out in a written agreement dated the 1st January, 1933, and expressed to be made between the Board of the Kyaikasan Pagoda Trustees and the appellant. It is signed by the appellant and each of the trustees. The respondent was trustee of the estate of a lady called Daw Dwe who had left certain property for charitable purposes. He was not a party to the contract but had orally guaranteed its due performance by the trustees, and in Burma such a guarantee is binding though it is not in writing. The appellant fulfilled his contract, and there was due to him a sum of Rs. 26,082-8-6, less, as the learned trial Judge found, a sum of Rs. 158, which had not been paid. The appellant thereupon instituted the present action on the 21st May, 1934, in the High Court in its original jurisdiction, claiming the former sum against the four trustees and the respondent.

In the plaint each of the trustees was named as a defendant, and after their names were added the words "All the above four are trustees of the Kyaikasan Pagoda, Thingangyun and are sued in that capacity". By his prayer the plaintiff asked for relief against each of the defendants personally and against the respondent in particular as the trustee of Daw Dwe's trust. The sum awarded by the learned trial Judge was obviously due from the respondent and from the trustees personally, but the appellant seems to have thought that his remedy was not against the named trustees but against any one who might from time to time be trustee of the pagoda.

Shortly after the suit had been begun the four trustees were removed from their position as trustees of the pagoda, and eight others were appointed in their place. The appellant thereupon made an interlocutory application asking originally to add the eight new trustees as defendants, and ultimately to substitute the new trustees in place of the old. The application was granted on the 20th June, 1935, and thereupon the names of the four original trustees were struck out and those of the new trustees inserted in their place.

When, however, the case came on for trial, and before the hearing on the merits, the learned trial Judge suggested that the liability of the original trustees was a personal one and that no liability attached to the new trustees. Thereupon the appellant on the 24th March, 1936, applied to replace the names of three out of the four original trustees (the other having died) as defendants. To this application the trial Judge refused to accede. He held that he had jurisdiction to grant it under O. 1, r. 10 and O. 6, r. 16 (? r. 17) of the Code of Civil Procedure, but he did not think that the appellant should be allowed to change his mind again in the course of the proceedings. The eight trustee defendants were, he thought, entitled to have their case disposed of, more particularly as in his view the appellant would probably be able to pursue his remedies against the original trustees in another suit, though to do so might expose him to a liability for some extra costs. The suit then proceeded to trial, the claim against the new trustees was dismissed and the respondent found liable as guarantor.

From this decision the respondent appealed to an Appellate Bench and in that appeal for the first time put forward the contention that the learned Judge erred in law in holding him liable. His liability, it was suggested, should have been held to be discharged by the act of the present appellant in foregoing his claim against the original trustees. The learned Judges of the Appellate Bench whilst rejecting all the other grounds of appeal held that this contention was well founded, allowed the appeal and condemned the appellant in costs. The question argued before their Lordships was whether they were right in so doing.

The grounds upon which, in circumstances material to the present case, a guarantor may be discharged from his liabilities are well established and indeed were not in issue. A surety is discharged if the creditor, without his consent, either releases the principal debtor or enters into a binding arrangement with him to give him time. In each case the ground of the discharge is that the surety's right to pay the debt at any time and, after paying it, to sue the principal in the name of the creditor, is interfered with.

To hold that in such cases the creditor still retained his right against the surety, and that the surety on his part could still sue the principal debtor, would mean that the release or grant of time was of no effect inasmuch as the debtor would still be liable at any moment to an action at the suit of the surety.

Where an absolute release is given there is no room for any reservation of remedies against the surety. (See Webb v. Hewitt and Commercial Bank of Tasmania v. Jones.)

Where, however, the debt has not been actually released, the creditor may reserve his rights by notifying the debtor that he does so, and this reservation is effective not only where the time of payment is postponed but even where the creditor has entered into an agreement not to sue the debtor. In neither case is there any deception of the debtor since he knows that he is still exposed to a suit at the will of the surety.

In England the striking out of the names of the four original trustees would not have affected the respondent's liability. A fresh action could have been brought against them at any time. But it is said that the law of Burma differs from the law of England in this respect, and reliance is placed upon the terms of O. 23, r. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure and upon S. 2 (g) and (j) and Ss. 134 and 139 of the Indian Contract Act. O. 23, r. 1 is as follows:—

"(1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

"(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

"(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect; or

"(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim.

"(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit or abandons part of a claim without the permission referred to in sub-r. (2) he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim."

The sections of the Indian Contract Act are as follows:—

"2.—(g) An agreement not enforceable by law is said to be void.

"2.—(j) A contract which ceases to be enforceable by law becomes void when it ceases to be enforceable.

"134.—The surety is discharged by any contract between the creditor and the principal debtor, by which the principal debtor is released, or by any act or omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor.

"139.—If the creditor does any act which is inconsistent with the rights of the surety, or omits to do any act which his duty to the surety requires him to do, and the eventual remedy of the surety himself against the principal debtor is thereby impaired, the surety is discharged."

By reason of these provisions the debtor, as the respondent contended, was absolutely released. The appellant indeed contended that he had not proceeded under O. 23, r. 1, in applying to substitute the new trustees for the old, but that his application was made under O. 1, r. 10 alone. Their Lordships cannot accept this view. The last named rule no doubt authorizes the Court to order the name of a party improperly joined to be struck out and that the names of any person who ought to have been joined be added. But such an order is expressly directed to be made on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just.

If no terms are inserted in the order, then, in their Lordships' view, the effect of withdrawing the suit against some of the defendants is to be ascertained from O. 23, r. 1. That order is not very happily worded, but its meaning is reasonably clear. Under its provisions the Court may give liberty to the applicant to institute a fresh suit after a withdrawal, but, if it does not do so, the plaintiff is precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter.

The result, however, is not to release or discharge the debt, but merely to prevent the creditor from suing the principal debtor.

In England an undertaking by the creditor not to sue the principal debtor, or a binding agreement to give him time, does not operate as a discharge of the surety provided it is a condition of the undertaking or agreement that the rights of the creditor to sue or receive the money from the surety are reserved. (See *Bateson v. Gosling*¹ and *Oriental Financial Corporation v. Overend Gurney & Co.*²)

Similarly, a failure to sue the principal debtor until recovery is barred by the statutes of limitation does not operate as a discharge of the surety in England. (See *Carter v. White*³.)

The same view prevails in most of the High Courts in India. (See *Sankana Kalana v. Virupakshapa Ganeshapa*⁴, *Krishto Kishori Chowdhraia v. Radha Romun Munshi*⁵, Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar and also Dil Mohammad v. Sain Dast.)

It is true that the first two cases were decided in reliance upon the provisions of S. 137 of the Indian Contract Act which enacts that:—

"Mere forbearance on the part of the creditor to sue the principal debtor or to enforce any other remedy against him, does not in the absence of any provision in the guarantee to the contrary discharge the surety"

But the two later cases base their reasoning also on the broader ground adopted by English law, and hold S. 137 to be merely declaratory of the law and to be enacted only to allay any doubts as to whether the same principles were applicable in India. With these decisions of the other High Courts in India may be contrasted the case of Ranjit Singh v. Naubat which decides that in spite of the provisions of S. 137, the creditor's right against the surety is not preserved unless he sues the principal debtor within the period of limitation. Such a decision is inconsistent with the views held by the Courts in England and the majority of the Courts in India. In this conflict, their Lordships prefer the reasoning of the majority. In any case those decisions deal rather with the question whether the debt was absolutely released, than with the question whether an agreement not to sue or to give time with a reservation of right against the surety, operated as a discharge to him.

The present case is in their Lordships' opinion an example of the latter type, and they entertain no doubt that the creditor's rights against the surety were preserved. The appellant's act in continuing to sue the surety though he withdrew his action against the principal debtors was in their view a clear reservation of his rights. Indian authority illustrating this proposition is to be found in *Murugappa v. Munusami*¹ and in *Nur Din v. Allah Ditta*².

But the respondent argues that, even if those cases are applicable in their own circumstances, or binding in England, they are not applicable in Burma to the present case, because, as he maintains, S. 2 (j) of the Indian Contract Act alters the position. In his contention that section must be read in its widest sense; with the result that in India and Burma any contract in respect of which an action cannot be brought is void, and therefore the plaintiff's right to recover the debt from the original trustees being unenforceable, is void. It follows, he argues, that, the principal debtors having been absolutely released, the surety is discharged.

If the premises were accurate the conclusion might follow, even though some of the results would be startling and unexpected. One such result would be that when the period of limitation had run out, not only would the remedy be barred, but the debt would be gone and with it all right to retain anything given as security for the debt, and all right to set off a counter liability against it. This possibility was indeed envisaged in *Hajarimal v. Krishnarava*³, but the point was left undecided. A still more startling result, however, is brought about on this construction if S. 2 (j) is read with S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, since in such a case not only would every unenforceable contract become void but each party would be under the obligation of restoring or making compensation for any benefit received, no matter how much had been done towards the performance by either party.

But it is not necessary to adopt a construction leading to such surprising results. The solution is, in their Lordships' view, to be found in the wording of S. 2 (j) itself. Not every unenforceable contract is declared void, but only those unenforceable by law, and those words mean not unenforceable by reason of some procedural regulation, but unenforceable by the substantive law. For example, a contract which was from its inception illegal, such as a contract with an alien enemy, would be avoided by S. 2 (g), and one which became illegal in the course of its performance, such as a contract with one who had been an alien friend but later became an alien enemy, would be avoided by S. 2 (j). A mere failure to sue within the time specified by the statute of limitations or an inability to sue by reason of the provisions of one of the Orders under the Civil Procedure Code would not cause a contract to become void. Finally, as their Lordships think, Ss. 134 and 139 are merely declaratory of what the law of England was and is. S. 139 only applies where the eventual remedy of the surety against the principal debtor is impaired, and for the reasons they have given, their Lordships find nothing in the present case which impairs the respondent's remedy against the original trustees.

Under S. 134 the surety is discharged if, and only if, a contract has been entered into by which the debtor is released, or if there has been any act or omission on the part of the creditor the legal consequence of which has been to discharge the principal debtor.

If, as in the present case, the only result of striking out the original trustees from the action is to preclude the bringing by the appellant of a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter against them, and is not to release or discharge the principal debt, then the debt remains a debt though the creditor by reason of a rule of procedure cannot himself bring an action upon it. In such circumstances there is nothing in the section to discharge the liability of the surety.

For these reasons their Lordships hold that the respondent has not been relieved of his liability under the guarantee, and will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court on its Appellate Side set aside and the decree of the trial Judge restored.

The respondent must pay the appellant's costs of the appeal before the Appellate Court and before their Lordships' Board.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 32, r. 6—Compromise decree directing payment to next friend of plaintiff—Provisions of Code to be strictly adhered to—Direct payment to next friend without sanction by Court unlawful—Next friend need not be same at the time of payment as at the time of decree.

Where a compromise decree provides that a payment shall be made to the plaintiff's next friend, it must be understood as meaning that the payment shall be made under the provisions of the Code and that the next friend must apply to the Court to receive the money and, if not a statutory guardian, must furnish the requisite security. O. 32, r. 6 is imperative on the point. Again it is obvious that the next friend at the time of payment of money need not be the same person who was the next friend when the compromise decree was sanctioned. It is necessary that the Court sanctioning receipt of money on behalf of the minor should apply its mind to the circumstances that exist at the time of the receipt and not as they existed at the time when the decree was passed.

If the compromise included in respect of payment certain unlawful acts, namely, making the payment direct out of Court to the plaintiff's next friend that part of the contract by way of analogy of S. 56 of the Indian Contract Act was unlawful and therefore void.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga dated 26th July, 1935, and in E.P. No. 222 of 1935 in O. S. No. 76 of 1925.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—These appeals arise out of certain proceedings had in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 76 of 1925 on the file of the Sub-Court, Sivaganga. That decree was passed on the 21st December, 1932, and was slightly modified in A. S. No. 37 of 1933 of this Court on the 23rd August, 1934. The decree directed the payment of money to the two plaintiffs, Palaniappa Chetti and Nagappa Chetti. The first plaintiff became a major in 1931 and the second plaintiff was at all material times a minor. On the 21st January, 1935, the plaintiffs and defendants filed a joint petition in the Sub-Court requesting the Court to sanction a compromise. By that compromise the terms of the decree were varied. The original decree provided that the decretal amount should be paid jointly to the plaintiffs. By the compromise it was provided that half of it should be paid to the first plaintiff and half to the second plaintiff. Then the amount of the decree was varied. The decree amount was about Rs. 64,000. The plaintiffs in consideration of the defendants refraining from filing an appeal in the Privy Council agreed to receive Rs. 50,000. Lastly and this is the part of the compromise with which we are now concerned, the parties agreed that the money should be paid in four instalments, on the 6th November, 1934, 6th February, 1935, 6th May, 1935 and 6th August, 1935. The first two instalments were to be paid to the first plaintiff and the second two instalments to the second plaintiff. The first two instalments were duly paid, and as provided in the compromise, part satisfaction of the decree was recorded by the Court in respect of them. As regards the third and fourth instalments payable to the second plaintiff the compromise provided that payments should be made to the next friend of the second plaintiff who was at the time of the suit and at the time of the compromise petition his mother Muthayi Achi living in a town in Pudukkottah State. It was also a term of the compromise that these payments should be made not in cash but since the second plaintiff was a minor, it should be made in the shape of Government bonds and postal certificates. Defendants 6 to 8 did not, as a matter of fact, deliver Government bonds and postal certificates to Muthayi Achi on the 6th of May, 1935, for the third instalment nor on the 6th of August for the fourth instalment. What they did was that on the 24th of June, 1935, they paid into Court in money the amount due up to that date in respect of the third instalment and filed an application E. A. No. 222 of 1935 requesting the Court to record part satisfaction of that instalment and on the 5th of August, 1935, they paid into Court the money due in respect of the fourth instalment and made a similar request to the Court, with the further prayer that full satisfaction of the decree should now be entered up. The second plaintiff contested these applications and contended that the terms of the compromise had been broken and that therefore the default clause in the compromise came into operation. The default clause is found in paragraph 7 of the compromise and reads as follows:—

“ If default is made in respect of any instalment out of the instalments stated above, even in the manner stated in paragraph 6, the plaintiffs are at liberty to recover by proceeding in execution the aggregate amount of principal, etc., due as per the appeal decree after deducting such of the amounts as might have been received subsequent to the High Court decree, as on the respective dates.”

The Subordinate Judge on the 26th of July, 1933, rejected the defendants' petition holding that the satisfaction tendered was not in accordance with the terms of the compromise and that part satisfaction could not therefore be entered in respect of the third instalment. On the 28th of August on E.A. No. 312 he passed a similar order and also observed that on account of the default of the defendants the default clause in the contract enured to the benefit of the plaintiff. The present appeals are against these orders respectively.

The question for our decision is whether there was any default made by the defendants in the payment of the third and fourth instalments of the Rs. 50,000 which they were bound to pay under the compromise aforesaid. It may be explained here that the compromise allowed a period of 30 days grace after the due dates of payments, providing for interest at the rate of Re. 0-4-0 per cent. per mensem during the said period.

Learned counsel for the appellants relies on two circumstances which he says, prevent the payments which defendants made from amounting to a default. His case is that these payments substantially conformed with the terms of the compromise. His first contention is based on the fact that on the 30th of May, the Chief Court in the Pudukottah State where the plaintiffs, and the next friend of the second plaintiff, reside, issued an order of injunction restraining defendants from paying the decree amounts due in this suit to the second plaintiff and restraining the second plaintiff from receiving these amounts.

The defendants therefore could not tender the bonds to Muthayi Achi at her residence in Pudukottah by reason of this injunction nor could Muthayi Achi have received them if they have been tendered to her. The defendants point out that though they are residents of British India they were bound at their peril to obey the order of injunction because they had a considerable amount of property within the Pudukottah State, which could have been proceeded against if they had disobeyed the order. The defendants' case therefore is that they did the best they could to carry out the terms of compromise by paying the money into Court. They could not pay it into Court on the 6th May the due date nor on the 6th of June the day when the days of grace expired since both days fell within the vacation of the Court; but they paid it with the accrued interest on the date when the Court reopened, namely, the 24th of June, 1935. Then when the 6th of August came round the injunction was still in force and they adopted similar procedure, paying the instalment even before the due date, namely, on the 5th of August, into Court. The Subordinate Judge has held agreeing with the defendants that they were bound to obey the injunction of the Chief Court, Pudukottah, but that that did not prevent them from tendering the Government bonds and postal certificates to the second plaintiff's mother and next friend. The finding is not attempted to be supported by the learned Counsel for the respondents. It is clear that the injunction in the Pudukottah Chief Court extended to the payment and satisfaction of the decree in the suit in whatever manner it was sought to be effected.

The defendants' second contention is that in any case it would not have been lawful to tender the bonds, etc., to the minor's next friend because in so doing they would have been doing an unlawful act, unlawful, that is to say, by reason of O. 32, r. 6, Code of Civil Procedure. That rule is:

"A next friend or guardian for the suit shall not, without the leave of the Court, receive any money or other movable property on behalf of a minor either (a) by way of compromise before decree or order or (b) under a decree or order in favour of the minor," and the second part of that rule is:

"Where the next friend or guardian for the suit has not been appointed or declared by competent authority to be guardian of the property of the minor, the Court shall, if it grants him leave to receive the property require such security and give such directions, as will, in its opinion, sufficiently protect the property from waste and ensure its proper application."

Stodart, J.-

Kasi
Chetti
v.
Nagappa

Stodart, J.

Learned Counsel for the defendants points out that, though in the compromise it was provided that the bonds should be handed over to Muthayi Achi direct, it would have been unlawful for her to receive them since first of all she could not do so without the leave of the Court and secondly the leave of the Court could not be granted without first calling upon her to furnish security. We are informed that she is not the guardian of the property of the minor within the meaning of the second part of O. 32, r. 6.

We agree with both these contentions of learned Counsel and we are satisfied that the defendants substantially complied with the conditions laid down in the compromise for the payment of the third and fourth instalments. The object of the compromise so far as the plaintiffs were concerned was to secure prompt payment of the decree in the shape of money or easily realisable securities. The manner of the payment of the third and fourth instalments, namely, in the shape of Government bonds and postal certificates, was not in our opinion very material. It is true that the defendants could have complied more strictly with the terms of the compromise by bringing into Court, on the days on which they brought into Court the money, Government bonds and postal securities purchased in the name of the minor, but that, in our opinion, is the full measure of the default committed by the defendants and we do not regard it as a material breach of the terms of the compromise. There is ample authority for the position that when money becomes payable under the compromise decree on a day when the Court is closed it is not a breach of the compromise to pay the money into Court on the first day when the Court reopens. See the case reported in *Sankaran Unni v. Raman*¹.

We are not inclined to accept the argument of the learned Counsel for the respondent that the injunction of the Pudukotta Chief Court could have been and should have been disobeyed by the defendants, nor are we impressed with his argument that in this case there was no necessity for the second plaintiff's next friend to get the leave of the Court to draw out or to receive the money or the bonds which had to be paid under the compromise. This last argument is based on the fact that the Court sanctioned the compromise holding it beneficial to the minor. Such a sanction however has nothing at all to do with the provisions of O. 32, r. 6. When a decree provides that the payment shall be made to the plaintiff's next friend it must be understood as meaning that the payment shall be made under the provisions of the Code and that the next friend must apply to the Court to receive the money and, if not a statutory guardian, must furnish the requisite security. O. 32, r. 6 is imperative on this point. Again it is obvious that the next friend at the time of payment of the money need not be the same person who was the next friend when the compromise decree was sanctioned. It is necessary therefore that the Court sanctioning the receipt of money on behalf of the minor should apply its mind to circumstances as they exist at the time of the receipt and not as they existed at the time when the decree was passed.

In the course of the very interesting argument which we have heard in this case, learned Counsel for the appellant has pointed out that apart from the two main considerations on which he has based his appeal the defendants were fully justified in acting as they did on the analogy of the terms of S. 56 of the Indian Contract Act. S. 56 is:

"An agreement to do an act impossible in itself is void. A contract to do an act which, after the contract is made, becomes impossible, or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void, when the act becomes impossible or unlawful."

Here the compromise included certain lawful acts, but in respect of the payment of the third and fourth instalments it included acts which were unlawful, namely, making the payment direct, out of Court, to the second plaintiff's next friend. That part of the contract by way of analogy to S. 56, the defendants were entitled to ignore as being unlawful and therefore void. In the result we allow these appeals with costs throughout here and in the Court below and direct that satisfaction be entered of the third instalment and of the fourth instalment and that the decree be recorded as fully satisfied.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920)—Amending Act (II of 1932)—Education tax levied on proprietor of an estate as land cess—Proprietor if can recover half of it from tenant—S. 88, if applicable to such a tax—Effect of Ss. 34 and 36 as amended.

Where a Local Board levied an education tax as an addition to land tax under Ss. 34 and 36 of the Local Boards Amending Act II of 1932 and collected it from the proprietor of an estate falling under the Estates Land Act, it is open to the proprietor to collect half of the tax so paid by him in respect of the tenant's holding from the tenant by virtue of the proviso to S. 36 of the Amending Act which attracts to it the provisions of the proviso to S. 88. The meaning of S. 36 is that the education tax levied being added to the land cess, both shall be collected as one unit and all the provisions of the Local Boards Act applicable to land cess (including S. 88) shall be applicable to the consolidated sum.

JUDGMENT.—The subject of this second appeal is a sum of Rs. 5-1-0, which was collected under the Estates Land Act from the plaintiff, who is an occupancy tenant in a proprietary estate. This sum was collected by the proprietor on the 23rd October, 1933, and it represents one half of the education tax which the proprietor had to pay in respect of the plaintiff's holding. The plaintiff's suit was under S. 144 of the Estates Land Act to recover back this money from the landholder on the ground that the latter was not legally entitled to collect it from him. Both the trial Court and the learned District Judge on appeal from it have held that the landholder was so entitled and the plaintiff now appeals against that decision. In order to understand how the education tax is assessed and levied it is first necessary to refer to the provisions of the Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920). In that Act provision is made for the collection of a cess which is called a land cess. This cess in proprietary estates is not paid by the occupancy tenants. It is assessed upon and levied from the proprietor of the estate. It is calculated on the rental value of the lands in his estate. The Act, however, provides that the landholder shall be entitled to reimburse himself to the extent of half the cess payable in respect of any holding by collecting it from the occupancy tenant. The question that now arises, put in its simplest form, is whether the landholder can collect from the occupancy tenant one half of the education tax which he has paid in respect of the holding of that tenant. In order to decide this question the provisions of the Elementary Education Act relating to the assessment and the mode of collection of the tax have got to be construed. These provisions so far as relevant to the present question are Ss. 34 and 36, the latter section being a new section introduced by the Amending Act II of 1932. These sections are as follows, leaving out unnecessary words:—

"S. 34 (2).—Any District Board may levy tax not exceeding 25 per centum of the taxation levied under the law for the time being in force governing District Boards under all or any of the following heads, namely, land cess, profession tax and house tax."

This section therefore empowers the Board to impose new taxation in one of several modes. It may declare that the new tax shall be 25 per cent. of the land tax or 25 per cent. of the profession tax or 25 per cent. of the house tax; or it may declare that the new tax shall be 25 per cent. of all these taxes combined or 25 per cent. of any two of them combined. S. 36 deals with the realisation of the tax and the relevant words of it are as follows:—

"Every tax levied under any head of taxation mentioned in S. 34 shall be deemed to be an addition to a tax levied under the same head under the law for the time being in force governing local boards."

Then the section goes on:

"and all the provisions of such law relating to the incidence, assessment or realisation of such tax or in any manner connected therewith shall be applicable accordingly."

The first part of this section appears to mean that when under S. 34 the tax is imposed as a surcharge, say on the land cess, then it shall be deemed to be an addition to the land cess. If it is imposed as a surcharge under the terms of S. 34 as a surcharge on the profession tax, it shall be deemed to be an addition to the profession tax and so on; and by the latter part of the section the provisions of law relating to the incidence, assessment and realisation of the substantive tax are made applicable to the newly added surcharges. The lower Courts have interpreted this last provision as meaning that the proviso to S. 88 of the Local Boards Act is made applicable to the education tax when the education tax has been levied as in this case as a surcharge upon the land cess; and this amounts to finding that the landholder, just as he can recover from the occupancy tenant half of the land cess which he has paid in respect of that tenant's holding, can recover from him also half the amount of the education tax. Learned counsel for the appellant argues that that is not the meaning of S. 36. His contention is that the latter part of S. 36 relates only to the incidence, assessment and realisation of the education tax and that that tax is neither assessed upon, nor to be realised from the occupancy tenant.

I think, however, that the lower courts are correct in their interpretation of S. 36. That section attracts the provisions of the Local Boards Act not only in matters relating to the incidence, assessment or realisation of the tax but also the provisions of the Local Boards Act in any manner connected therewith. In other words the meaning of S. 36 in my opinion is that the education tax levied under this Act being added, say, to the land cess levied under the Local Boards Act, both shall be collected as one unit, and all the provisions of the Local Boards Act applicable to the land cess shall be applicable to the consolidated sum levied as land cess and education cess. The provisions of the Local Boards Act contained in the proviso to S. 88 of that Act is a provision connected with the incidence of the land cess. The tax falls in the first instance on the landholder and by reason of this proviso it is transferred in part to the shoulders of the occupancy tenant.

In the course of the argument a certain previous decision of this Court has been cited by learned counsel for the appellant. That decision is that under the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, before it was amended by Madras Act II of 1932, the landholder had no statutory power to collect from his occupancy tenant one half of the education tax. The decision is reported at *Nagabushanam v. Venkanna*¹, and it is discussed and explained in an unreported case, L. P. A. No. 135 of 1929. The law then in force was different from the present S. 36 of the Elementary Education Act. S. 36 then read simply:

"The assessment and realisation of the tax leviable under S. 34 shall be in accordance with the procedure prescribed," that is to say, prescribed within the meaning of S. 3 (11) of the Act by rules made under the Act by the Governor in Council. And a rule had been made by the Governor in Council under this section. That rule was,

"The tax levied by a local authority under S. 34 of the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, under any head of taxation specified therein shall be treated as an addition to the tax levied under that head and shall be assessed and recovered along with the said tax as an integral part of it."

The difference between this rule and the new S. 36 is obvious. The former does not make applicable to the Elementary Education tax, the provisions of law relating to the incidence, assessment or realisation, for instance, of the land cess "or in any manner connected therewith." The learned Chief Justice Sir Owen Beasley and Mr. Justice Bardswell who decided the Letters Patent Appeal held that the provisions of S. 88 of the Madras Local Boards Act and its proviso were not by this rule imported into the Elementary Education Act and with respect I think that that is obvious. But the amending section has changed the situation. As I have said, I think that section must be interpreted in the sense in which it has been interpreted by the lower Courts. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Sooranna
v.
Venkanna.

A joint and several decree for payment of money was passed against A, B and C. The money was paid by B and C alone and the Court thereupon entered up satisfaction of the decree. B and C also appealed against the decree in so far as the decree held them also liable for the amount and the appellate Court set aside the decree against B and C and modified the decree by confining the decree against A alone.

Held, the decree became an executable decree against A from the date of the appellate decree and an application for execution must be filed within three years of the appellate decree under Art. 182 (2). The fact that the money was paid back to B and C at a later date will not save limitation. On B and C being exonerated, the order entering up satisfaction of the decree became automatically superseded by the appellate decree and from that date the money realised from B and C ceased to be money paid in satisfaction of the decree. There was no money paid by A and there was therefore nothing to render the appellate decree incapable of execution against A. The result of giving effect to the decree-holder's contention will be that he can by his own act or default indefinitely postpone the period of limitation for the execution of the decree.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Elore dated the 14th December, 1935, and made in A. S. Appeal No. 70 of 1935 preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsiff of Kovvur in E. P. No. 592 of 1933 in O. S. No. 913 of 1926.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether the application for execution, out of which this appeal arises, is barred by limitation. The learned District Munsiff has held that it is barred while the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a different view.

The plaintiff obtained a money decree against defendants 2 to 4 in O. S. No. 913 of 1926 on the file of the District Munsiff's Court of Kovvur on the 25th February, 1928. He then made an application (E. P. No. 730 of 1928) for execution of the decree by attachment of the movable property of the defendants. Defendants 3 and 4 preferred an appeal A. S. No. 375 of 1928 on the file of the Sub-Court, Elore, and applied for stay of execution of the decree. By order dated 16th October, 1928, the learned District Judge, before whom the appeal was pending, directed the defendants to deposit the amount into Court and ordered that the amount of the decree may be paid to the plaintiff on his furnishing security to the satisfaction of the District Munsiff, but if the amount was not deposited, the execution of the decree may go on. In pursuance of this order defendants 3 and 4 deposited the decree amount into Court. The plaintiff then drew the amount on executing a security bond in favour of the District Munsiff of Kovvur in and by which he undertook as follows:—

v.
Venkanna.

"As it has been ordered that I should furnish security, I stand surety for Rs. 585-6-6, out of my free will and I have mortgaged therefor my immovable property mentioned in the schedule hereunder. If the decree of the lower Court be reversed or modified in the appellate Court, I hereby agree that I shall be liable to give away in execution of the said decree, any property which I have taken, to take out proceedings properly and conduct the same, according to the appellate decree, to pay any amount, if any, payable by me under the said appellate decree, that on failure to do so, you are at liberty to recover the entire amount, that may be found payable by me by means of this mortgage property, if the amount realised by sale of the mortgage property is not sufficient for the amount payable by me, I, my heirs and my representatives shall be liable to pay the balance on our personal liability and by means of our other properties and I have executed this security bond. I have retained the said property in my possession."

After the execution of the security bond the plaintiff received the said amount and thereupon an order of satisfaction of the decree was made. The order was, "Enter full satisfaction. Struck off". Even though an appeal was preferred by defendants 3 and 4 the order of full satisfaction on payment of the decree amount by defendants 3 and 4 enured also to the benefit of the second defendant because on that date the decree was a joint and several one and the payment by any one of them would operate as a satisfaction of the entire decree. On 21st October, 1929, the appeal of defendants 3 and 4 was allowed. They were exonerated without costs of the lower Court and the decree against the second defendant was confirmed. The operative portion of the decree ran thus:

"This Court doth in modification of the decree of the lower Court order and decree that the plaintiff (first respondent) do recover from second defendant (third respondent) alone the sum of Rs. 398-2-9, with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from date of the plaint (2nd December, 1926) till date of decree of the lower Court (25th February, 1928) and further interest on the aggregate sum at six per cent. per annum from 25th February, 1928, till date of payment and do also recover Rs. 88-3-0 being the costs of the lower Court. This Court doth further order and decree that appellants (defendants 2 and 4) be hereby exonerated without costs of the lower Court and that each party do bear his own costs of the appeal."

The present execution application against the second defendant was made on 9th August, 1933, for attachment and sale of the immovable property of the second defendant. The second defendant pleaded that the application was barred by

v.
Venkanna,

limitation the same having been filed more than three years from the date of the appellate decree, namely, 21st October, 1929. But the plaintiff contended in answer that the application was not barred because it was only on 20th June, 1933, he repaid by way of restitution the amount which was deposited by defendants 3 and 4 and taken by him on furnishing security and in respect whereof full satisfaction was entered and under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act the right accrued only on the date of the refund. This contention prevailed in the lower appellate Court. The question is whether this contention is tenable.

When a decree has been modified in appeal, it is superseded by the appellate decree and the only decree which is capable of execution is the appellate decree and the starting point for limitation is three years from the date of the appellate decree as provided by Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. In this case the decree of the first Court was against the defendants 2 to 4 but the appellate decree was only against the second defendant, the decree against defendants 3 and 4 having been set aside. From the operative portion of the appellate decree which has been already extracted above, it will be seen that the said decree orders and directs that the plaintiff do recover from the second defendant a certain sum of money with interest. Thus the appellate Court passed a fresh decree which prima facie is capable of execution. It is contended that Art. 181 of the Limitation Act and not Art. 182 should be applied in the present case. But it is only when Art. 182 cannot be applied, Art. 181 will come into operation. In *Rameshwar Singh v. Homeshwar Singh*¹, the Privy Council formulated the following test for the applicability of Art. 182:

"They are of opinion that when the Limitation Act of 1908 prescribes three years from the date of a decree or order as the period within which it must be enforced, the language read with its context, refers only, to an order or decree made in such a form as to render it capable in the circumstances of being enforced."

It cannot therefore be said that the form of the appellate decree in this case is such as to render it incapable of being enforced. Again, in *Rungiah Goundan & Co. v. Nanjappa Row*², Benson and Bhashyam Aiyangar, JJ., observed at page 789 thus:

1. (1920) 40 M.L.J. 1: L.R. 48 I.A. 17 (P.C.).
 2. (1903) 13 M.L.J. 412: I.L.R. 26 Mad. 780.

"The true criterion in determining whether Art. 179 (corresponding to Art. 182 of the present Act) or 178 (corresponding to Art. 181) applies to a particular application is to ascertain whether any one of the six points of time specified in column 3 of Art. 179 is applicable to it and if none of them is applicable, it is only then that Art. 178 will apply."

Sooramma
v.
Venkanna.

If we are to apply this test, the second point of time indicated in Art. 182, namely, where there has been an appeal, the date of the final decree or order of the appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal will certainly apply here. But the contention urged is that there was already an order of satisfaction made on 18th December, 1928, and till that order is set aside and the money refunded, it will not be open to the plaintiff to apply for execution of the decree and therefore the appellate decree, until the money is refunded, is incapable of enforcement and Art. 181 will therefore govern the case. The effect of the decision of the appellate Court is that the original decree is no longer in force and has been entirely superseded and with it the order of the full satisfaction entered on the 18th December. The appellate decree exonerates defendants 3 and 4 entirely from liability and wipes out the original decree. The money realised in execution of the original decree against defendants 3 and 4 could no longer be deemed to be money paid in satisfaction of the decree which has been passed by the appellate Court against the second defendant on the 21st February, 1929. On the passing of the latter decree, the obligation to refund the sum of money realised from defendants 3 and 4 immediately arose and the security bond executed by the plaintiff and by which he undertook to refund the said sum of money on the security of his immovable property became operative. There is no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to make restitution of any sum of money to the second defendant nor could the second defendant in virtue of the appellate decree call upon him to refund any sum of money realised in execution of any wrong decree against him. As therefore the sum of money realised from defendants 3 and 4 in execution of the original decree could no longer be said to be moneys received in satisfaction of the decree against the second defendant the right to execute the appellate decree against the second defendant arose on the date of the passing of the said decree, namely, 21st February, 1929. The cases relied on by Mr. Desikan and also by the lower Court seem to me to be distinguishable. Mangamma Nayakuralu v. Rama-

Sooranna
v.
Venkanna.

dasappa Nayanimvaru was the first case relied on with considerable emphasis. In that case, a decree was passed by the first Court for a sum of money against the judgment-debtor. In execution of the said decree, certain zamindari properties were attached. In order to save that property from being sold, the judgment-debtor paid the money and satisfaction of the decree was entered up and the execution petition was dismissed. But the decree was modified in appeal by adding the words "excluding the zamindari" thus making it clear that the amount of the decree is not realisable from the zamindari property; but the obligation of the judgment-debtor to satisfy the decree amount was not interfered with. After the passing of the decree, the judgment-debtor applied for refund of the amount paid by him by reason of the wrongful attachment of the zamindari property. An order of refund was made and after payment of the said sum of money the decree-holder applied to execute the decree against the judgment-debtor. Under such circumstances the question arose whether Art. 181 or Art. 182 would apply. Odgers and Wallace, J.J., held that Art. 181 and not Art. 182 would apply on the ground that the starting point for limitation could not be the date of the appellate decree because by virtue of the previous order of satisfaction it was incapable of execution on that date. Therefore by applying the test formulated in *Rameshwar Singh v. Homeshwar Singh*², they were of the opinion that in the circumstances the decree must be held to be incapable of being enforced on the date of the appellate decree. Odgers, J., observes:—

"A quite possible view is that down to 1918 the decree was in fact non-executable by the decree-holders as they had been paid in full."

Wallace, J., observed:

"When the decree-holder in the present case got his final decree as amended by the High Court, the decree he had obtained in the lower appellate Court was already satisfied and would remain satisfied unless the judgment-debtor chose to recover by appropriate proceedings the amount already paid. In my view the decree-holder could not, at least until the judgment-debtor demanded restitution, apply for execution of the amended decree. Until then it was not a decree capable of execution and Art. 182 would have no application. Art. 181 must therefore apply."

It is clear from these observations that the judgment-debtor whose liability to satisfy the decree remained unaffected, did pay money in satisfaction of the decree and it was a proper payment in satisfaction thereof. Therefore it can be said that unless the judgment-debtor chose to recover the same by appropriate proceedings the decree must be deemed to have been satisfied and until the order of satisfaction is set aside, the decree would be incapable of enforcement. But the facts in this case are different.

Sooranna
v.
Venkanna.

The next case relied on is *Raminidy Venkata Appa Row v. Lakkoju China Ayyanna*¹. The facts in that case are as follows. The plaintiff in that case obtained a mortgage decree and had the property sold on the 10th December, 1898; but the sale was set aside on the 9th of October, 1900, at the instance of the judgment-debtor. The purchaser applied for the refund of the purchase money on the 19th June, 1901. The Court ordered the decree-holder to refund. On the 20th June, 1904, the decree-holder applied for execution. The learned Judges held that the application was not barred by limitation. The ground of the decision is thus stated by the learned Judges:—

"The decree-holder is not however bound to do anything except pay on demand; S. 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers the auction purchaser to require re-payment, but does not impose upon the decree-holder the duty of tendering the money as soon as the sale is set aside. Can he then, so long as he holds the money, apply for another sale? . . . So here the judgment-debtor's action in getting the sale set aside did not injure the decree-holder until he was compelled to refund the purchase money to the purchaser, and till then he had no right to call upon the judgment-debtor to pay his debt a second time. He could not resist the claim of the purchaser before the District Munsiff, and at the same time apply for execution of his decree against his judgment-debtor."

In this view they apply Art. 178 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) observing that although there were undoubtedly difficulties in the way of excluding the case from the purview of Art. 179 of the said Limitation Act, they were not prepared to dissent from the two cases referred to, one of the Calcutta High Court and the other of the Bombay High Court which applied Art. 178 under similar circumstances, as otherwise monstrous injustice would ensue. It will be then seen that the case the learned Judges were dealing with was that of a sole judgment-debtor whose property was sold and it may be argued that until the date of the order for refund, satisfaction against the judgment-debtor could be deemed to be subsisting because the decree-holder was retaining in his hands the sale proceeds of the

Sooranna
v.
Venkanna.

judgment-debtor's property. But the case here is different. However, with due respect to the learned Judge, the view taken in this case does not commend itself to me to be sound. It will be seen that the moment the sale is set aside the obligation to refund the purchase money to the purchaser arose. The money in the hands of the decree-holder must be deemed to be money had and received to the use of the purchaser which in equity he was bound to refund to the purchaser. The money therefore could no longer be money realised from the property of the judgment-debtor by the fact of the sale having been set aside and the property of the judgment-debtor being restored to him. It is not therefore possible to understand the observations of the learned Judges when they observe that till the money was refunded the decree-holder had no right to call the judgment-debtor to pay his debt a second time. It seems to me that the moment the sale is set aside, the order of satisfaction goes, the decree is capable of execution and the right to apply accrues from the date of the setting aside of the sale, and even if Art. 178 applied, the right would have accrued from 9th October, 1900 and not on 19th June, 1901. I am not able to understand what any question of damage has to do with the construction of Art. 178 or Art. 179 of the Limitation Act. Mr. Desikan also relied on the decision in *Borojo Charchi v. Basudebo Doss*¹. The said decision only follows *Raminidy Venkata Appa Row v. Lakkoju China Ayyanna*² and is based on the theory of damage. But these decisions do not apply to the facts of this case. The logical result of giving effect to the contention of the respondent would be that he can by his own act or default indefinitely postpone the period of limitation for the execution of the decree. To put the matter concretely, in this case by virtue of the security bond executed by the plaintiff, defendants 3 and 4 may wait for 12 years and take proceedings to realise the amount to be refunded and the said proceedings may take any length of time before the amount is actually realised and all this time the decree against the second defendant must be deemed to be alive, a result which ought not to be allowed, unless there is a compelling provision of law to do so and I have not been shown any. I am therefore of the opinion that Art. 182 is applicable and the execution application is barred by limitation. I may observe that the respondent's counsel did not seek to support the judgment of the lower Court on the ground that the execution application in question is a continuation of the prior execution application.

1. A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 152.

2. (1906) 17 M.L.J. 194; I.L.R. 30 Mad. 209.

Sooranna
v.
Venkanna.

I therefore reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsiff with costs throughout.

A deed of partnership contained a covenant to the effect that "if any of the shareholders should die while the business of the firm is carried on, his heir or his representatives shall after his lifetime be a partner in his place, being entitled to the right and interest of the said partner, and he shall get the business done subjecting himself to the abovesaid terms and on that account neither the partnership should be cancelled nor would it come to an end."

Held, that such a covenant to continue the partnership cannot be specifically enforced and the effect of the death of the partner coupled with the refusal of the representatives to continue the partnership will be the dissolution of the firm.

In a suit to recover money due by way of contribution towards the loss incurred by such a partnership from the sons of a deceased partner, it is not permissible to give relief by way of damages for the breach of the contract entered into by the father because the basis of the claim for damages for breach of a covenant to continue a partnership is totally different from the basis of a claim for a proportionate share of the loss from a particular partner.

A. Lakshmayya for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant was the plaintiff in a suit brought on the basis of a deed of partnership to recover money due by way of contribution towards the loss incurred by the partnership from the defendants as sons of a deceased partner. The basis of the suit is a covenant in the deed of partnership which runs as follows:—

“If any of the shareholders should die owing to an act of Providence while the business of the firm is being carried on, his heir or his representatives shall after his life time be a partner in his place, being entitled to the right and interest of the said partner, and he shall get the business done subjecting himself to the aforesaid terms and on that account neither the partnership should be cancelled nor would it come to an end.”

The plaint alleges that the partnership worked at a loss and that by a resolution of the shareholders the plaintiff was authorised to collect the proportionate quotas of the loss from the various shareholders on behalf of the firm, that the father of the defendants having died, all his properties passed to his sons, the defendants, that the first defendant has been taking part in the management of the partnership firm and that the second defendant is liable because the business of the firm has been managed for the benefit of the family. It is established that the defendants' father died in September, 1929, that the firm incurred a loss in the year 1929-1930 and that the defendants on demand paid on 21st March, 1931, their quota towards this loss. The suit was filed in July, 1931, for what is claimed as the proportionate amount of the loss of the firm incurred in the year 1930-31. It has been found as a fact by the lower appellate Court that the first defendant did not become a partner at his father's death or take part in the management of the firm. As a matter of fact in September, 1929, when defendants' father died both the defendants were minors and they could not legally have become partners though they might have been admitted to the benefit of the partnership with reference to S. 247 of the Contract Act which governs the suit. It is established by the decision in *Lancaster v. Alsop*¹, that a covenant by a deceased partner binding his executors to continue the partnership cannot be specifically enforced against the executors and that the effect of the death of the partner coupled with the refusal of the executors to continue the partnership will be the dissolution of the firm. The learned Judge suggests, however, that the surviving partners might have a right of action for damages against the executors for the breach of the covenant of the deceased partner that his representatives should continue the firm.

It is not now argued that the defendants in view of the findings of the lower appellate Court can be held liable for the trading loss qua partners; but it is suggested that the amount may be recovered from them by way of damages for the breach of the contract entered into by their father that the partnership should be continued by his representatives after his death. It seems to me that there are two very grave objections to this contention. One is that the basis of a claim for damages for breach of a covenant to continue a partnership is totally different from the basis of a claim for a proportionate share of the loss from a particular partner. In the latter case all that the plaintiff has to do is to ascertain the total loss, divide it amongst the various shareholders and claim proportionately. But a claim for damages for breach of a covenant to continue a partnership would necessarily be based on the loss which the firm suffered, not by reason of its unsuccessful trading in a particular year, but as a consequence directly flowing from the withdrawal of one of the partners from the firm. Quite conceivably such a claim for damages might be made when the firm as a whole had made a profit. In any case it has no direct relation to the amount of profit or loss made by the firm in a particular year. Incidentally I may observe that the defendants have paid their quota of the actual loss sustained by the working of the business during the year in which their father died and there is little in the evidence to indicate that the firm suffered any loss by the withdrawal of the defendants' father which is not adequately compensated by what has been paid.

A second objection to the remedy suggested by Mr. Sitarama Rao for the appellant is the fact that this is not a remedy which has been sought in the plaint. The plaint proceeds quite clearly on the footing of an obligation under the partnership deed whereby the defendants are bound to pay their quota of the trading losses. This is quite a different action from one in which the firm claims damages for a breach of a covenant to continue the business as a partnership by the representatives of a deceased partner. I say nothing about the further ground on which the plaintiff has been non-suited, namely, his capacity to sue as the sole representative of the firm. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Security—Bond—Construction to be strict—Bond mentioning a condition—Appellant and another liable on the bond—Success of one of them—Refund cannot be claimed unless both succeeded in the appeal.

Surety bonds have to be construed with strictness. A surety can only be held to his bond if the condition of liability has been fulfilled.

Where the appellant and another (defendants) deposited in the trial Court the amount of decree and executed a bond which ran as follows: "If the defendants should succeed in the appeal preferred in the Subordinate Judge's Court we agree that the said amount may be recovered by means of the property given as security and also from us personally and we have given the undermentioned property as a security for the said amount, retaining the same in our possession", but one of the respondents in appeal withdrew the amount on a security bond signed by the other two respondents along with him, on the question whether the appellant on succeeding in the appeal was entitled to a refund when the appeal was dismissed against the other appellant with him.

Held, that since the liability of the sureties in the bond was made dependant on both defendants' succeeding in appeal, the success of the appellant would not entitle him to a refund of the money.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment and order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Cornish dated the 9th day of September, 1936 and passed in appeal against Appellate Order No. 136 of 1931 preferred to the High Court against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Narsapur dated 24th October, 1930 and made in A. S. No. 109 of 1930 (E. P. No. 481 of 1930 in O. S. No. 412 of 1925, District Munsif's Court, Tanuku).

*Veeresa-

v.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The third respondent filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Tanuku against the appellant and his mother-in-law, one Brahmaramba, for the recovery of certain jewels or, in the alternative, damages for conversion, and obtained a decree against both the defendants for the payment of Rs. 1,275-1-0, including costs. The appellant and his mother-in-law filed an appeal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Narsapur and pending the hearing applied for an order staying execution of the decree. The application was granted on the condition that they deposited the full amount of the decree in the trial Court with liberty to the decree-holder to withdraw the amount on furnishing security. The appellant deposited the amount and it was withdrawn by the third respondent on a security bond being signed by the first and the second respondents. The second respondent has died during the pendency of the appeal and his estate is represented by the fourth respondent. The Subordinate Judge set aside the decree of the District Munsif so far as it affected the appellant, but dismissed the appeal of his mother-in-law. As the result of this decision the appellant applied to the District Munsif for an order against the third respondent and the sureties for the refund of the money. The District Munsif granted the application. The sureties challenged the correctness of this order so far as it affected them in an appeal to the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal, basing his decision on the wording of the security bond. Although the third respondent had not appealed the Subordinate Judge also set aside the order as against her. The appellant then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Cornish, J., who concurred in the decision of the Subordinate Judge so far the sureties were concerned, but restored the order of the District Munsif against the third respondent.

Leach, C. J.

It is quite clear from a perusal of the security bond that the decision of Cornish, J., is correct. The bond recites that the defendants, namely, the appellant and his mother-in-law, should deposit the money in Court and the condition of the bond was this:

"If the defendants should succeed in the appeal (preferred) in the Subordinate Judge's Court we agree that the said amount may be recovered by means of the property given as security and also from us personally; and we have given the undermentioned property as a security for the said amount, retaining the same in our possession."

It will be observed that the liability of the sureties is here made dependant on both the defendants succeeding in the appeal. The appellant succeeded, but his mother-in-law failed. We are asked to read the word "defendants" as meaning the defendants or either of them. This would mean reading into the bond something which is not there. Surety bonds have to be construed with strictness. A surety can only be held to his bond if the condition of liability has been fulfilled. The condition of liability has not been fulfilled in the present case. It is unfortunate for the appellant, but no other construction is open to the Court. It is incumbent upon a party especially upon a party who is to be benefited by it, to see that the security bond is properly drawn up. The appellant did not take the precaution which he should have done and he must suffer for his neglect. The appeal will be dismissed with costs in favour of the first respondent.

Mudaliar.

A local inspection of premises made by a Judge should be used by him only to test the accuracy of the evidence let in. He should not make his knowledge the sole evidence for determining the question raised before him, without making a note of his impressions and giving opportunities to the parties to let in counter evidence and explain what he noted at the inspection.

Where therefore in a suit for declaration of plaintiff's right to light and air to a room through a window, the only evidence was that of the plaintiff to the effect that it was the only window, etc., and there was no evidence contra, it is not proper for the Court to base a conclusion on foot of the existence of another window or door in the room as seen by him at a local inspection, without recording it and putting it to the plaintiff in cross-examination.

M. N. Duraiswami Aiyangar for Appellant.

K. S. Narayana Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff is the appellant. She filed the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration of her right to light and air to a room in her house, which she was using as a kitchen. She complained that the window through which she was getting light and air was threatened to be obstructed by a construction which the defendant proposes to put up in his own house. The defendant denied the easement right claimed by the plaintiff. Two issues were raised:

"(1) Has this window been there for the statutory period? (2) If so, will the proposed construction of defendant, have the effect of diminishing the flow of light and air to such an extent as to entitle the plaintiff to the injunction claimed?"

There was only one witness examined at the trial and that is the plaintiff. She gave evidence that the window has been there at least from 1909 when she purchased the property. She also said that that is the only window on the southern side and if it is closed there will be no light and air in the room and that it would not be possible to cook properly. There was no cross-examination except to elicit that in 1924 she put up a chimney to the kitchen and that the smoke will get out through the chimney. No evidence was adduced on the side of the defendant. The learned Judge has found that the plaintiff has established the easement of light and air through the window in the kitchen of the plaintiff. That finding is not challenged before me. The learned Judge made an inspection of the premises on the day prior to the date of the trial. In the judgment he gave various directions which, if observed by the defendant, would, in his opinion, be enough to protect the right of the plaintiff which he finds in her favour. In the judgment there is a reference to a window on the northern side of the plaintiff's room and also to a door way on that side through which he says a fairly good amount of light and air gets into the plaintiff's kitchen. It is complained before me by the appellant's learned Advocate that the window on the northern side is so situated that practically there is no light and air coming through that window. There are also other observations made by the learned Judge which are all evidently based upon the impressions that he formed at the time when he made the local inspection. In cross-examination the defendant did not elicit from the plaintiff any of the facts on which the judgment is now based. Nor did the learned Judge think it necessary to put those questions to the plaintiff and have her answers on those points. The learned Judge has based his judgment solely on the impressions formed by him at the time of his local inspection and has come to a conclusion quite contrary to the only evidence on the point, namely, that if the alterations proposed by the defendant were carried out the room would be rendered useless for the purpose for which it is being used. The Judge did not make any notes of inspection and he has not placed on record what it is that he found on inspection so as to enable this Court to come to an independent conclusion whether his decision is right. In Syed Ahamad Sahib Shutari v. The Magnesite Syndicate, Ltd.,¹ which was decided by Seshagiri Aiyar and Kumaraswami Sastriar, JJ., it is said:

"Even under the old Code it was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that a judgment should not be based solely on the result of the personal inspection by the Judge. (See Kassowji Issur v. G. I. P. Railway Co..) The same reasoning applies to cases instituted under the new Code. (See Ratikshori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose.) The inspection which a Judge makes should be used by him only to test the accuracy of the evidence let in. He should not, without submitting himself to the test of cross-examination make his knowledge the sole evidence for determining the question raised before him. We have no hesitation in holding that the procedure of the learned Judge has seriously prejudiced the appellant."

The decision of Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., in *Municipal Council v. Velayudha Menon*² is also to the same effect. He says:

"I must say that, though it is open to Courts who have to record findings on questions of fact, and though it may also be proper for the Court in proper cases to make local inspection with a view to understand and follow the evidence in the case and to appreciate it properly, I am clear that it is not open to a Court either of first instance or of appeal to base the Court's findings of fact solely on the result of its local inspection nor without giving opportunities to the parties to let in counter evidence and explain what is recorded as the result of the inspection."

4. A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 531.

In the present case, as I said before, the judgment is based solely on the observation made by the Judge at the time of his local inspection and he has not placed on record what it is that he found at the time. These points were not put to the plaintiff and her answers elicited. In this state of the record, I am constrained to reverse the decision of the lower Court and to send the case back for disposal according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

It is not to be understood that I agree with the observations of the lower Court as regards the standard of proof which the plaintiff has got to adduce before succeeding in the suit.

Marumakkathayam Act (XXII of 1932), Ss. 41 and 43 (4)—Tarwad registered—Tavazhi possessing separate properties—Suit for partition maintainable—Tavazhi not governed by S. 43 (4).

On the question whether after a Marumakkathayam tarwad has been registered as impartible under S. 43 of the Marumakkathayam Act (XXII of 1932), a tavazhi of that tarwad which had separate properties is not governed by the provisions of Chapter VI of the Act which permits a partition of such properties as if the tavazhi were a tarwad, Held, that a suit for partition is maintainable under S. 41 of the Act in spite of registration of the main tarwad as impartible.

It is clear that 'tarwad' in cl. (4) of S. 43 means the tarwad which was actually registered as impartible and nothing more; in other words, it is only the property of the tarwad which has been registered as impartible, that is to say, the tarwad's properties that are removed from the operation of Chapter VI of the Act relating to partition till the registration is cancelled. It would not have been intended to affect in any way the specific provisions of S. 41 which say that the provision of the chapter relating to partition

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—The only point that arises in this appeal is whether after a Marumakkathayam tarwad has been registered as impartible under S. 43 of Marumakkathayam Act (XXII of 1932), a tavashi of that tarwad which possesses separate properties is not governed by the provisions of Chapter VI of the Act which permits a partition of such properties as if the tavashi were a tarwad—vide S. 41 of the Act. It is clear from the Chapters V and VI that in the case of tavashies possessing separate properties, the provisions of the two Chapters are made applicable to such tavashies as if they were tarwads—vide Ss. 37 and 41 of the Act, and the reason is obvious because where there are separate properties belonging to a tavashi, so far as the management of the properties and their partition is concerned, there is no reason for making any difference between tavashies possessing separate properties and tarwads. S. 41 runs as follows:—

“The provisions of this chapter shall apply to every tavashi possessing separate properties as if it were a tarwad,” and it is clear from S. 38 that any sub-tavashi represented by the majority of its major members may apply for partition of such tavashi properties. This is a right given in express terms by Ss. 41 and 38 of the Act, and there is therefore no scope for the application of S. 50 (b) of the Act. It has not been contended before us that S. 50 (b) has any bearing on the present case, once it is found that, under Ss. 41 and 38, the right of partition exists in this case. Reliance is however placed on the respondents' side by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri on the provision contained in S. 43 (4) which runs as follows:

“On such registration, the provisions of Chapter VI shall not apply to such tarwad unless and until the Registration is cancelled under S. 44.”

He contends that the word "tarwad" here means not merely the tarwad as defined in the Act but every branch of it, so that once a tarwad is registered as impartible, no tavashi can have its separate properties partitioned between members of the tavashi itself or between its sub-tavashies. There is, in our opinion, no warrant for this construction. In the first place, it is not reasonable to suppose that the Legislature meant to give to members of the tarwad a voice in deciding whether the separate properties of a tavashi in which they have no concern as such should be partible or impartible. Secondly, the word "tarwad" is defined in the Act itself as the group of persons forming a joint family with community of property governed by the Marumakkathayam Law of inheritance. There is not the usual clause "unless the context shows otherwise" in this definition, nor does the context in S. 43 (4) show that the word 'tarwad' is used in any other sense. It is clear that 'tarwad' in cl. (4) of S. 43 means the tarwad which was actually registered as impartible and nothing more; that, in other words, it is only the property of the tarwad which has been registered as impartible, that is to say, the tarwad properties, that are removed from the operation of Chapter VI of the Act relating to partition till the registration is cancelled. It would not have been intended to affect in any way the specific provisions of S. 41 which say that the provision of the Chapter relating to partition shall apply to every tavashi possessing separate properties as if it were a tarwad. We are therefore unable to accept the view of the Court below on this point.

The finding of the lower Court on the first issue to the effect that the suit for partition is not maintainable is set aside. We find that the suit is maintainable under S. 41 of the Act in spite of the registration of the main tarwad as impartible. The appeal is therefore allowed and the suit is remanded to the Court below for disposal according to law after deciding the other issues, as the Court below dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the suit was not maintainable and the other issues have not been decided. The costs in the Court below will be provided for by the Court below in its revised decree. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this appeal to be paid by respondents 1, 8 and 25. The court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal will have to be refunded to the appellants.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 10—'Matter in issue' meaning of—A suit when debarred under the section.

The expression 'the matter in issue' as used in S. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean any matter in issue. The matter in issue in a previously instituted suit obviously refers to the entire subject-matter in dispute and not to one of the issues, however important it may be for the decision of the suit.

Where the petitioner contended that inasmuch as the main point between the parties in the present suit and an earlier one related to the occupancy rights claimed by the petitioner, he was entitled to demand a stay of the present suit, till the appeal against the earlier one was disposed of,

Held, that since the matters in issue in both the suits were not the same, owing to the amounts claimed having been for different periods, S. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code would not debar the trial of the present suit.

Petition under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act and S. 224 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the judgment and order of the Court of the District Munsiff of Tirupati dated 27th January, 1936 and made in I.A. No. 2 of 1936 in S. C. No. 861 of 1935.

B. C. Seshachala Aiyar for Petitioner.

D. R. Krishna Rao for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision against the order of the District Munsiff of Tirupati rejecting the petitioner's application for stay of suit No. 861 of 1935 under S. 10, Civil Procedure Code, until the matter in Appeal No. 6 of 1934 pending in the District Court of Chittoor is decided. It has been urged on behalf of the petitioner that inasmuch as the main contention between the parties in the present suit and in Appeal No. 6 of 1934 relates to the occupancy rights claimed by the petitioner he is entitled to demand a stay. It cannot be disputed that the provisions contained in S. 10 are mandatory in character and when the facts of a particular case invoke the operation of that section, the Courts have no other alternative but to give effect to it and stay the suit. I have therefore to determine if the 'matter in issue' in the present suit is directly or substantially in issue in Appeal No. 6 of 1934, which must be taken to be the continuation of a previously instituted suit.

Munuswami
Mudaliar
v.
Raghupathi.

At this stage it will be convenient to state that the first suit was filed on behalf of the respondent for rent in respect of a particular period and the present suit is in respect of a subsequent period. It is not quite clear from the record which is in the High Court whether the rents claimed in both the suits were for the same plots of land. The Counsel for the respondent asserted before me that they were different. The Counsel for the petitioner, on whom the onus lay to show that the provisions of S. 10, Civil Procedure Code, applied to the facts of this case and that the order of the lower Court was wrong, was unable to deny the fact alleged by the counsel for the respondent. Assuming however for the sake of argument that the area of land comprised in both the suits was identical, the question still remains to be decided if "the matter in issue" in the prior suit is the same. The petitioner's counsel contends that the question of the nature of tenure in both the suits is common and this is, it is urged, the main issue in both the suits. But the expression "the matter in issue" as used in S. 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not mean any matter in issue. The matter in issue in a previously instituted suit obviously refers to the entire subject-matter in dispute and not to one of the issues, however important it may be for the decision of the suit.

In this case, even if the area of the land in both the suits is regarded to be the same, the amount claimed in the latter suit is apparently for a different period from the amount claimed in the former suit. The matters in issue in both the suits are therefore not the same. S. 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not therefore debar the trial of this suit. The revision is accordingly rejected with costs.

It is unfortunate that this petition has been pending for two years although the order passed by the learned judge admitting the revision on 31st August, 1936, was that the Civil Revision Petition would be posted within a month. It is also surprising that the appeal pending in the District Court of Chittoor has not been decided up till now. Both these questions must be investigated and I should be informed of the reasons why the Civil Revision Petition was not posted earlier and how the matter in appeal has not been so far disposed of.

Madras Estates Land Act (IX of 1908), S. 20-A—Order of Collector—Whether High Court can interfere under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908)—Doctrine of res judicata whether applicable to such orders.

Where a Collector of a district passed an order on an application made under S. 20-A of the Madras Estates Land Act, Held, that it was a matter in which the High Court could not interfere under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code.

It is not in every case that parties may be prejudiced by orders passed by Collectors under the Estates Land Act and that the Collector can be deemed to have acted as a Court or that this Court will be justified in interfering under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Applications of the kind contemplated by S. 20-A are not matters to which the doctrine of res judicata can be applied.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Collector of Tinnevely dated 8th February, 1937 and made in D. Dis. No. 274 of 1937.

A. Swaminatha Aiyar and S. Thiagaraja Aiyar for Petitioner.

V. Viyyanna and G. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition asking this Court to revise an order passed by the Collector of Tinnevely on an application made to him by the Zamindar of Sivagiri under S. 20-A of the Madras Estates Land Act. I cannot accede to the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner that this is a matter in which this Court has jurisdiction to interfere under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code. It is not in every case that parties may be prejudiced by orders passed by Collectors under the Estates Land Act and that the Collector can be deemed to have acted as Court or that this Court will be justified in interfering under S. 115, Civil Procedure Code. I have therefore no alternative but to dismiss the revision petition with costs.

In the ordinary course, I should have contented myself with the above order; but it seems to me to be my duty to do what I can to prevent the perpetuation of the mistake into which in my opinion the Collector has fallen in this case. I am not concerned with the merits or the validity of the order passed by Mr. Warren on a previous occasion, that is, on 4th April, 1936, nor even with the contention that that order is vitiated by his omission to observe the statutory rules. I only note that I am told by the learned Counsel for the respondent that Mr. Warren's order was passed before the present statutory rules came into force and that he acted in accordance with the rules then in force. I only propose to point out that the later order of 8th February, 1937, passed by a successor of Mr. Warren which is now sought to be revised is not right in so far as it purports to be based on the doctrine of res judicata. There are no doubt certain matters contemplated by the Estates Land Act in respect of which the doctrine of res judicata will apply. But I am unable to concur in the view that applications of the kind contemplated by S. 20-A of the Estates Land Act are matters to which that doctrine can be legitimately applied. That section contemplates that the power thereby conferred on the District Collector may be exercised from time to time according to exigencies and changing requirements. The use of the expression "no longer required" in cl. (a) clearly indicates that it could not of course have been the intention of the legislature that a party could go on applying every month or every year under that provision without alleging any change of circumstance or some other sufficient cause, since the passing of the previous order. If in such cases the Collector dismisses the application, it will only be on the ground that as circumstances have not changed and no special cause is shown there is no reason for changing his opinion. It is a mistake to suppose that this is exactly and literally the doctrine of res judicata in its well-understood sense. It is because the order of the Collector now complained against is wholly based on his view of the application of this doctrine and not upon his view as to the merits of the claim that I have thought it necessary to make the above remarks.

Hindu Law—Claim of maintenance—Wife living away from husband in adultery for a long time—Proof of her subsequent conduct as clean, necessary for grant of starving maintenance.

If a wife, who has left her husband's house as a result of her own adultery and has voluntarily lived apart from her husband for a considerable number of years, were to compel him to take her back into his house or to pay her a sum for maintenance, and on his refusal to do so, she ought to be required to state the truth before the Court and to offer evidence that she has repented for her immorality and has been living a clean life for some appreciable time before the suit. In the absence of any such plea of evidence, the suit for maintenance can be dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput in A. S. No. 315 of 1934 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Poonamalle in O. S. No. 479 of 1933.

M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar for Appellant.

K.S. Champakesa Aiyangar for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, a Hindu wife, sued her husband for maintenance. The parties married in or about 1920 and lived together until 1926 when there was a breach. According to the findings of the learned District Judge, the occasion for this breach was the misconduct of the plaintiff and her adultery with her brother-in-law, resulting in a panchayat which excommunicated her. Shortly after this breach, she went away to Penang where she lived until 1933. In 1933 she returned to India and almost at once started proceedings against her husband for maintenance. The basis of her suit is an allegation that she had been cruelly ill-treated and driven from the house. The plaint contains no suggestion that she herself was in any way to blame or that she had ever strayed from the path of virtue. The District Judge finding that the basis of her plaint was untrue and that the allegations of the defendant regarding her misconduct had been established, dismissed the suit.

It is now contended in second appeal that even assuming the truth of the findings of the learned District Judge, the dismissal of the suit is improper and that the wife should have been awarded at least what is called in the text books, 'starving' maintenance. The contention is that a husband is obliged to provide for his wife; that this obligation is nullified only by the open and continuous misconduct of the wife and that if she has gone wrong but subsequently repents and offers to return to her husband, he is obliged to provide for her minimum requirements. It seems to me that if a wife, who has left her husband's house as a result of her own adultery and has voluntarily lived apart from him for a considerable number of years, is to compel him to take her back into his house or to pay her a sum for maintenance, on his refusal to do so, she ought to be required to state the truth before the Court and to offer evidence that she has repented for her immorality and has been living a clean life for some appreciable period before the suit.

So much seems to follow from the decision of Subramania Aiyar, J., in *Kandasami Pillai v. Murugammal*¹, which was a case in which a decree for maintenance was set aside on the ground of recent, open and continuous misconduct on the part of the wife. She was held not be entitled to bare maintenance on the basis that a wife who has once been guilty of infidelity must show not merely that she was living a chaste life at the time of the suit, but also that her life had been chaste for a sufficiently long period to justify the conclusion that she was a reformed woman. That principle has been applied by a Bench in a case reported in *Chirukula Nagalakshamma v. Chirukula Viswanatha Sastri*². It seems to me quite clear that a woman cannot file a suit on the basis of her own chastity and her husband's misconduct and, when she is proved to be unchaste and her husband's conduct is found to be irreproachable, fall back upon a plea of infidelity and subsequent reformation which has never been advanced and is not supported by the necessary evidence.

To my mind if an unchaste wife wishes to enforce her right to bare maintenance against her husband on the ground she has ceased to live a life of unchastity and returned to the path of virtue, that case should be definitely pleaded and supported by definite evidence. In the absence of any such plea or evidence, the decision of the learned District Judge was in my opinion correct. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Malicious prosecution—Suit for—Nature of and incidents pertaining to—Burden of proof—Reasonable and probable cause—Malice—How far in proceedings under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, a suit for malicious prosecution could be justified—Representative action for damages in tort—Whether can lie.

In order to sustain a suit for malicious prosecution of proceedings under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, there must be proof that the defendants moved the Magistrate to take proceedings and that proceedings were actually taken. It must be shown that the final termination was in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiff must prove that the institution of the proceedings was malicious and that it was without reasonable and probable cause. Further it must, in all such cases, be proved that there was legal damage suffered as a consequence of the institution of the proceedings. It is not sufficient merely to prove that there was a petition in which an allegation was made of a danger to the public peace by withholding of a private right.

The burden of proof in such a suit lies on the plaintiff. The plaintiff has to show not only that the petition was malicious but that the petitioner had no reasonable and probable cause for bringing it. To show this, it is necessary not merely to point to the eventual failure of the petitioners to establish the civil right which they claimed; there should also be some indication that they did not believe that they had this civil right for which they were contending.

Where the appellants were claiming certain rights in a festival which they had been exercising for a long period and those rights had been denied to them on the ground that they had failed to pay certain customary contributions to the funds of the temple out of which the festival was financed, and it was a very arguable question, granting there had been a default in the payment of contribution, whether the majority faction was justified in enforcing payments by refusing facilities to the minority faction to take part in a religious festival,

Held, that the facts established did not justify the inference of absence of probable and reasonable cause or the presence of malice for a petition to the Magistrate under S. 144 of Criminal Procedure Code.

It is well established that a representative suit does not lie for damages in tort, though when a representative suit properly framed for other reliefs, incidentally involves a claim for damages put forward by certain individuals among the plaintiffs, such a claim has been permitted to be ancillary to the main suit. But the plaint in this suit quite clearly sets forth the representative character of the suit and the damages for which the suit is filed are damages which, to a considerable extent, are common to the faction and not peculiar to the two plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants were defendants in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution arising out of an application which they preferred to the Magistrate against the plaintiffs and others praying the Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The trouble arose out of a dispute between two sections of Sengundars with reference to the conduct of a festival managed by their community in the village temple. The appellants belong to the minority faction, which, owing to dissensions, had refused to pay its subscriptions to the funds out of which the festival is financed. As a consequence of this refusal, the majority faction, represented by the plaintiffs in this case, refused to allow the appellants' party certain privileges at the festival. The one with which we are now concerned was the privilege of making an offering known as Deeparadhana before the God, and having it returned intact after it had been offered. Although the appellants asserted before the Magistrate that their offerings had been refused, the whole grievance appears to have been that they were not allowed to get back their offerings intact as they thought they should be allowed. The complaint to the Magistrate, Ex. VI, describes the history of the quarrel, states that the respondents were preventing the petitioners from participating in the Deeparadhana as per mamool and that the continuance of the festival in view of this dispute is likely to involve serious breach of the peace; the petitioners therefore pray the Magistrate either to direct the majority faction and the Gurukkal to give the petitioners the customary facilities for Deeparadhana, or to prevent the conduct of the festival in the absence of such facilities. The Magistrate apparently went to the village on the same day; the respondents to the petition asked time to file their objections; consequently, on that same day, an order was issued (Ex. E) temporarily prohibiting the festival. On the 10th, that is to say, three days later, both parties presented an adjournment petition with a view to compromise. On the 13th, the Magistrate passed orders referring to the admissions regarding the customary levy of contributions, stating that though the respondents might not be justified in enforcing the payment by refusing Deeparadhana, there was no necessity to prevent the conduct of the rest of the festival in view of the undertaking of the respondents that it should be peaceful and of the arrangements made for a police guard. After this order the festival was concluded.

There were two other suits filed by the appellants, one relating to their rights in the Kappukattu ceremony with which we are not now concerned and the other relating to the rights in the Deeparadhana ceremony. The appellants succeeded in all the suits in the trial Court and in all the suits failed before the lower appellate Court. I have passed orders dismissing the second appeals from the decisions in the two connected suits mainly on the ground that they relate to matters of ritual outside the jurisdiction of the Civil Court.

In the present second appeal, various contentions have been raised; firstly, it has been contended that there was no prosecution properly speaking and therefore that no suit for damages for malicious prosecution can lie. Now, with reference to this contention, it cannot, I think, be denied that a suit for damages for malicious prosecution can be based on the institution of proceedings under S. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, provided that the necessary facts are established. So much has been laid down by this Court in Appala Narasimhulu v. Mahani Hari Narayana Das Bavaji and it seems to me that the view taken by the Bench which decided that case is one which necessarily follows from the principles upon which the action for malicious prosecution is based. These have been succinctly stated in the case of *Wiffen v. Bailey*², wherein it is laid down that an action for malicious prosecution can be supported by any one of three sorts of damage:—firstly, damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous; secondly, damage to his person, as where a man is put in danger to lose his life, limb or liberty; thirdly, damage to his property, as where he is forced to expend money in necessary charges to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused. Buckley, L. J., goes on to point out that an action for malicious prosecution may lie where the proceedings are civil and not criminal, though in the ordinary civil action, any damage which the defendants may have suffered by reason of the proceedings is normally compensated by the award of costs, so that there is nothing left to justify a separate action. The point to note, however, is that the action for malicious prosecution does not depend on the institution of a prosecution in the narrowest sense of the term. The basis of the action is the malicious and unjustified institution of unsuccessful proceedings in a court which have resulted in damage to the good name, the person or the property of the individual prosecuted. The fact that an action of this kind lies as a result of proceedings by way of civil injunction or attachment of a temporary nature which could not have been compensated by the award of costs in the suit, is recognised by the provisions of S. 95, Criminal Procedure Code. The institution of proceedings under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, may be at the instance of a party to the quarrel which is likely to lead to a breach of peace; it may be at the instance of some disinterested person; or as, in the great majority of cases, it may be at the instance of the Police or as a result of action suo motu by the Magistrate. I take it that the action for malicious prosecution as a result of such proceedings would normally be brought only in the case of proceedings brought at the instance of a party to the quarrel, though that need not necessarily be the only ground for such an action. Again, it must be remembered that orders under S. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code vary widely in their scope and effect. They may have the most drastic effect in curtailing the liberties of individual or communities or they may restrict for a considerable period the use by a man of his private property. On the other hand, in a great number of cases, their effect is merely to control the route of processions, restrict slightly the hours in which property shall be enjoyed in a particular way and generally to cause the minimum of interference with private rights in the interests of the public peace. The point is that it should not be thought that any unwarranted attempt to secure a Magistrate's order under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, will justify a suit for malicious prosecution. There must, in order to sustain such a suit, be proof that the defendants moved the Magistrate to take proceedings and that proceedings were taken. It must be shown that the final termination was in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff must prove that the institution of the proceedings was malicious and that it was without reasonable and probable cause. Further, it must, I think, in all such cases be proved that there was legal damage suffered as a consequence of the institution of these proceedings. In ordinary criminal prosecutions, the damage will be inferred from the very fact of an accusation of a crime involving moral turpitude and necessarily damnifying the good name of the accused. But when we are dealing with quasi civil proceedings such as those under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, in order to establish the essential fact of damage, it is not sufficient merely to prove that there was a petition in which an allegation was made of a danger to the public peace by the withholding of a private right.

In the present case, it has been established that the appellants did institute magisterial proceedings as a result of which the festival was stopped for a period of some days. It is also established that the result of these proceedings was the vacation of the temporary order and the decision of the magistrate that there was no danger of a breach of the peace which would justify the continuance of the prohibition of the holding of the festival. There was no finding by the Magistrate that the complaint preferred by the petitioners of refusal of the Deeparadhana facilities to them was unfounded. But it must be held that the proceedings initiated by the appellants terminated in favour of the plaintiffs. Both the courts below have held that the plaintiffs suffered damages as a result of those proceedings, the damages consisting of the legal expenses which they incurred, the cost of the Samprokshana ceremony necessitated by the stoppage of the festival and the deterioration of the provisions which had been made ready for the rest of the festival. The trial Court, although it found in the connected suit that the refusal of the Deeparadhana facilities was unjustified, did not go into the question of reasonable and probable cause, but held that there was no prosecution and that any damage that was sustained was sustained by the plaintiffs.

owing to their own delay in putting forward their case to the Magistrate. The lower appellate Court finds, to my mind correctly, that the institution of proceedings before the Magistrate under S. 144 may be sufficient ground for a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. On the question of absence of reasonable and probable cause, the learned Subordinate Judge comes to the conclusion that because he himself has decided that the appellants' case with reference to their rights to Deepa-radhana was unsustainable they cannot have had reasonable and probable cause for presenting the petition to the Magistrate. He also comes to the conclusion that the only witness for the appellants had not given any very satisfactory reason for apprehending a breach of the peace on the 8th day of the festival, when the previous seven days had gone on without trouble; and he concludes that the conduct of the appellants in applying to the Magistrate was apparently to wreak their vengeance against the other side for successfully carrying on the festival. Now it is established that though the basis for a finding of absence of reasonable and probable cause and the presence of malice consists in matters of fact, the inference that should be drawn from the proved facts, and the question whether these facts are sufficient to establish the absence of reasonable and probable cause and the presence of malice, are matters of law upon which interference in second appeal is permissible—vide *Herniman v. Smith*¹ and *Nagendra Nath Ray v. Basanta Das Bairagya*².

Narayana

I must say that the decision of the lower appellate Court on this question is not particularly satisfactory. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have overlooked the fact that the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiffs in this matter. The plaintiffs had to show not only that the petition was malicious but that the petitioners had no reasonable and probable cause for bringing it. And to show this, it was necessary not merely to point to the eventual failure of the petitioners to establish the civil right which they claimed; there should also be some indication that they did not believe that they had this civil right for which they were contending. The question which the learned Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the majority party was not one entirely free from difficulty. The trial court took a different view from that which the learned Subordinate Judge has taken and the decision in the second appeal was not so much on the merits of the claim of the minority party, as on the power of the Civil Courts to adjudicate upon it. It is indisputable that the rights which the appellants were claiming in this festival were rights which they had been exercising for a long period in the past. Those rights had been denied to them solely on the ground that they had failed to pay certain customary contributions to the funds out of which the festival was financed; and it was certainly a very arguable question, granting that there had been a default in the payment of contributions, whether the majority faction was justified in enforcing payments of contributions by refusing the usual facilities to the dissenting faction to take part in this religious festival. The argument put forward in this connection was that the payment of contributions should have been enforced by the usual machinery of caste discipline and not by the withholding of religious privileges. I do not propose to say whether this argument is a correct one or not; but it is, at any rate, an argument which cannot be dismissed as frivolous. Surely, therefore, the appellants in demanding the privilege which had been accorded to them in the past without question and had been refused to them on account of the default in the matter of payment of subscriptions, when it is not clearly established, that the denial of the privilege was the customary way of enforcing liability for subscriptions, cannot be said to have manifestly acted without reasonable and probable cause in asserting their rights before the Magistrate. Whether they were acting without reasonable and probable cause in saying that a breach of the peace was likely as a result of the withholding of those rights is a more debateable question. But at any rate, feelings must have been somewhat strained at the time and it is noticeable that the Magistrate, though he cancelled the order stopping the processions, did so on an undertaking by the majority party that they should keep the peace, at the same time providing for police facilities to see that this undertaking was carried out. In these circumstances I do not think, that it can be said to have been proved positively that the appellants had no reason to apprehend a danger of a breach of the peace owing to the refusal of the Deeparadhana facilities to their party. On the question of malice, the learned Subordinate Judge conjectures that the minority party were trying to wreak their vengeance for a successful conduct of the festival. There appears to be little or no basis in the evidence for this conclusion. The only witness who speaks to malice had to be asked the same question three times before he could remember the answer which was expected of him. I am therefore of opinion that the facts established did not justify the inference of absence of reasonable and probable cause or the presence of malice as the motive for a petition to the Magistrate. It seems to me quite probable on the facts established that the appellants honestly believed in the justice of their claim and honestly thought that the denial of these alleged rights might lead to a disturbance of the peace.

Narayana
Mudali
v.
Kalathi
Mudali.

There is a further question which has been argued and that is with reference to the frame of the suit in which the two plaintiffs—one of them being a trustee of the temple—claimed to represent the seventeen persons who were impleaded as respondents in the petition to the Magistrate. No application under O. 1, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, appears to have been filed. The case proceeded throughout as if the plaintiffs on the record could bring an action for the damages suffered collectively by the party to which they belonged. Objections to the frame of the action was taken in the written statement and though the proper issue was not framed, the Court framed an issue regarding misjoinder which had no point unless it was a somewhat unsuccessful attempt to put in issue the question of the frame of the suit in its semi-representative character. It is, I think, well established that a representative suit does not lie for damages in tort, though when a representative suit properly framed for other reliefs incidentally involves a claim for damages put forward by certain individuals among the plaintiffs, such a claim has been permitted to be urged as ancillary to the main suit—vide *Kumaravelu Chettiar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ and *Katha Pillai v. Kanakasundaram Pillai*². It is true that the present suit has not been filed with the formalities prescribed for representative actions. But the plaint quite clearly sets forth the representative character of the suit and the damages for which the suit is filed are damages which, to a considerable extent, are common to the faction and not peculiar to the two plaintiffs. It is argued for the respondents that the two plaintiffs may be entitled to such damages as can be lawfully ascribed to them personally. It seems to me that this is not the correct way in which the suit should have been framed; but if I had been disposed to hold that the plaintiffs deserved to succeed on the merits, I should have remanded the suit for a fresh finding on the question of the damages which affect personally the plaintiffs themselves.

In the view which I have taken on the main question, however, this is unnecessary. The appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), amended (1930), S. 86—Property taxed—Melwaram interest alone in the assessee—Right to tax the entire interest whether proper—Definition of 'owner'.

Under S. 86 of the Madras District Municipalities Act (amended 1930) the person liable to pay tax is the owner of the premises. In order to be owner he must be in the same category of a person receiving or entitled to receive rents and profits of a property.

Where the property in respect of which the respondent, who was entitled to receive the rents and profits, was limited to his melwaram interest,

Held, that there was no provision in the statute by which a person in the respondent's position could be assessed in respect of the interest of another person, a kudivaramdar, and have a right to recoup himself for the tax he had paid in respect of the other person's interest or the other person's property. The wording of S. 86 does not entitle the municipality to demand from the respondent anything more than a tax upon the interest in the premises of which he was the owner, and that the assessment made against him upon the value of the whole of the interests in the property was wrong.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam in O. S. No. 83 of 1932.

The Advocate-General (Sir A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) and K. Subramaniam for Appellants.

K. Umamaheswaran for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Gentle, J.—In the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, the respondent sued the first appellant and the Secretary of State for India in Council claiming the sum of Rs. 4,141-0-8 representing the difference between the amount which he alleged he was liable to pay for property tax during the years 1929-1930 and 1930-1931 in respect of his interest in the Anakapalli estate within the precincts of the Municipality and the amount which in fact he had paid. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in his favour and passed a decree for the repayment by the Municipality to the respondent of the above sum together with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. Against this decision the first appellant filed this appeal and later the Municipality of Anakapalli was joined as the second appellant. Other claims were made in the suit to which it is unnecessary to refer, as no contest arises in regard to them in this appeal.

The respondent is the Zamindar of Chemudu and proprietor of the melwaram interest of the Anakapalli estate which is situated within municipal precincts of the second appellant. The estate comprises ryoti agricultural lands, the ryots being entitled to the kudiwaram interest. To this estate the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act apply. The respondent was assessed by the second appellant at a sum of Rs. 74,447-0-0 which represents the value of the melwaram and kudiwaram interests and is an amount for which the lands of the estate might reasonably be expected to let. The respondent contended that as the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act applied and controlled the income from the lands and prohibited enhancement of any rents save as is provided by the Act, the assessment in respect of which he was required to pay property tax should be based upon the actual income he received in respect of his melwaram interest during the relevant years. This income amounted to Rs. 37,698-11-1. There is no dispute in regard to the above figures and it is not suggested that the respondent's income could have been increased at any time. The point for decision is whether the respondent should be required to pay tax upon the higher or the lower of the above figures.

The respondent could never be in a position to receive the income from both the melwaram and the kudiwaram interests, the ryots alone being entitled to the latter. The point for decision depends upon the construction of a few of the sections of the Madras District Municipalities Act V of 1920. It is somewhat academic at the present time inasmuch as by the Madras District Municipalities Amendment Act of 1930 the provisions of S. 79 of the Local Boards Act have been incorporated into the statute and provision is also made for the collection of taxes in equal shares from the landholders and tenants.

The relevant provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920 (hereinafter called the Act) at the time of assessments in this matter, are as follows:

" S. 78. (1) Every Municipal Council may levy (a) a property-tax."

" S. 81. (1) The property-tax shall be levied at a consolidated rate on all buildings and lands within municipal limits;"

" S. 82. (2) "The annual value of lands and buildings shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which they may reasonably be expected to let from month to month or from year to year."

" S. 86. The property-tax shall be paid by the owner of assessed premises."

The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the appellants contended that the property-tax authorised in S. 78 (1) means a tax upon the totality of the value of the whole of the lands including, in the case of ryoti agricultural lands, both the melwaram and kudiwaram interests. He referred us to the Rajah of Pittapuram v. The Revenue Divisional Officer, a case under the Land Acquisition Act for the ascertainment of the value of lands which included melwaram and kudiwaram interests. At page 646 Sir John Wallis, C.J., pointed out that the amount to be ascertained had to be apportioned among the parties according to their respective interests, and the land to be acquired had to be valued in the first instance by including all interests in it. Later he said that the fact that neither the landlord nor the tenant could utilize the land for building purposes without the concurrence of the other made no difference. The difference between the market value and the value of the tenant's interest would represent the landlord's interest. It is to be seen that a distinction is emphasised between the two respective interests although for the purposes of the Land Acquisition Act and the ascertainment of the total value, all interests were to be grouped together.

Before the amendments, which were introduced by the Amending Act of 1930, S. 82 of the Act was not really applicable to agricultural lands and it is probable that the legislature may not have considered the possibility of an estate, like the Anakapalli estate, lying within same municipal limits and therefore provision in regard to taxation of such lands might not have been contemplated as being required. Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants and the respondents both agree that the owner of the melwaram interest alone cannot let out the whole of the lands but together with the owner of the kudiwaram right the whole of the lands could be so let. That of course would be subject to an agreement between the respective owners of those interests. S. 82(2) of the Act is a means to ascertain the annual rental value which a hypothetical tenant would pay for the whole of the lands. This income could not be obtained by the respondent alone. He is entitled to receive not the income from the whole property but only in respect of his limited interest. By S. 86 of the Act the property-tax is payable by the owner of the assessed premises. To obtain an assessment based upon the letting value of the whole of the property, the respondent's and the ryot's interests would have to be taken together and if that is the basis upon which under this Act the Municipality is entitled to call upon the respondent to pay a tax, then it must follow that in arriving at a sum at which they have assessed him the value of the premises or the interest in the premises of which he is not the owner and in respect of which he is not entitled to the income would have to be taken into account. Whatever may be the effect of S. 82 (2) as to the valuation of an estate such as the one of which the respondent is the owner of the melwaram interest, one must look at S. 86 in order to see what could be demanded of the respondent. That section, as pointed out, provides that the tax shall be paid by the owner of the assessed premises. S. 3 (17) defines "owner" as including the person for the time being receiving or entitled to receive the rents or profits of the property. It has been contended that by its phraseology this definition may not be exhaustive. But returning to S. 86 of the Act once again, the person liable to pay tax is the owner of the premises. Although perhaps the definition of owner is not exhaustive, it does not extend the definition to a person who is not entitled to receive and does not receive income from property of which he is not the owner. In order to be an 'owner' he must be in the same category as a person receiving or entitled to receive rents and profits of a property. In our view this being a taxing statute it must be construed strictly. If there is any doubt, the doubt must be exercised in favour of the tax-payer. There can be no doubt that a Municipality is not entitled to demand of a subject taxes which legislation has not authorised and has not cast upon a subject a liability to pay. Under the statute the one liable to pay property-tax is the owner of the premises and that is a person who is in a category analogous to someone who is entitled to receive rents and profits of the property. The property in respect of which the respondent is entitled to receive the rents and profits is limited to the melwaram interest. There is no provision in the statute by which a person in the respondent's position could be assessed in respect of the interest of another person and have a right to recoup himself for the tax he has paid in respect of the other person's interest or the other person's property. In our view the wording of S. 86 does not entitle the municipality to demand from the respondent anything more than a tax upon the interest in the premises of which he is the owner, and that the assessment made against him upon the value of the whole of the interests in the property is wrong. The respondent is entitled to recover from the appellants the amount for which he sued in the Court below. The result is that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur dated 12th August, 1938, in I. A. No. 78 of 1938 and passed in S. C. S. No. 600 of 1935.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—A decree having been passed against the petitioners, the decree-holder applied for execution to the Court of the District Munsif, Thiruvarur. The petitioners then applied for a stay under the provisions of S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1938, in order that they might prefer an application under S. 19 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Thiruvarur, for the scaling down of the debt. On the 11th April, 1938, the District Munsif granted a stay. S. 20 contains the following proviso:—

"Provided that where within sixty days after the application for stay has been granted the judgment-debtor does not apply to the Court which passed the decree for relief under S. 19 or where an application has been so made and is rejected, the decree shall be executed as it stands, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act to the contrary."

The petitioners had therefore sixty days in which to apply to the Subordinate Judge. The Court of the Subordinate Judge closed for the summer vacation in the third week of April, 1938 and did not reopen until the 20th June, 1938. As the result of the Court being closed the petitioners were not in a position to file the application for a period of eight weeks, but filed it on the reopening day, that is, seventy days after the stay order had been passed. The petitioners, however, contended that they were within time and relied on S. 4 of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge refused to accept this argument and formed the opinion that the filing of the application within sixty days of the stay order was a condition precedent to their right to apply to the Court for relief. He considered that the decision in *Chenchuramana Reddi v. Arunachalam*¹ applied. On this reasoning the petition was dismissed. The petitioners have applied to this Court for revision of the Subordinate Judge's order.

The scheme of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act is to provide for the scaling down of debts due by agriculturists. S. 7 of the Act states that notwithstanding any law, custom, contract or decree of Court to the contrary, all debts payable by an agriculturist at the commencement of the Act, shall be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of Chapter II. S. 19 provides for the scaling down of debts due under decrees passed before the commencement of the Act. Where a Court has passed a decree for the repayment of a debt it shall on the application of a judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist apply the provisions of the Act notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, and amend the decree in accordance with the Act or enter up satisfaction as the case may be. By virtue of S. 20, a Court is bound to stay execution proceedings against an agriculturist on application made by him. I have already referred to the proviso to this section, which gives him sixty days in which to make an application to the trial Court for scaling down the debt. If the proviso to S. 20 can be read as fixing a period of limitation there can be no doubt that the application here was filed in time.

S. 29 of the Limitation Act applies inter alia S. 4 to a special or local law unless such law expressly excludes S. 4. S. 4 states that where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day that the Court reopens. For the petitioners it is said that the proviso to S. 20 fixes the period of limitation for an application by an agriculturist judgment-debtor when a decree is being executed against him. It is a special provision inserted in the Act to meet the case where an agriculturist against whom a decree has been passed has not taken the steps contemplated by S. 19 and he finds that the decree-holder is taking active steps against him. I consider that this is the correct interpretation of S. 20. The period of limitation fixed by S. 20 has no application in any other circumstance. Reading S. 19 in conjunction with S. 7 it would appear that the intention of the legislature was to fix no period of limitation in ordinary circumstances. So long as a debt is enforceable a debtor has a right to apply at any time for the scaling down of the debt, except in the circumstances contemplated by S. 20. In such circumstances, there is a period of limitation and it is sixty days from the date on which the application for a stay is granted. If the debtor has not previously made an application under S. 19, the decree-holder is at liberty to apply for execution of the decree as it stands, but the judgment-debtor is still allowed to apply for relief under the Act, provided he applies within the time fixed.

The decision in *Chenchuramana Reddi v. Arunachalam*¹ has no application here. In that case the Court held that the period of three months fixed in S. 9 (1) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not a period of limitation, but is a condition precedent to an adjudication. In other words, unless an application for adjudication is filed within three months of the act of insolvency complained of a petition does not lie. S. 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act bears no analogy to S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, and the conclusion arrived by the Subordinate Judge was based on a false premise. The application was in time and the petitioners are entitled to the relief they seek. My learned brother agrees with me and the case will therefore be remitted to the Subordinate Judge to be dealt with in the light of this judgment. The petitioners are entitled to their costs.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—I concur in the judgment just delivered by my Lord, the Chief Justice, and would only add that even if the period of sixty days referred to in S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1938, be not strictly regarded as a period of limitation for an application under S. 19, the result would be the same. For, apart from S. 20, there is no time limit for such an application. It is clear from S. 7 that the debtor is entitled to the benefit of the scaling down of his debt in accordance with the Act so long as the debt is outstanding and enforceable. His right to apply under S. 19 must therefore be taken to accrue de die in diem. His application would thus Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II of 1894), S. 15—Rules under—Regrouping of villages—Appointment of karnam by village proprietor—Excessive exercise of powers—Vetoing by village proprietor—Fresh appointment by Revenue Divisional Officer—Powers of—Validity of such appointment.

Where the plaintiff was appointed by the proprietor of a village from out of a class or group of persons from whom the proprietor had no legal right to make an appointment and the appointment was vetoed by the Revenue Divisional Officer by an executive act not based on any statutory power and there was an appointment of the first defendant which would be perfectly legal, provided there was a vacancy at that time,

Held, that a proprietor under the Act had no power of appointment except that which is conferred by S. 15. That power is only a power to appoint a person whom he may consider to be best qualified from among the families of the last holders of the defunct offices of the same class as the new office created in the new village. If when purporting to exercise that power the proprietor goes outside the field of selection and appoints a stranger or a person who is not a member of the families of the incumbents of the defunct offices of the same class, he is not only arrogating to himself a power which he does not possess under the statute, but he is in fact encroaching upon the residuary power of the Revenue Divisional Officer to fill the vacancy in case it is not filled by the proprietor. If the appointment of the plaintiff by the proprietor derives no validity from the statute, the plaintiff must be deemed to be at most a mere personal servant of the proprietor and not a holder of a statutory office and it would follow that the proprietor's appointment does not affect the existence of a vacancy for the statutory office and that no valid appointment having been made by the proprietor within the time allowed, the Revenue Divisional Officer's order appointing the first defendant would be legal, even though he has no statutory power to interfere with an appointment made by the proprietor within the powers conferred by law.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises questions relating to the powers of the proprietor and the Revenue Divisional Officer in making appointments under S. 15 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village-Service Act (II of 1894) in a case of re-grouping of existing villages. The plaintiff was a karnam of one of the villages affected by the re-grouping. In the new group the proprietor appointed the plaintiff, not askarnam, but as headman. He did not actually take office owing to the fact that when the report of the appointment was received, after some correspondence, the Revenue Divisional Officer set aside the appointment and, purporting to act under S. 11 (2) of the Act, appointed the first defendant who admittedly was qualified for the appointment. The plaintiff filed the suit for a declaration that the appointment of the first defendant was illegal. The suit was decreed in the trial Court. But before the appeal against this decision was heard, the proprietor on the basis of the decision of the District Munsif, treating the office as vacant by reason of that decision, made a fresh appointment and this time he appointed the first defendant, that is, the person actually substituted for his own first nominee by the original order of the Revenue Divisional Officer which had been declared illegal by the District Munsif. The Revenue Divisional Officer accepted this appointment; so that when the suit came before the District Judge in appeal the plaintiff was confronted, not by the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer which had been found to be illegal, but by a subsequent order of the Revenue Divisional Officer confirming an apparently legal appointment of the first defendant by the proprietor. The learned District Judge dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

Now, when there is a re-grouping of villages, the powers of appointment to village offices in the new group are governed by S. 15 of the Act which lays down that, by reason of re-grouping, new hereditary offices shall be created in the new village and in choosing persons to fill such new offices the proprietor shall select the persons whom he may consider the best qualified from among the families of the last holders of the offices which have been abolished and shall report his action to the Revenue Officer in charge of the division. By a rule framed under the Act, embodied in Appendix V of Board's Standing O. 147, it has been laid down that the proprietor should select a person from among the incumbents of the previously existing offices of the same class as that constituted; and it seems to me that this rule undoubtedly interprets the spirit of S. 15 (1), the wording of which is not so specific, though I have no doubt that it was not the intention of the legislature to give incumbents of the talayari's office which has been abolished a right to claim that they should be considered for the appointment to the new headman's office and vice versa. It must have been the intention of the section that incumbents of each office abolished, should have a right to have their claims considered to the new office of the same class created and not to an office of a different class for which they might well be entirely unqualified. It follows that the order of the proprietor appointing the plaintiff as headman of the suit village was not in accordance with the powers conferred upon him by S. 15 of the Act.

The scheme of the Act provides no remedy for an appointment by the proprietor purporting to be made under S. 15 but not complying with the provisions of that section. There is no right of appeal laid down in the Act nor is there any right of suit similar to that given to an aggrieved person when the question is one of succession to an existing office. It would in my opinion be in accordance with the spirit of the Act for the Board of Revenue to exercise its rule-making power under S. 32 and to provide for the contingency of the proprietor making appointments in excess of his powers under S. 15. But so far as I can gather, no such rule has been framed. The rules under the Act are embodied in Appendix V to Board's Standing O. 147. Board's Standing O. 149 contains what appear to be executive instructions for the working of the Act and there is nothing in the form of this order to suggest that it embodies statutory rules. Sub-S. 3 (2) of that order as it stood at the time of the present suit, contained a direction to the Revenue Divisional Officer to make a selection himself if the proprietor should select a person other than a member of the families of the last holder. That provision was deleted in 1935, but in any case it is not shown to be part of any rule framed under the statutory rule-making power conferred by S. 32 of the Act.

The position therefore seems to me that the plaintiff was appointed by the proprietor illegally from out of a class of persons from whom the proprietor had no legal right to make an appointment. That appointment was vetoed by the Revenue Officer by an executive act not based on any statutory power. After the suit was decreed there was an appointment of the first defendant which would be perfectly legal, provided that there was a vacancy at that time. It seems to me that a proprietor under this Act in a case of re-grouping has no power of appointment except that which is conferred by S. 15. That power is only a power to appoint a person whom he may consider to be best qualified from among the families of the last holders of the defunct offices of the same class as the new office created in the new village. If when purporting to exercise that power he goes outside the field of selection and appoints a stranger or a person who is not a member of the families of the incumbents of the defunct offices of the same class, he is not only arrogating to himself a power which he does not possess under the statute, but he is in fact encroaching upon the residuary power of the Revenue Divisional Officer to fill the vacancy in case it is not filled by the proprietor. If the appointment of the plaintiff by the proprietor derives no validity from the statute, the plaintiff must be deemed to be at most a mere personal servant of the proprietor and not the holder of a statutory office. It seems to follow that the proprietor's appointment does not affect the existence of a vacancy for the statutory office and that no valid appointment having been made by the proprietor within the time allowed, the Revenue Divisional Officer's order appointing the first defendant would be legal, even though he has no statutory power to interfere with an appointment made by the proprietor within the powers conferred by law.

Even otherwise, assuming that the appointment by the proprietor is illegal and that the cancellation of his order and the appointment of the first defendant by the Revenue Divisional Officer are also illegal, what is the position? The plaintiff cannot base his suit on possession, for he never took possession of the suit office. He cannot base his suit on title, for he can derive no title to a statutory office by reason of an appointment which is beyond the statutory powers of a proprietor. He is therefore in the position of a would-be trespasser, whose trespass has been prevented before it is effective. Certainly that is not a character which could afford a basis for the granting of any declaration. Whichever way one looks at the case, therefore, the plaintiff's suit must fail. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs—two sets.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Executrix—Moneys borrowed by her for obtaining probate—Estate of deceased liable to indemnify creditor to the extent of the claim of the executrix—Plaint prayer—Construction of—Whether wide enough to allow creditor to stand in the shoes of the executrix.

Where an executrix of an estate borrowed money from the appellant for the purpose of obtaining probate, but she having denied receipt of the money from the creditor, he filed a suit in which she raised the contention that even if he had in fact given her the money, he was not entitled to the benefit of the indemnity which she herself enjoyed,

Held, that since the creditor provided the money for a necessary purpose, it was a proper case where the appellant should be allowed to stand in the shoes of the executrix and therefore entitled to be indemnified by the estate to the extent of the borrowings.

Where the plaint in such a case prayed as follows: "I therefore pray that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree directing the defendants 4 and 5 (fourth defendant being the executrix) to pay to the plaintiff the amount noted hereunder together with subsequent interest and cost of the suit, the fourth defendant from out of the estate of the deceased S which she is managing as executrix and which belongs to defendants 1 to 3, and the fourth and fifth defendants personally,

Held, that the prayer was a claim for a decree against the estate as well as against the executrix personally and so on that ground the plaint should be considered sufficiently widely drawn to allow the creditor to stand in the shoes of the executrix.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—Santhanathammal, the grandmother of the first, second and third respondents died on the 17th August, 1928, leaving a will by which she bequeathed her properties to her grandsons and others. She appointed the fourth respondent, who is her daughter-in-law and the mother of the first, second and third respondents, her executrix. On the 6th March, 1929, the fourth respondent and her mother, Kanikaimari Ammal, who was the fifth defendant in the suit out of which this appeal arises, borrowed from the appellant a sum of Rs. 1,700 for the purpose of taking out probate of the will. A promissory note was executed by the fourth respondent and her mother for this amount and the instrument stated the purpose for which the money was borrowed. The fourth respondent executed the promissory note in her capacity as executrix and as guardian of her sons. The probate was obtained, but the fourth respondent failed to repay to the appellant the money which she had borrowed from him for the purpose. The consequence was that the appellant was compelled to file a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly for the recovery of the money. The defendants to the suit were the respondents to this appeal and Kanikaimari Ammal. The fourth respondent denied that the money had been paid to her by the appellant, but the District Munsif held that this was untrue. A personal decree was passed against the fourth respondent and her mother, but the suit was dismissed as against the estate. The appellant appealed to the District Judge of Trichinopoly against the finding of the District Munsif that the estate was not liable. The respondents to this appeal were the first, second and third respondents in the present appeal. The appellant, however, did not make the fourth respondent a party. The District Judge allowed the appeal, holding that the appellant was entitled to a charge against the estate. The grandsons of the testatrix then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Varadachariar, J., who restored the decree of the District Munsif. Before Varadachariar, J., the appellant asked that he be allowed the benefit of the indemnity to which the executrix would be entitled in law from the estate if it was shown that the money had been applied for purposes necessary for or beneficial to the estate. The learned Judge refused to accept this contention on the ground that the pleadings did not justify a decree being passed against the estate. The present appeal has been filed against the judgment of the learned Judge under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, a certificate having been granted.

The appeal first came before us on the 23rd February and after hearing the arguments we were unable to share the opinion of Varadachariar, J., that the plaint was not sufficiently widely drawn to allow the appellant to stand in the shoes of executrix. The prayer in the plaint reads as follows:—

"I therefore pray that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree directing defendants 4 and 5 to pay to the plaintiff the amount noted hereunder together with subsequent interest and cost of this suit—the fourth defendant from out of the estate of the deceased Sandanathammal which she is managing as executrix and which belongs to defendants 1 to 3, and the fourth and fifth defendants personally."

In our opinion there is here a claim for a decree against the estate as well as against the fourth respondent and her mother. The plaint was written in Tamil and the words used may not be as precise as the words which an expert draughtsman in English would use, but we consider that they were sufficiently precise for the purpose. In these circumstances we thought it proper to make the executrix a respondent in the appeal. In accordance with our direction she was served with notice of this appeal and became the fourth respondent. The judgment of Varadachariar, J., shows that he would have adopted this course himself had he considered that the plaint was sufficiently widely drawn to permit of an order being made against the estate. The case comes on for hearing with the fourth respondent before us.

We agree with the opinion of Varadachariar, J., that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the appellant was entitled to a charge, but we consider that he is entitled to stand in the shoes of the executrix, for the purpose of recovering the money from the estate. S. 321 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, provides that the expenses of obtaining probate shall be paid next after the funeral expenses and death-bed charges. Mr. Subrahmaniam on behalf of the fourth respondent has contended that no order should be passed allowing the appellant to stand in her shoes as the executrix. Why his client has adopted this attitude is not far to seek. She is a woman and although she has been held personally liable it will be difficult if not impossible to execute a personal decree against her. She borrowed the money from the appellant for obtaining probate, and for her to say that the appellant should not be allowed the benefit of the indemnity which she herself enjoys is dishonest. The appellant provided the money for a necessary purpose and she utilized it for that purpose. It is not disputed that in a proper case a creditor can stand in the shoes of an executor and be given his remedy against the estate. This is a proper case which the appellant should be allowed to stand in the shoes of the executrix, and we will allow the appeal to this extent.

The case will be remanded to the trial Court for inquiry as to what rights the fourth respondent has against the estate in respect of the sum of money borrowed for obtaining the probate. The trial Court will draw up a fresh decree based on its findings in the inquiry arrived at in the light of this judgment. It will not be open to any of the respondents to contend that the money was not borrowed from the appellant for the purpose of obtaining probate, or to contend that this was not a necessary purpose. There are findings, and they are conclusive, that the money was borrowed by the fourth respondent from the appellant for the purpose of obtaining probate and that it was borrowed for a proper purpose. The inquiry will therefore proceed on this basis. The decree against the fourth respondent and the fifth defendant will stand in so far as they are personally concerned.

Before Varadachariar, J., the first, second and third respondents contended that if the estate was to be made liable the rate of interest mentioned in the promissory note was excessive. In view of the decision of the learned Judge on the other questions arising in the case which led to the restoration of the decree of the District Munsif it was not necessary to go into this question. It has been agreed by the parties that the question of the rate of interest so far as the estate is concerned shall be decided by the District Munsif on remand.

As the appellant did not make the fourth respondent a party in his appeal to the District Judge, and failed to make her a party in this Court we make no order as to costs, either in this Court or in the District Court.

Indian Bar Councils Act (XXXVIII of 1926), S. 10 (1)—Professional misconduct—Agreement by advocate to advance money towards litigation with a view to share the profits—High Court can take disciplinary action.

Where under S. 10 (1) of the Bar Councils Act charges against an advocate ran thus: "That you, having been engaged in C. S. No. 168 of 1932 on the file of the High Court for the plaintiff, accepted a share of the profits of litigation for your professional remuneration, namely, 14 per cent. of the sum that may be decreed in the suit including costs" and the Bar Council's tribunal thought that no definite agreement had been entered into, but on evidence before the High Court, it turned out that the advocate did finance the litigation and advanced various other sums to the complainant and his sister, and certain letters between the advocate and his clients supported the charge, Held, that for an advocate to enter into an agreement of the nature, which was entered into in the case, amounted to professional misconduct and the Court was bound to take serious notice of it. It was a case of an advocate speculating in litigation. The Court should take steps to prevent it.

The notice under S. 12 (3) of the Indian Bar Councils Act issued to Sri P. Ramanujachariar, an Advocate of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, calling upon the said Sri P. Ramanujachariar to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court for his professional misconduct rendering himself liable to be dealt with under S. 10 (1) of the Indian Bar Council's Act in that,

(1) he offered his services to the plaintiff in C. S. No. 168 of 1932 on the file of the High Court (Original Side) voluntarily to finance and to conduct the case for the plaintiff and thereby solicited work in a manner inconsistent with professional good conduct; namely, 14 per cent. of the same that may be decreed in the suit including costs;

(3) (a) he having been engaged for the plaintiff and having undertaken to finance the plaintiff and to render her all assistance including a stipulated periodical payment for her maintenance, he deliberately allowed himself to be used by the defendants and thereby betrayed the plaintiff's trust and interests, which it was his duty to protect and that such funds as he furnished to the plaintiff were supplied to him by the defendant in pursuance of the undertaking between him and the defendant to defraud the plaintiff;

(b) he wilfully managed to keep away the plaintiff's senior Counsel by deliberately defaulting to instruct him and to pay the balance of fees due to him;

(c) he wilfully kept the plaintiff in ignorance of the proceedings in the suit in spite of the plaintiff's letters which were left unanswered and otherwise misled the plaintiff by giving information to the plaintiff which was false to his knowledge;

(d) he by not keeping his engagement with the plaintiff, in such and other diverse ways combined with the defendants to defraud the plaintiff and ultimately brought about the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit;

(4) he fraudulently procured and used a false receipt dated 7th May, 1935, for Rs. 250 reciting a payment by him of Rs. 250 to his client, whereas in truth no amount was at all paid by him to his client as per the said receipt;

(5) in any event, he was guilty of wilful default and negligence in the conduct of the suit C. S. No. 168 of 1932 on behalf of his client, the plaintiff therein;

(a) that the senior advocate was not engaged by him in time as stipulated for;

(b) that he delayed compliance with the orders of Court in the said suit and in the taking out of interlocutory applications to the prejudice of the plaintiff;

(c) he deliberately attempted to coerce the plaintiff and her brother to enter into a compromise with the defendant in the suit, the terms of which were highly prejudicial to the plaintiff;

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The respondent is an advocate practising in this Court. He was charged with professional misconduct, Five charges were framed against him and these were investigated by a Tribunal constituted under the Indian Bar Councils Act. The Tribunal has reported favourably to the respondent on all the charges. We accept the report except so far as it concerns the second charge. We consider that in this case the charge has been substantiated.

The complainant is the brother of one Manickammal who instituted in 1932 a suit on the Original Side of this Court in which she asked for a decree for maintenance as a Hindu widow. She sued as a pauper. She claimed that she was entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 500 per mensem and to a sum of Rs. 52,000 as arrears of the allowance. Through her brother she engaged various advocates to conduct her suit, but subsequently withdrew her instructions. In July, 1933, the complainant approached the respondent with a view to the respondent acting for his sister. The respondent agreed and the complainant alleges that it was arranged that the respondent's remuneration was to be 14 per cent. of the sum which might be decreed in the suit, including costs. The second charge is based on this agreement. The actual charge reads:

"That you having been engaged in C. S. No. 168 of 1932 on the file of the High Court for the plaintiff accepted a share of the profits of litigation for your professional remuneration, namely, 14 per cent. of the sum that may be decreed in the suit including costs."

The Tribunal thought that no definite agreement had been entered into, but that after discussion the matter was left at large. An examination of the correspondence which passed between the complainant and the respondent shows that the conclusion of the Tribunal cannot be supported.

The complainant in the course of his evidence said:—

"I went to the respondent. This was in May, or June, 1933. That was the very first time I saw the respondent. The respondent called for the papers which I gave him, having got them from Mr. Sankaranarayana. A week later, he said he would take up the case, provided I agree to pay him 20 per cent. of the amount that may be realised in the suit. I bargained with him and ultimately reduced the demand to 14 per cent. of the moneys. I told him the suit must be finished within a month or two. He agreed to do so. He promised to pay Rs. 100 for the maintenance of the plaintiff till the suit was disposed of within the time mentioned above. He agreed to engage a senior. My sister signed a letter confirming the arrangement referred to above and I passed that letter to the respondent."

This letter is dated 26th July, 1933, and the copy of it (Ex. A) reads as follows:—

"Regarding C. S. No. 168 of 1932 I request you to kindly conduct the suit and accept my vakalat with a competent senior and I hereby agree to pay you 14 per cent. of the amount I get in the said suit for arrears of past maintenance"

The respondent says that he has no recollection of having received this letter, but there can be no doubt that he did receive it. On the 6th November, 1933, the plaintiff wrote a letter to the respondent saying that he had only paid her Rs. 23 for her maintenance whereas he had agreed to help her to the extent of Rs. 100. The letter proceeds:—

"Further as per your terms mentioned in my agreement letter taken by you about your fees, you have not till now engaged any senior counsel to conduct the suit and so I am in a fix how you are going to finish the case shortly as per your frequent promises."

In the concluding paragraph of this letter there is a further reference to the letter of the 26th July, 1933.

On the 19th January, 1934, the plaintiff wrote to the respondent a letter in which she states:—

"You took an agreement from me to pay you 14 per cent. from the amount that may be decreed in my favour and you undertook to (1) to meet all the expenses in the case, (2) to engage a senior either Mr. S. Duraiswamy Iyer or Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and to pay their fees, and (3) to pay me a sum of Rs. 100 for my food expenses and to finish off the case within a month from the reopening of the Court after summer vacation."

This letter was shown to the respondent but he handed it back to the plaintiff saying that he would fulfil his agreement.

It is abundantly clear that the respondent did finance the litigation to the extent of at least Rs. 300 and advanced various other sums to the complainant and his sister. On the 14th March, 1934, he took a promissory note from the complainant and his sister for Rs. 750 which included the Rs. 300 I have just referred to. On the same date the complainant's sister signed a letter in which she authorised the respondent to take the Rs. 750 out of the amount which might be decreed in her suit. The letter adds:

"I and my brother are liable to pay you these amounts only, after obtaining decree against the defendants and not before. I further agree with my full consent and knowledge to collect the taxed costs that may be ordered in the suit and pay the Government stamp duty for the plaint and all other Court expenses, etc. and take the balance yourself."

This really amounted to a new agreement. Instead of the respondent having 14 per cent. of the proceeds of the suit he was to be paid his advances out of the moneys recovered under the decree and to have for his services the balance of the taxed costs after meeting Court charges. But here again he was not to receive anything unless the suit was successful.

There are other letters which support the charge, but it is not necessary to refer to them. Sufficient has been said to make it clear that the respondent did enter into an agreement by which he was to be paid 14 per cent. of whatever was recovered in the suit but later agreed to be remunerated on the basis of the taxed costs which might be recovered from the other side and the payment out of the decretal amount of what he had advanced. In both the cases the agreement was "No cure, no pay". The advocate was to receive nothing unless the suit was successful.

For an advocate to enter into an agreement of the nature of that embodied in Ex. A or of that embodied in the letter of the 14th March, 1934 (Ex. J-1) amounts to professional misconduct, and the Court is bound to take serious notice of it. To allow conduct of this nature to pass without punishment would only lead to the encouragement of agreements of this nature. The Court must take steps to prevent advocates speculating in litigation, and that is what the respondent has done. A great deal has been said of lack of bona fides on the part of the complainant and it has been suggested that the complaint filed was in the nature of blackmail. We are not concerned here with the conduct of the complainant. We are concerned with the conduct of the respondent and there is abundant evidence to show that he has been guilty of professional misconduct. It is said that as the result of his connection with this litigation he has lost a large sum of money. We are told that the amount which he is out of pocket is over Rs. 4,000. This is of course punishment in itself but we consider that it is not sufficient. We consider that the conduct of the respondent has been such that he should be suspended from practice for three months from this date. We would add that the fact that the punishment inflicted by the Court is limited to suspension for three months does not mean that it will be so limited in another case. Agreements of this nature cannot be tolerated and in future the Court will not take such a lenient view.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was the subscriber for one ticket in a chit fund conducted by the company of the nominal value of Rs. 1,000. Having been a successful bidder for the prize at the sum of Rs. 940, he withdrew the prize. Thereafter his liability to pay his subscriptions from month to month continued. He withdrew the prize money upon supplying to the company security for the amount, the security being the monies to which his two brothers would each be entitled in respect of their respective subscriptions to other chit funds conducted by the company, the two brothers being sureties. In the applicant's affidavit, he states that the two brother's non-prized tickets were to be held as security for future instalments payable by him, and the company were empowered to appropriate the amounts due to them under the two tickets belonging to the two brothers towards any future instalments if default were committed in respect of such instalments. The learned Official Liquidator has taken the objection that any arrangement which had been made between the applicant and the company together with the two brothers is contained in letters written by the two brothers and that these required stamping and the absence of the stamp renders the documents inadmissible in evidence and also their contents cannot be included in an affidavit and the facts set out therein treated as proved facts. In the light of the conclusion to which I have arrived, it is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the application, and I propose to assume for the purpose of my decision that it has been established that the applicant's two brothers were his sureties and the company is entitled to look to them if default were made by the applicant in respect of any future instalments. Under the rules of the Fund, failure by the applicant to pay any one instalment rendered the total amount outstanding immediately payable to the company.

The applicant contended (1) that his liability ceased at the date when his two brothers became surety inasmuch as it was to them the company agreed to look for payment and not to him. This contention is contrary to the facts which are set out by the applicant in his affidavit in which he says the company was entitled to look to the monies payable to the two brothers if default were committed by the applicant in respect of future instalments due from him. It follows that this contention fails.

Secondly, learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant contended that since the company has gone into liquidation and therefore has reached a position in which the securities which had been taken in respect of monies due from the applicant cannot be returned to him, the Official Liquidator is not entitled to recover from the applicant any monies due from him. In support of the contention now raised two cases were cited to me, *Official Assignee v. M.C. Harikrishna*¹ and *Ellis & Co's Trustee v. Dixon-Johnson*². The latter case was referred to and discussed in the Rangoon case. The facts in the *Ellis & Co.'s case*² were as follows:—

The firm carried on business as stockbrokers and the defendant opened with them a speculative account and he deposited as security for any debit balances which might be owing, various bonds and shares. Ellis & Co. sold some of the shares without the knowledge, authority or consent of the defendant, and he was ignorant of such sales until after the firm had become bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy having given credit to the defendant in respect of monies received from the proceeds of sales, claimed the balance due upon the general account and sued for this amount. It was held by the House of Lords that the stockbrokers themselves could not have maintained an action for the balance against the defendant inasmuch as they would not be entitled to be paid unless they were able to restore the security which he had furnished, since payment by the defendant would entitle him to the return of the securities which he furnished. Lord Cave, L.C., at page 491 in the course of his speech pointed out that the rule in equity being that:

"If a creditor holding a security sues for his debt, he is under an obligation on payment of the debt to hand over the security."

In that case, the debtor and the person giving security for the debt was the same individual and from that aspect the observations were made and the decision given. In Official Assignee v. M.C. Harikrishnai, the facts were as follows: The defendants maintained an account with a Chettiar firm which subsequently became insolvent. One of the partners in the defendant partnership named Chaganlal maintained with the Chettiar firm a deposit account and it was agreed between all the partners that recourse should be had to this deposit account in respect of the defendants' debt to the Chettiar firm. Chaganlal being a partner in the defendant firm was, as such, liable to pay all its debts. This obligation of course was also one which affected any other partner. When therefore Chaganlal entered into the arrangement with the Chettiar firm that his deposit account should be in effect a security for the partnership debt, he was as a debtor on the one hand, being a partner, giving security for his own debt. In the Rangoon case, it was held that the Chettiar firm having become insolvent they had dissipated the security in consequence of which it could not be returned to Chaganlal in the event of the debt from the partnership being paid, and consequently the Official Assignee of the Chettiar firm not being in a better position than the firm itself before it became insolvent failed in the action. Mr. Justice Leach as he then was followed the decision in the other authority, which I have quoted in the House of Lords in England.

In the present case, there is in my view clearly a distinction to be drawn between both the authorities I have cited. The security was not furnished by the applicant who was the debtor; it was furnished by two others. The principle in equity that a creditor is not entitled to recover the amount of his debt for which security has been given when he is not in a position to return the security applies in my view when the debtor and the person giving the security are the same person. Further, here the company has not, as Ellis & Co., in the English decision, wrongfully dealt with the securities. They are still in existence and whatever the dividends eventually may be, the two brothers would be entitled to a division from the assets realised. If the present contention were allowed to be given effect and if 16 annas in the rupee are eventually paid, it would follow that the applicant would avoid entire responsibility for his debt and his two sureties would be paid in full. Also the two securities are still in existence and all benefits and rights which eventually will arise will accrue to them. In my view, the applicant's contention fails, and it must follow that the Official Liquidator will not set off any amounts against the indebtedness of the applicant to the company, the sum of Rs. 360, but he will remain a debtor in respect of that amount. This application is dismissed. No order as to costs, the Official Liquidator appearing in person.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), S. 14—Suits by landlord to eject tenants after notice to quit and for mesne profits—Tenants held to be occupancy tenants—Suits thereon for rent in Revenue Court—Later suits if barred by limitation—Cause of action for suit in the two Courts not identical—Suits for rent in Civil Court—Later suits for rent for subsequent faslis—All plaints returned to be presented to proper Court—Plaints separately presented and not consolidated into one plaint—Suits not barred by O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code—Plaints to be treated as one for purposes of O. 2, r. 2.

Where a person filed suits in the Civil Court for ejectment and mesne profits treating the person in occupation as a tenant continuing wrongfully in possession after notice to quit but the plaints were returned to be presented to the Revenue Court as the proper Court on the findings that the defendants had kudiwaram right and the lands were situate in an estate, and the plaints were thereupon presented as for rent in the Revenue Court forthwith, the claims for faslis beyond three years of re-presentation are barred. The plaintiff is not entitled to claim the benefit of S. 14 with regard to rent for those faslis as the cause of action for the suits is not identical. The claim in the Civil Court was on the basis of trespass and unlawful occupation on the ground that he is no longer a tenant, but the claim in the Revenue Court is on the ground of subsisting relationship of landlord and tenant.

With reference to some holdings the plaintiff had instituted suits for rent in the Civil Court at an interval of three years to save the claim for them being barred. The plaints in those subsequent suits also were returned to be presented in the Revenue Court. In re-presenting, the plaints were presented separately and the claims for these faslis were not added to the original plaint.

Held, the subsequent suits are not barred by O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. As per the order of return of the plaints, the plaintiff had to present the same plaints in the Revenue Court to get credit for the court-fee already paid thereon. The plaints were all presented simultaneously and they must be taken together and read as one plaint with the proper court-fee.

V. Viyanna for Appellants.

The Advocate-General (Sir A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) and K. Subramania Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a batch of 28 appeals which arise out of suits filed by the Maharajah of Pithapuram the respondent herein against his tenants the defendants for recovery of arrears of rent for occupation of lands in various villages which originally formed part of what was known as Thotapalli estate to which the plaintiff claimed title by a purchase by his predecessor-in-title. The arrears of rent were claimed from faslis 1332 to 1343. The liability to pay rent was not disputed but most of the suits were resisted mainly on the ground of limitation and some were resisted on the ground that they were barred by O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. In answer to the plea of limitation the plaintiff relied on S. 14 of the Limitation Act on the ground that a prior litigation against the same tenants in Civil Court saved limitation. In answer to the plea raised by O. 2, r. 2, the plaintiff also relied on the pendency of the prior litigation in respect of the claims which are sought to be defeated by this technical plea. The Deputy Collector upheld the plea of the defendants as to limitation but overruled the plea as to O. 2, r. 2 and gave decrees on that basis, but the learned District Judge differed from the Deputy Collector on the question of limitation in its entirety. Against his judgment the tenants have preferred these appeals.

The material facts are few and are not in dispute. That the plaintiff owned the several villages wherein the lands in the occupation of the tenants were situate was not disputed but the tenants disputed the right of the landlord to the ownership of the soil of the lands, their case being they are tenants owning kudivaram right in the lands. The plaintiff's case was that he was the owner of both the warams and that he was entitled to evict the tenants from occupation of the lands after due notice to quit. He therefore issued notices to quit between 1921 and 1923 and filed suits in the Civil Court. Most of the suits were for ejectment. He combined in the same suits with the relief for ejectment reliefs for past profits and future profits; in some of them he claimed also past rents and future profits. Some of the suits were only for mesne profits though in some of them he claimed rent also in the alternative. In a few of the suits he claimed only rent. The tenants resisted the various claims. So far as the claim for ejectment was concerned, the tenants' plea was that the landlord had no right to eject as they were the owners of kudivaram right and therefore had occupancy rights. This plea was also available for them to resist the claim for mesne profits. So far as the claim for rent was concerned, their plea was that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain suits for rent. Most of the suits were launched about 1925 excepting certain suits for rent which were filed as and when the right to recover them were about to be barred. The litigation lasted for nearly ten years and it was finally decided by the High Court that the tenants had the kudivaram right and the plaintiff was not entitled to eject them. As the lands in the occupation of the several tenants formed part of an estate within the meaning of the Estates Land Act the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to award relief on the basis of a subsisting relationship between landlord and tenant. Therefore the Court directed the plaints in the various suits to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. The various plaints were accordingly taken from the Civil Courts and presented on the very same day in the Revenue Courts. In presenting the plaints to the Revenue Courts the plaintiff in some suits amended them by claiming also rent for faslis subsequent to the fasli in respect whereof claims were preferred in the Civil Court; in some cases he claimed interest which was omitted to be asked for in the Civil Court; but the amendments in some cases were not made on the day on which the plaints were presented in the Revenue Court but on a later date when the plaints were returned for some formal amendment by the Revenue Courts and before they were re-presented again in the same Court.

The plea of limitation was presented in the lower Court and is again repeated before me thus: the claim for rent for the faslis for which mesne profits were claimed in the Civil Court is barred not having been filed within three years from the date when the said rents accrued. S. 14 of the Limitation Act would not save the said claims from being barred by limitation because the cause of action for a suit for rent is not the same as the cause of action for a suit for mesne profits; in any event, S. 14 would not save the claims in some of the suits being barred by limitation in so far as they relate to rents for faslis subsequent to those in respect whereof claims were made in Civil Court and which were claimed by way of amendment on the date of re-presentation of the plaints in the Revenue Court.

I shall first deal with the question of limitation regarding suits for rent in cases where mesne profits were claimed in the prior litigation. It is conceded on behalf of the plaintiff that but for S. 14 of the Limitation Act the claims would be barred by limitation. The question therefore is whether S. 14 saves them. S. 14 of the Limitation Act runs thus:—

“In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal against the defendant, can be excluded where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it.”

The three essentials therefore requisite for the application of this section are (1) identity of the cause of action, (2) good faith of the plaintiff, and (3) the absence of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature in the Court which entertained the prior litigation. The defendants do not dispute either the good faith or the absence of jurisdiction of the Court with reference to the prior litigation. But what is disputed is that there is no identity of cause of action. The question is, is this contention tenable? It has therefore to be seen what was the substance of the claim in the prior litigation. The case of the plaintiff was that he was the owner of both the melwaram and kudivaram rights, that the defendants were in occupation under terminable leases, that he gave them notice to quit, that they were in unlawful occupation of the land and were bound to surrender possession and also pay mesne profits for such wrongful possession until the day on which they surrender possession. I shall give herein extracts from a plaint in one of the suits, namely, O. S. No. 267 of 1925 a suit out of which S. A. No. 345 arises, to show how the plaintiff outlined his claim. Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the said plaint run thus:—

murthy
v.
Maharajah
of Pithapur.

"6 Though notice to quit was given to the defendant on 30th December, 1921, for vacating the land by the end of fasli 1331 and delivering possession thereof to the plaintiff, the defendant did not quit but cultivated for fasli 1332 also and enjoyed the produce. Notice was again given on 30th May, 1923, demanding quitting and delivering possession of the lands by the end of fasli 1332 and claiming Rs. 1,163-0-0 as damages for unlawful cultivation for fasli 1332 Though thus demanded by the plaintiff the defendant cultivated the land for fasli 1333, 1334 and enjoyed the produce. The plaintiff is in all manner entitled to eject the defendant from the suit lands, to recover damages for faslis 1332, 1333, 1334 for unlawfully cultivating them without the plaintiff's permission and to recover future damages in the same manner till the lands are put in plaintiff's possession.

"7. The cause of action arose on the 1st July, 1922, when defendant began to unlawfully cultivate the lands mentioned in the schedule in the village of Sankhavaram within your Hon'ble Court's jurisdiction. Cause of action arose on 13th January, 1923, 1924, 1925 when profits as damages for faslis 1332, 1333, 1334 were appropriated."

The claim as will be seen was distinctly for possession and damages on the basis of unlawful occupation. The claim in the present case is based on the ground of subsisting relationship between landlord and tenant and for recovery of rent on that basis. Therefore in my opinion the claim for rent is not founded on the same cause of action as the claim for mesne profits. Both are founded on distinct causes of action. A claim for rent is founded upon a subsisting relationship between the landlord and tenant either based on a tenure or on contract. The claim for mesne profits is not based on such relationship but essentially on trespass. In a decision of mine reported in *Ramiah v. Thathiah*¹, I have explained the scope of an action for mesne profits citing a passage from Salmond on Torts. As the learned author points out:

"The claim for mesne profits was always in form a claim for damages for a continuing trespass upon the land. Such a claim was based upon and rendered possible by the doctrine of trespass by relation."

It is founded on the theory of re-entry on termination of the lease. After the service of notice to quit it must be taken that the landlord has determined the lease and has made his election in the cases in question to enter upon the land. The claim for profits prior to the filing of the suits in the prior litigation was therefore founded upon an unlawful occupation. In fact in some of the complaints it will be seen he claimed double the amount of the rent as damages. So far as profits claimed subsequent to the date of the suit for ejectment were concerned, there can be no question of the nature of the claim. Cole in his book on Ejectment at page 635 explains the position thus:

"By issuing and serving a writ in ejectment the claimant elects to treat the defendants as trespassers on and from the date mentioned in the writ; and he cannot afterwards sue them as tenants for rent and for use and occupation subsequent to that day. The only remedy for subsequent occupation is by an action of trespass for mesne profits."

"For the action for use and occupation is founded on contract; and unless there were a contract either express or implied, the action could not be maintained."

Again dealing with a cause of action in ejectment, he observes as follows:—

"The action for use and occupation, and the ejectment, when applied to the same time, are totally inconsistent; for in one the plaintiff says the defendant is his tenant, and therefore he must pay him rent; in the other he says he is no longer his tenant, and therefore he must deliver up the possession. He cannot do both. The plaintiff's Counsel admits that an action would lie for the mesne profits; it is of course after ejectment, and may be maintained without proving any title. The ejectment is the suit in which the defendant is considered as a trespasser. . . ."

In *Birch v. Wright*¹, it was held that though the landlord filed a suit in ejectment he might maintain an action for use and occupation against the defendant tenant for all that is due and unpaid as rent up to the date of his issuing a writ for ejectment, because in that case it was only by suing for ejectment he was held to have declared his election to treat the lease as at an end and the defendant a trespasser. Until then the defendant must be deemed to have been treated by the landlord as his tenant. But in the cases in question from the time notice to quit had been given the plaintiff elected to treat the defendants as trespassers and founded his cause of action thereon. The tenants resisted the landlord's claim setting up a title to the soil and there was no question of any holding over with the implied permission of the landlord, the plaintiff, so as to sustain an action for use and occupation. As stated in Woodfall's

The prior suits were therefore based on trespass and the present suits as already stated by me are founded on a subsisting tenure, that is, a subsisting relation of landlord and tenant. Several cases have been cited at the bar but there is no case which directly deals with the question. Some of the cases on which Mr. Viyanna relied only go to show that pendency of suit for possession does not save limitation for a suit for rent. The only cases which have some bearing on the matter are the cases reported in *Sheriff v. Dina Nath Mookerjee*¹ and Rameshwar v. Naka Singha. In *Sheriff v. Dina Nath Mookerjee*¹, a suit was brought for recovery of arrears of rent from Pous 1281 (December, 1874) to Chaitro 1288 (March, 1882). The question was whether the claim for 1281 and 1288 was barred by limitation. It would admittedly be barred but the bar was sought to be got over by relying on a prior litigation. The prior litigation was that in 1284 the landlord brought a suit to set aside the putni and in 1285 obtained a decree declaring the putni invalid and giving them possession with mesne profits. But the decree was reversed in appeal in 1288. It was held that the prior litigation would not save the claim from being barred by limitation. The learned Judge observed thus:—

"There was no period during which the tenancy ceased to exist. We cannot extend the time of suit on the ground that he brought a suit improperly on the allegation that the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the tenant did not exist."

In Rameshwar v. Naka Singha, it was held that where a plaintiff failed in a suit to recover rent on the basis of a subsisting lease on the ground that the plaintiff failed to prove his tenancy, a later suit against the same defendant claiming compensation for use and occupation of the land would not be barred by res judicata. Baguley, J., took the view that the two suits were founded on mutually exclusive causes of action and when the plaintiff had sued on one of them and failed, he would be entitled to sue on the other contrary cause of action. According to him one was based on contract and the other was based on tort. Mr. K. Subramanyam on behalf of the learned

v.
Maharajah
of Pithapur.

Advocate-General relied very strongly on two cases (1) a decision of Devadoss, J., reported in *Vabalareddi Mallayya v. Narayana Gajapathiraju*¹ and (2) a decision of the division Bench in *Mullai Thayammal v. Subbayyan Pillai*². In *Vabalareddi Mallayya v. Narayana Gajapathiraju*¹, there was an alternative claim for rent. Therefore the learned Judge held that S. 14 of the Limitation Act would save the subsequent suit from being barred by limitation. The learned Judge remarked thus:—

"Inasmuch as the plaintiff did claim rent in the previous suit on the ground that the appellants were bound to pay rent, I think the cause of action in the previous suit was not different from the cause of action in this suit."

The learned Judge did not say that the cause of action for mesne profits is the same as the cause of action for rent. In *Mullai Thayammal v. Subbayyan Pillai*², Sadasiva Aiyar, J., made the following observation at page 806 which is very strongly relied on by Mr. Subrahmanyam:

"The last contention was that the learned Judge ought to have awarded at least the rent due from 1910 up to the date of the suit. I think that this is a reasonable contention because even on the footing that there was no proper notice to quit, the mere fact that a claim as for mesne profits was made is not a sufficient ground for not allowing what is clearly due as rent in the alternative after amendment of the plaint, if necessary."

In that case the action was in ejectment against certain persons on the basis that they were tenants in occupation of the land till 1910 and that notice to quit was given to them when they became trespassers after refusing to comply with the notice to quit. The defence was that the tenants had occupancy rights by virtue of S. 6 of the Estates Land Act. The finding of the lower Court was that the tenants did obtain occupancy rights. Therefore without going into the other issues the lower Court dismissed the suit. On appeal their Lordships remanded the case on some of the issues and one of the issues on which finding was called for, was what were the arrears of rent payable? The learned Judges held that the tenants had acquired occupancy rights, and gave a decree on the basis of arrears of rent. It is not possible to understand on what basis they gave a decree for arrears of rent because once it was found that the holdings formed part of an estate the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to deal with a claim for arrears of rent. Having regard to the eminence of the Counsel who appeared in that case I am inclined to think that it was almost a decree by consent without the necessity of resorting to further proceedings; or else it is legally not possible to sustain the decree in the face of the distinct provisions of the Estates Land Act. However I cannot take it as an authority for the position that a suit for recovery of mesne profits can be considered as a suit for rent and that both are founded on the same cause of action. I am therefore of the opinion that the condition of the identity of cause of action is wanting in these cases and therefore such of the suits in which there was no claim for rent in the prior litigation either independently or in the alternative must be held to be barred by limitation. In this view the question whether the claim for rent for subsequent faslis added on the date of the re-presentation of the plaints in the Revenue Court is barred by limitation would not arise. However, as the question was argued, I shall deal with it. It is now well settled that where a plaint is presented in a Court which has no jurisdiction and it is re-presented after return by that Court in a Court which has jurisdiction, the presentation in the latter Court must be deemed to be the date of its institution in the said Court. The proceedings in the former Court are of no avail and the proceedings in the latter cannot be treated as a continuation of the proceedings in the former Court—vide *Ramdutt Ramkissendass v. E. D. Sassoon & Co.*¹ and *Hirachand Succaram v. G. I. P. Railway Co., Bombay*². By applying this principle it was held that the plaintiff should amend the plaint so as to include all intermediate transactions between the date of the first presentation and the date of the presentation to the competent Court. The date on which the plaints were re-presented must be the date on which such a claim should be deemed to have been made; it was on that date fresh court-fee would have been paid and accepted by the Court. I therefore hold that the rents for subsequent faslis of course excluding those which accrued within three years prior to the date of the amendment would certainly be barred by limitation. But the claims for interest in suits for rent which are saved by S. 14 of the Limitation Act would not be barred even though they were not made on the date of the presentation of the plaints in the Revenue Court but were done on the date of the re-presentation in the said Court. Under S. 61 of the Madras Estates Land Act, an arrear of rent shall bear interest at the rate of one half per cent per mensem from the date on which the arrear fell due until it is liquidated. So, whether the plaintiff claims interest or not, the Court is bound to award interest. It is immaterial when the claims were made. There are certain suits in which in the prior litigation suits for rents were claimed in the alternative. Therefore those suits cannot be said to be barred by limitation; also those suits in which for the period for which rent was claimed in the prior litigation for faslis prior to the institution of the suit would not be barred by limitation. In all the suits claim for rents which accrued within three years prior to the date of presentation of the plaint in the Revenue Court would not be barred and no appeals were preferred in regard to the said claim.

1. (1924) 86 I.C. 13.

I shall now deal with the contention based on O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The question arises thus: With reference to some holdings at an interval of three years the plaintiff instituted suits for rent in the Civil Court because if he failed to do so, they would be barred by limitation. The plaints in those suits were returned for presentation to a proper Court after the termination of the litigation in the High Court and re-presented in the Revenue Court. Therefore S. 14 of the Limitation Act would save them from the bar of limitation. The plea that is advanced is not limitation but one based on O. 2, r. 2, Criminal Procedure Code. It is put thus: as the date of presentation in the Revenue Court is the date of the institution of the suit in that Court, the plaint must comprise a claim for all arrears of rent up to the date of presentation because under the proviso to O. 2, r. 2, Criminal Procedure Code, successive claims arising under the same cause of action shall be deemed to constitute but one cause of action.

Therefore, as the plaintiff has not presented any plaint including all the claims of arrears of rent, the only course open to the plaintiff is to elect which of the suits he will proceed with and the rest of the suits must be dismissed. To put it concretely, if the claim is in respect of fasli 1323 to fasli 1328, both inclusive and the plaint in one suit comprises only claims for arrears of rent for faslis 1323, 1324 and 1325 and the plaint in another suit comprises the claim for arrears of rent for faslis 1326, 1327 and 1328, the plaint must elect which of the suits he will proceed with, as one or the other must be held to be barred by O. 2, r. 2. Both the Courts have taken the view that O. 2, r. 2 will not apply to cases where the plaints have been returned for presentation to the proper Court by a Court not having jurisdiction to try the claims in those plaints. But this view is attacked as unsound by Mr. Viyanna. The question is whether the plea is tenable. Under O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that the plaintiff should have omitted to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquished any portion of his claim. The omission to sue may be accidental or deliberate. The question is, is there such an omission in this case? What is contended is the omission to add in either of the plaints filed in the Civil Court and re-presented in the Revenue Court the claims for the earlier or subsequent faslis as the case may be. But as per the order directing the return of the plaints and for presentation to the proper Court the plaintiff had to present the same plaints in the Revenue Court. As pointed out by Sankaran Nair, J., in *Visweswara Sarma v. Dr. T. M. Nair*¹, the object of "the return of a plaint for presentation to a proper Court is to enable the plaintiff to present that document without paying the stamp over again." Else he would not get credit for the court-fee already paid. The plaintiff was therefore obliged to present all the plaints in the Revenue Court. When he presented them, he must be deemed to have claimed for all the faslis up to the date of the presentation. The plaints were presented simultaneously and they must be taken together and treated as one document with the proper court-fee though it was affixed on separate pieces of paper. The fact that the Court has numbered the suits separately or that the plaintiff omitted to ask the Court to treat it as one suit and give it one number does not amount to an omission to sue or relinquishment of any portion of the claim within the meaning of O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. I am therefore of the opinion that O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, would not operate as a bar. I accordingly overrule this contention.

The result is that S. A. Nos. 345, 434, 432, 451, 435, 433 and 474 of 1936 must be allowed. S. A. Nos. 431, 346, 347, 436 and 488 must also be allowed. The rest of the appeals must be dismissed.

Hindu Law—Widow's maintenance—Liability for on partition.

JUDGMENTS: The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises a question with regard to a Hindu widow's right to maintenance out of the family properties after partition has taken place. The appellant was the plaintiff in the suit out of which the appeal arises. Her husband died some eight years before the suit. At the time of his death the joint family consisted of the first respondent (the appellant's father-in-law), the second respondent (her brother-in-law), and the third respondent (a son of her deceased husband by a previous wife). On the 20th December, 1925, the appellant made a formal demand for maintenance. The family was still joint, but on the 17th March, 1926, a partition was effected by a registered deed. The partition was no doubt the result of the appellant's demand, but it was a genuine partition. On the death of the appellant's husband his share in the family properties devolved upon the third respondent and as the result of the partition the third respondent obtained what his father would have obtained had he lived. The appellant then filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif, Tenali, claiming that she was entitled to a decree against all the respondents on the ground that her status as a widow gave her the right to be maintained out of the family estate as a whole and not merely out of that portion allotted to her step-son on partition. The District Munsif found in the appellant's favour and granted her a decree against all the respondents. He held that she was entitled to arrears of maintenance for seven years at the rate of Rs. 60 a year and to the payment of Rs. 90 a year from the date of the suit. In addition he awarded a sum of Rs. 20 for the purchase of utensils and directed the respondents to set aside a portion of the family house for the appellant to live in or to pay her a further sum of Rs. 100. The decree so far as the first and second respondents were concerned was a personal decree, but so far as the third respondent was concerned it was limited to his share in the family properties. The first and second respondents appealed to the District Judge of Guntur, who confirmed the District Munsif's decree with slight modifications. He directed that the sum payable as arrears of maintenance should be calculated at Rs. 60 per year for six years and at Rs. 84 per year for one year and that all the amounts under the decree were to be recovered from the respondents in equal shares. The District Judge also modified the order which the District Munsif had passed with regard to costs. The first and second respondents then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who allowed it. In holding that the third respondent was alone liable the learned Judge followed the decision in *Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma*¹, where a Division Bench of this Court (Waller and Jackson, JJ.) held that when the widow of a coparcener sues for maintenance after the family has become divided her claim is enforceable only against the coparcener to whom her husband's share has been allotted. The learned Judge felt unable to accept that decision as embodying the correct statement of the law, but as it was directly in point he felt bound by it. The decision in *Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma*¹ runs contrary to the decision of White, C. J. and Munro, J., in *Subbarayulu Chetti v. Kamalavalli Thayaramma*² and the present appeal, which is an appeal from the judgment of Venkataramana Rao, J., under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, has been placed before a Full Bench in order that the conflict may be decided.

The decision in *Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma*¹, is in accordance with the statement of the law made by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in *Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma*³, where he said:—

“When an undivided Hindu family consists of two or more males related as father and sons or otherwise, and one of them dies leaving a widow, she has a right of maintenance against the surviving coparcener or coparceners, quoad the share or interest of her deceased husband in the joint family property which has come by survivorship into the hands of the surviving coparcener or coparceners, and though such right does not in itself form a charge upon her husband's share or interest in the joint family property yet, when it becomes necessary to enforce or preserve such right effectually, it could be made a specific charge on a reasonable portion of the joint family property, such portion of course not exceeding her husband's share or interest therein.”

As authority for this statement Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., gave the Full Bench decision in *Ramanadan v. Rangammal*⁴. The judgment delivered in that case did not lay down expressly that a widow's right to a charge on the family property should

2. (1911) 21 M.L.J. 493: I.L.R. 35 Mad. 147.

4. (1888) I.L.R. 12 Mad. 260 (F. B.).

not exceed her husband's interest therein, but it was recognised that she was entitled to a charge on the family property in the hands of her son.

I regard the statement of the law made by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., as being correct, and before commenting on the decision in Subbarayulu Chetti v. Kamalavalli Thayarammai, I will state my reasons. The Smriti Chandrika, XI, I, 34, according to the translation by the late T. Krishnaswami Aiyar, reads as follows:—

"When the father-in-law and the like are qualified to maintain the widow and take themselves the property of the deceased undivided member of the family, they alone are to maintain the widow from the property so taken. Accordingly, Narada:—'Whichever wife (Patni) becomes a widow and continues virtuous, she is entitled to be provided with food and raiment by the elder brother of the deceased or by her father-in-law or by a Gotraja (a member born in the same family) or any other person.'

In order to maintain the widow, the elder brother, or any of the others above mentioned, must have taken the property of the deceased; the duty of maintaining the widow being dependent on taking the property."

The authority of the Smriti Chandrika is accepted. There is here a clear statement that the duty of maintaining the widow devolves on the persons who take the property of the deceased undivided member of the family and it is emphasized that the duty is dependent on the taking of the property. If the obligation to maintain the widow depends on the taking of the deceased husband's share in the family estate, it follows that there can be no right in the widow to claim to be maintained out of the shares which fall to the other members. While the family remains undivided the position is different. The property is held jointly and of necessity the amount required for a widow's maintenance has to be paid out of the estate regarded as a whole, but in no circumstances can she claim an allowance greater than the income of her husband's share in the estate. An adequate allowance may be less than the income of her husband's share, but it represents the maximum available. See Savitribai v. Luximibai, Madhavrao Keshav Tilak v. Gangabai and Pachayammal v. Paramasiva Mudaliar.

In Savitribai v. Luximibai Westropp, C. J., observed:

'It would need very strong and distinct authority, in the ancient treatises of Hindu Law, to convince us that the widows of such separated husband's stand, as to maintenance out of such portion of the family estate as remains in the hands of the other ex-parceners, in a better position than the husbands themselves occupy with regard to any right to resort to that residue for a further share, albeit under the name and guise of maintenance”

The ancient treatises of Hindu Law do not furnish such authority. In the Smriti Chandrika there is, however, strong authority to the contrary.

The learned advocate for the appellant has conceded that when there has been a partition during the husband's lifetime and the husband has dissipated his share in the family properties his widow is not entitled to be maintained out of the properties falling to the shares of the other members. If the widow is not entitled in such circumstances to be maintained out of the properties in the hands of the other members of the family, the logical deduction is that her right to maintenance merely attaches to her husband's share and on partition she has no claim against the assets forming the shares of the others.

I will now turn to examine the decision in *Subbarayulu Chetty v. Kamalavalli Thayaramma*¹. In that case a widow sued for maintenance against the surviving members of her deceased husband's family and after the institution of the suit the defendants arranged a partition. The Court held that the partition suit could not prejudicially affect the plaintiff's claim. White, C.J., quoted the passage which I have quoted from the judgment of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in *Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma*², but he was not prepared to hold that the words of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., were intended to apply to the members of the branch of the family of which the deceased was a member and not to the members of the joint family generally. I am unable to place any restriction on the words used by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., and I am at a loss to understand how the fact that the partition took place after suit could make any difference. It was not suggested that the partition was a sham or in any way unfair. The members of the family had the right to divide and their rights in the family properties could not be affected by the widow's suit. The decision in *Subbarayulu Chetty v. Kamalavalli Thayaramma*¹ was followed by Krishnan Pandalai, J., in *Rangappaya v. Shiva*³ but the judgment in the latter case calls for no additional comment. In my opinion Subbarayulu Chetti v. Kamalavalli Thayarammal was wrongly decided and *Narasimham v. Venkatasubbamma*² should be followed.

The result is the appeal in the main fails, but the decree of the District Judge requires amendment. The provision that the maintenance be paid equally by the respondents must be set aside. The amount awarded to the appellant by the District Judge from the date of the partition, namely, 17th March, 1926, will be paid by the third respondent out of the properties which have come into his hands and represent the share of the deceased husband in the joint family estate. The amount representing arrears of maintenance before that date will have to be paid by all the respondents, and therefore there will be a charge against all the family properties in respect of the amount payable for maintenance before 17th March, 1926. In respect of the amount due for maintenance after that date the charge will be on the third respondent's share only. The first and second respondents are entitled to their costs.

G should be enjoyed by the sons in common without partition and should not be let, sold or otherwise disposed of to any stranger. If any of the sons does not want to live in the house mentioned in Sch. The intention of all the parties to this deed being that the houses should be enjoyed only by the members of the family and their descendants and not by strangers", on the question whether the restriction on alienation mentioned by the above clause of the partition deed was legal,

Held, that the restriction imposed by the deed on alienation amounted to an absolute restriction within the meaning of S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act and therefore should be disregarded. Consequently the sons took the property as tenants in common without fetter and the three brothers who executed a mortgage of the properties to the appellant acted within their powers.

Mohammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi, (1932) 63 M.L.J. 180: L.R. 59 I.A. 236: I.L.R. 7 Luck. 257 (P.C.), distinguished.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly in O. S. No. 97 of 1932.

T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and K. G. Srinivasa Aiyar for Appellant.

D. A. Shanmugasundaraswami for Respondent.

Leach, C.J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellant was the plaintiff in a suit filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly to enforce a mortgage executed by three brothers, Nataraja, Nilamegham and Manickavachagam Pillai, sons of one Chockalingam Pillai. Chockalingam had five sons, the other two being named Chandrasekharam and Muthuvelu respectively. The family was joint until the 30th January, 1919, when Chockalingam and his sons executed a deed of partition. The deed provided that three houses (which had been used as the family residence) should be held by the members of the family as tenants in common, but no member should have the right to dispose of his share to a stranger. Chockalingam and Muthuvelu died shortly after the execution of the deed. On the 20th August, 1925, Nataraja, Nilamegham, Chandrasekharam and Manickavachagam on behalf of themselves and their respective sons executed in favour of the appellant a mortgage of the three houses to secure a loan of Rs. 6,000. This loan was repaid in part, but on the 25th October, 1928, a fresh mortgage of the property was executed to secure the sum of Rs. 5,000, Chandrasekharam did not join in the later mortgage as he was away at the time. On the 10th August, 1932, the plaintiff instituted a suit to recover what was due to him on this mortgage. Nilamegham was then dead and his son, the sole respondent in this appeal, was made a party as his legal representative.

At the time of the institution of the suit the respondent was still a minor and his mother was appointed to act as his guardian ad litem. She took no steps, however, to defend the suit and as the result an ex parte decree was passed against the respondent, limited of course, to his interest in the property in suit. The suit was contested by certain of the other defendants on various grounds, but it is not necessary to state them. It is sufficient to say that the issues did not embrace the question now before the Court and were all decided in favour of the plaintiff. A decree as prayed was passed against the other defendants, except Chandrasekharam and his sons, who were dismissed from the suit as they were not parties to the second mortgage. The respondent then filed an application for an order setting aside the ex parte decree. The application was granted and the respondent submitted a written statement in which he contended that his father had only a life interest in the property. At the hearing the respondent abandoned this plea, but contended that by reason of the partition deed the sons of Chockalingam had no right to effect a mortgage and therefore his interest was not charged. This contention was upheld and the respondent's interest in the property was exonerated from the mortgage. The preliminary decree was accordingly amended.

The plaintiff has appealed. The validity of the decision of the Subordinate Judge is challenged on two grounds. In the first place it is contended that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the partition deed operated to prevent the sons from mortgaging their interests in the property. It is said that the restriction on alienation amounts to an absolute restriction and therefore is void under S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the second place it is said that the facts did not warrant the setting aside of the ex parte decree passed against the respondent. The second contention cannot be supported because the appellant has not printed the evidence on which the Subordinate Judge based his order setting aside the ex parte decree or even the order itself. There being no materials before us from which it can be shown that the order is wrong it must stand.

The clause in the partition deed referring to this property is cl. 4, which reads as follows:—

“(a) The three houses described in Sch. G shall be enjoyed in common by T. M. Chockalingam Pillai and his said sons as at present during the lifetime of Chockalingam Pillai. (b) It shall not be competent for any one of the said sons to sell, mortgage or otherwise alienate the houses in Sch. G during Chockalingam Pillai's lifetime. (c) After Chockalingam Pillai's lifetime also the houses in Sch. G should be enjoyed by the sons in common without partition and should not be let, sold or otherwise disposed of to any stranger. If any of the sons does not want to live in the house mentioned in Sch. G, he shall not be at liberty in any manner to let or lease, etc., his undivided share to a stranger to the family but shall do so only to any of his brothers or their heirs for a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,000 (Rupees Thousand). The intention of all the parties to this deed being that the houses should be enjoyed by only the members of the family and their descendants and not by strangers.”

The estate here created is admittedly a tenancy in common and if the restriction on alienation amounts to an absolute restriction it cannot stand.

I consider that the contention that the restriction is absolute is well founded. The prohibition against alienation to strangers is not limited to the father's lifetime, but is intended to continue in perpetuity. The concluding words of the clause stating the intention of the parties places this beyond doubt. It is true that a right to sell within the family is given, but there is no obligation to buy and a maximum price which is obviously below the real value is fixed. The property was mortgaged in 1925 for Rs. 6,000, and it may be taken that the mortgagee required a substantial margin of security. It follows that it may safely be assumed that the property was worth considerably more than Rs. 6,000 at the time of the mortgage. There is no evidence to justify an inference that the property had increased in value between the date of the partition deed and the date of the mortgage and consequently the only conclusion open to the Court is that the property was worth considerably more than Rs. 6,000 at the date of the partition. Taking the value to be only Rs. 6,000 each son's share at the death of the father was worth Rs. 1,200, but in view of the amount of the first mortgage the figure of Rs. 6,000 cannot be accepted as the proper figure. On the basis of the mortgage the full value was more likely to be in the region of Rs. 9,000, which would make the share of each of the five sons worth about Rs. 1,800. At the date of the mortgage one son had died and the shares of the surviving sons had consequently increased in value. The prohibition against a co-tenant selling his share for more than Rs. 1,000 would mean a sale at a great sacrifice, even if the maximum were realised, but there is the further consideration that there is no obligation to buy even at Rs. 1,000, and this puts a member of the family wishing to sell at a further disadvantage. There is ample authority that provisions such as we have here amount to an absolute restriction on alienation and therefore are void.

In the case of *In re Rosher. Rosher v. Rosher*¹, a testator devised an estate to his son in fee subject to the proviso that if the son, his heirs or devisees, or any person claiming through or under him or them, should desire to sell the estate, or any part or parts thereof during the lifetime of the testator's wife, she should be given the option to purchase the estate at the price of £3,000 for the whole, and at a proportionate price for any part or parts thereof. The selling value of the estate at the date of the will and at the time of the testator's death was £15,000. It was held that the proviso compelling the son to sell at such an undervalue amounted to an absolute restraint on alienation during the lifetime of the widow and was consequently void. The same principle was applied by Eve, J., in *In re Cockerill: Mackaness v. Percival*². In that case a testator, by his will, devised land subject to the proviso that if within twenty years of his death the devisee should desire to sell the land he was to give the governors of a certain school the option of purchasing it at the price of £300 an acre. The total area was about 22 acres and was worth £670 an acre. It was held that the condition amounted to a restraint on alienation and was void for repugnancy. In *In re Elliot: Kelly v. Elliot*³, a testator gave his plantations in Assam and all his other estate to the plaintiff absolutely subject to the payment of his debts, but provided that on a sale by the plaintiff of the plantations the plaintiff should pay to the testator's brother a sum of £1,000 out of proceeds of the sale and another sum of £500 to the testator's sister. Chitty, J., held that the testator had by the direction to pay these legacies imposed no obligation on the plaintiff to sell and that the direction was void for repugnancy. The testator had attempted to create an estate unknown to the law. The owner of property has, as an incident of his ownership, the right to sell and to receive the whole of the proceeds for his own benefit. By providing that the plaintiff should make the payments to his brother and sister he had created a condition which was repugnant to the estate which he had conferred. In Attwater v. Attwater, Romilly, M.R., held that where a testator left an estate to the eldest son of his niece with an injunction never to sell it out of the family, but, if it had to be sold at all, it was to be sold to one of his brothers, the restriction amounted to a total restraint on alienation and was void.

In Gayasi Ram v. Shahabuddins, Sulaiman, C.J., pointed out that in order to ascertain whether there is an absolute restraint or not, the Court has to examine the effect of all the conditions and find whether for all practical purposes alienation is prohibited. The mere fact that there may be some remote contingency in which there may be a possibility of an alienation taking place would not necessarily take the case out of the prohibition contained in S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. In that case a house had been sold for a sum of Rs. 150 with a condition that the vendee was not to transfer, mortgage, give or sell it to any one but the vendor or his heirs. In the event of a breach of this condition the vendor (or his heirs) was to have the right to a reconveyance of the property on payment of Rs. 175. Sixteen years after the conveyance the purchaser sold the property for Rs. 1,000 and the transferee later disposed of it for Rs. 800. The sons of the original vendor sued to recover possession of the property from the ultimate purchaser on payment to him of Rs. 175. It was held that there was an absolute restraint on alienation and therefore the provision for reconveyance was void.

In the case before us the respondent's advocate has placed great reliance on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mohammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibis, but when that decision is examined it cannot be regarded as an authority in support of the plea that the provisions of the partition deed in this case with regard to the family house are valid in law. The facts there were these. One Sughra Bibi brought a suit against her cousin, Afzal Husain, claiming a half share in certain immovable properties in Oudh. The litigation ended in a compromise which was embodied in a decree of the Court. Under the terms of the compromise decree the defendant, who already had a wife, was to marry the plaintiff and the properties were to be held by the two wives in equal shares, but neither was to have power to transfer her moiety to a stranger. After her marriage to the defendant, the plaintiff, in breach of the terms of the compromise decree, alienated her half share to strangers. After her death the respondent in the appeal to the Privy Council, as a legal representative of Sughra Bibi, filed a suit for the recovery of two-thirds of her share from the appellant on the ground that the deceased had no right to alienate her moiety. The appellant's answer was that the restriction on alienation was bad and Sughra Bibi was therefore free to dispose of her moiety as she pleased. The Privy Council held that the condition that the deceased was not to alienate outside the family constituted only a partial restriction on alienation and therefore did not offend against S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Board was only considering the effect of the prohibition so far as the deceased herself was concerned and the observations in the judgment went no further. In the course of the judgment reference was made to *In re Macleay*¹ and *Doe v. Pearson*². In the former of these cases there was a devise of an estate to a brother on condition that he should never sell it out of the family. Jessell, M.R., held that this only amounted to a partial restriction and made the following observations:—

"You may restrict alienation in many ways. You may restrict alienation by prohibiting a particular class of alienation, or you may restrict alienation by prohibiting it to a particular class of individuals, or you may restrict alienation by restricting it to a particular time. In all those ways you may limit it, and it appears to me that in two ways, at all events, this condition is limited. First, it is limited as to the mode of alienation, because the only prohibition is against selling. There are various modes of alienation besides sale; a person may lease, or he may mortgage, or he may settle; therefore it is a mere limited restriction on alienation in that way. Then, again, it is limited as regards class; he is never to sell it out of the family, but he may sell it to any one member of the family. It is not therefore, limited in the sense of there being only one person to buy; the will shows there were a great many members of the family when she made her will; a great many are named in it; therefore you have a class which probably was large, and was certainly not small. Then it is not, strictly speaking, limited as to time, except in this way, that it is limited to the life of the first tenant in tail; of course, if unlimited as to time, it would be void for remoteness under another rule. So that this is strictly a limited restraint on alienation."

In the case before us the restriction against the alienation outside the family applies to the parties to the deed and their descendants and there is the further restriction with regard to price without any obligation to buy. In the course of his judgment, Jessell, M.R., discussed at length the decision in *Attwater v. Attwater*¹. It is evident that he was inclined to think that the decision in *Attwater v. Attwater*¹ went too far, but came to the conclusion that Romily, M.R., did not intend to place a different interpretation on the law from that given by Lord Ellenborough in *Doe v. Pearson*². There property was left to two sisters to be held by them as tenants in common, subject to the condition that if they had no issue they should have no power of alienation except to their sisters or their sisters' children. Lord Ellenborough held this condition was good. The restriction on alienation disappeared with issue and therefore was only partial restriction.

The facts in Mohammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibis and the cases cited therein were very different from the facts in the present case and those authorities have no application here. I hold that the restriction imposed by the deed now under consideration amounts to an absolute restriction on alienation within the meaning of S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act and therefore must be disregarded. Consequently the sons took the property as tenants in common without fetter, and the three brothers who executed the mortgage to the appellant acted within their powers.

The appeal will be allowed and the suit will be decreed against the respondent also, with costs in favour of the appellant here and below. The period allowed for redemption will be six months.

In a case where a sale was set aside, the auction-purchaser cannot be regarded as a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The case not being within S. 47 of the Code, the order of Court for refund of the money is not an order which is appealable.

Krishna Bhupati Devu Garu v. Venkatasami 3 L.W. 105 and Kunhamad v. Chathu 9 M. 437 followed.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Horwill dated 26th February, 1937 and passed in appeal against Appellate Order No. 132 of 1934 preferred to the High Court against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore dated 27th March, 1934 and made in A. S. No. 165 of 1933 (A. S. No. 36 of 1933 District Court, West Tanjore) preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Pattukottai dated 30th January, 1933 and made in E. A. No. 494 of 1932 in O. S. No. 498 of 1921.

G. Gopalaswamy for Appellants.

K. S. Sankara Aiyar for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellants are the legal representatives of a person who purchased property at a sale held in execution of a decree. The sale was set aside on the ground of irregularity in its conduct. The amount for which the property had been sold was paid into Court and was withdrawn by the decree-holder. The auction-purchaser died before the sale was set aside and the appellants are his legal representatives. They applied for the refund of the money and obtained an order for repayment from the District Munsif in whose Court the execution proceedings had been instituted. The question which we have to consider is whether the District Munsif's order can be made the subject-matter of an appeal.

Leach, C.J.

The sale took place on the 24th June, 1922, and was confirmed on the 25th of the next month. The auction-purchaser then paid into Court the money and it was drawn out by the decree-holder immediately. As the result of the application of the judgment-debtor in that behalf the sale was set aside on the 17th December, 1923. The decree-holder and the appellants (the legal representatives of the auction-purchaser who had died) appealed to the District Judge. The appeals were dismissed and a second appeal to this Court met with the same fate. The appellants were allowed to file an appeal under cl. 15 of Letters Patent and this appeal was also dismissed, the final decision being given on the 13th September, 1929. It was not until the 29th August, 1932, that the appellants applied to the execution Court for an order under O. 21, r. 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure directing the decree-holder to refund the amount due to them as the result of the setting aside of the sale. The decree-holder resisted the application on the ground that it was barred by the law of limitation. His contention was that time began to run from the date of the order of the District Munsif setting aside the sale, namely, the 17th December, 1923. The District Munsif, however, held that time began to run from 13th September, 1929, the date of the dismissal of the Letters Patent Appeal and therefore the application was in time. The decree-holder appealed to the Subordinate Judge and also filed an application for revision to this Court in the event of it being held that an appeal did not lie. The Subordinate Judge held that the appeal did lie and allowed it. In his opinion time began to run from the date of the setting aside of the sale by the District Munsif. The appellants then appealed to this Court and the appeal was heard by Horwill, J., who accepted the decision of the Subordinate Judge, but gave a certificate permitting the present appeal. There are really two questions involved in this appeal, namely, (1) whether the order of the District Munsif directing the refund is appealable, and (2) whether time began to run from 17th December, 1923, or from 13th September, 1929. If the first question is answered in the appellants' favour, the second question will not need consideration because in that case the order of the District Munsif must stand. For reasons which I shall indicate we are of opinion that the first contention is well founded.

An order passed on application filed under O. 21, r. 93 is not appealable under O. 43. The question then is whether the matter is one which comes within S. 47. If it does the order is appealable. The appellants say that the case does not fall within S. 47, because it is not a matter which relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree and in any event an auction purchaser cannot be regarded as the representative of the decree-holder or judgment-debtor in a case like this. It is conceded by the learned advocate for the respondent that the matter is not one which relates to the execution of the decree; but he says it does relate to its discharge or satisfaction. We are unable to accept this argument. As the result of the setting aside of the sale the position was restored to what it was at the time the decree-holder asked for the attachment of the property. The person to whom the property had been sold could no longer be regarded as the auction-purchaser. The sale had gone and he had no further concern with the matter beyond getting back from the decree-holder the money which he had paid, as the purchase consideration. As the result of the order setting aside the sale the decree was left entirely undischarged. Of course, it cannot be denied that the application for refund of the money was a matter arising out of the execution proceedings but it was not a matter relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

This view has been taken by this Court on two previous occasions. In Krishna Bhupati Devu Garu v. Venkataswami, Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ., held that an order made under r. 93 of O. 21 for the repayment of purchase money when the sale has been set aside is not a question between the parties to the suit relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree as it has no legal effect on the rights and liabilities as between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. In *Kunhammed v. Chathu*², Collins, C.J. and Brandt, J., gave a similar decision. Horwill, J., refused to follow these cases, although he was clearly bound by them, because he considered that there was a very strong tendency to give a wide application to S. 47 and to bring within its scope questions arising between the parties to the suit and the auction-purchaser. The auction-purchaser comes within S. 47 when he is standing in the shoes either of the decree-holder or of the judgment-debtor. Unless he can in law be regarded as a representative of either he certainly does not come within the section, and in this case the auction-purchaser cannot be regarded as a representative of the judgment-debtor because the sale has been set aside. According to decisions of this Court he became the representative of the judgment-debtor when he became the auction-purchaser, but as the result of the sale having been set aside he lost that character. The case cannot be brought within S. 47 and therefore the order directing the refund is not an order which is appealable. The appeal will therefore be allowed and the order of the District Munsif restored. The appellants are entitled to their costs here and below.

The position with regard to the revision petition filed by the respondent remains to be considered. As the result of his decision on the question whether an appeal lies Horwill, J., dismissed this petition. Although it was dismissed merely on the ground that an application in revision was no longer necessary we consider that the dismissal order must stand. The only contention that can be advanced in support of the application is that the District Munsif misinterpreted the law of limitation. Assuming that the District Munsif was wrong in holding that the period of limitation started to run from the date when the auction sale was set aside it does not mean that the respondent was entitled to have that order revised. If he made a mistake—I do not say that he did—the application would not lie. As it had been often pointed out a mere error of law does not bring a case within the provisions of S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application will therefore stand dismissed, but there will be no order here as to costs.

In a suit for partition and possession including a prayer for future mesne profits a preliminary decree was passed on 30th July, 1931. The question of mesne profits was left open. A final decree was passed on 15th January, 1932, and the plaintiff obtained possession in execution of that decree. On 30th January, 1934, the plaintiffs made an application purporting to be under O. 20, r. 12, Civil Procedure Code, asking for an enquiry into the future mesne profits and for an order to direct the defendants to pay what was found to be due from them. The District Munsif dismissed the application on the ground that there was no direction for an enquiry into the mesne profits either in the judgment or in the decree. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge with a court-fee of one rupee only. On behalf of the Government it was contended that the plaintiff should estimate the amount at which they valued their relief and pay ad valorem court-fee on the figure stated by them.

Held, the order rejecting the application would not amount to a "decree" as defined in S. 2 (d), Civil Procedure Code, or an order having the force of a decree. The fact that a final decree had been passed in regard to a partition does not deprive the Court of the power of ordering an inquiry into future mesne profits and of passing a second final decree. The application under O. 20, r. 12 or an appeal from an order rejecting such application cannot be regarded as having been made or arising from an order in execution. The appeal was rightly valued under Art. 11, Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act.

profits, was instituted by the plaintiffs in the Court of the District Munsif at Kurnool. It was decided in their favour and a preliminary decree was passed on the 30th July, 1931; but the question of future mesne profits was ordered by the District Munsif to be left open. The property was partitioned and the partition was followed by a final decree. This was passed on the 15th January, 1932. After the plaintiffs had obtained possession in the execution of this decree, they applied to the Court on the 30th July, 1934, asking for an enquiry into the future mesne profits and for an order to direct the defendants to pay what was found to be due from them (E. P. No. 391 of 1932). This application which purported to be under O. 20, r. 12, Civil Procedure Code, was opposed by the defendants mainly on the ground that there was no direction for an enquiry into the mesne profits either in the judgment or in the decree. This contention found favour with the District Munsif and the application was dismissed on the 13th March, 1936. An appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs against this order to the District Judge on which they affixed a court-fee of one rupee only. The Court-Fee Examiner objected to this as insufficient as according to him the order passed by the District Munsif on the 13th March, amounted to a decree, and since the relief claimed in the appeal was unascertainable, he contended that the plaintiffs should be ordered to estimate the amount at which they valued their relief and to pay an ad valorem court-fee on the figure stated by them. The learned District Judge was of opinion that since the plaintiffs were asking for future mesne profits only, they could not be required to estimate the relief, the value of which was unknown to them and the court-fee paid by them was sufficient. The correctness of this order has been questioned before me.

It might be mentioned here that the appeal from the order passed by the District Munsif on the 13th March, 1936, was accepted by the learned District Judge as he was of opinion that the words in the preliminary decree under which the determination of the future mesne profits was left open must be taken to mean that the matter "was left open to be agitated in a subsequent enquiry constituting a continuation of the suit".

This order was appealed against and was confirmed by me on the 25th January, 1939, as I found that the Court which had passed the preliminary decree had not omitted to give a direction in regard to the future mesne profits and that in view of the terms in which the preliminary decree was passed they could be ascertained by the Court which had passed the decree. The words in the preliminary decree were, to put differently, taken as being tantamount to a direction for the ascertainment of the future mesne profits and it is only on that basis that I would have to consider the point which has been raised on behalf of the Government.

It has been pointed out in Doraiswamy v. Subramania that the power of the Court to award future mesne profits is discretionary. The provision contained in O. 7, r. 2 refers to mesne profits which have accrued before the institution of the suit. S. 9 of Madras Act V of 1922 which replaces the second paragraph of S. 11 of the Court-Fees Act provides that no decree determining the amount of mesne profits falling due after the institution of a suit would be executable until the requisite court-fee is paid on the amount claimed in execution. It would therefore follow that if the Court had exercised a discretion in the plaintiff's favour and ordered the future mesne profits to be ascertained, they could not have been required to pay any court-fee until the decree had been passed and they had applied for execution. The reason behind the rule contained in S. 9 of the Madras Act apparently is that persons asking for future mesne profits were not considered to be able to estimate the value of their claims firstly because they could not anticipate the rate at which the mesne profits would be granted by the Court and secondly they could not be aware of the period for which these would be found due and payable. If the plaintiffs could not be asked to pay a court-fee for the future mesne profits in a suit before a final decree was passed, can they be asked to do so simply because they had to prefer an appeal, if one lay against the order refusing to hold an enquiry. If the value of the relief asked for in the suit and in the appeal happens to be the same and it must be so in this case as the plaintiffs' prayer both in the trial and the lower appellate Court was the same, the court-fee payable in either court would also be the same. Since no court-fee is required as stated above for this relief in the suit, it would appear to follow that no Court-fee could be required for the same relief for the purposes of the appeal. The inability of the plaintiffs to estimate the mesne profits continued even at the time when the appeal was preferred by them before the learned District Judge.

The lower appellate Court had, in coming to the same conclusion, based its decision on a Division Bench case of this Court given in *Kandunni Nair v. Raman Nair*¹. While dealing with the question of future mesne profits, the learned Chief Justice and another learned Judge of this Court observed as follows :—

“Where, however a preliminary decree only makes provision for the subsequent determination of the mesne profits, we think that the apt occasion for requiring a defendant to pay a court-fee in this respect would be, if and when the profits have been determined by a final decree.”

This observation would cover the case of a plaintiff also who is asking for future mesne profits and seems to conclude the point raised now. It has been contended on behalf of the Government however, that this does not apply as the plaintiffs had applied for an ascertainment of mesne profits under O. 20, r. 12, Civil Procedure Code, and appealed against the order refusing to entertain that application. A reference to this rule would show that in a suit for the recovery of possession of immovable property when an inquiry as to mesne profits from the institution of the suit has been directed at the time when the decree is passed, the Court would have to pass a final decree in accordance with the result of such enquiry. It has been held already in this case that the Court which passed the preliminary decree in this case must be taken to have directed an enquiry into future mesne profits. Why should then an application on behalf of the plaintiffs entail the consequence of their having to pay a court-fee either in the suit or in the appeal? The enquiry although ordered or deemed to have been ordered by the Court has not taken place so far and a final decree could not therefore have been passed so far as the future mesne profits were concerned in accordance with the result of such enquiry. The application by the plaintiff under O. 20, r. 12 must be taken to be a reminder to the Court to do its duty as required by this rule. The case decided by the Division Bench cannot therefore be distinguished on the ground that the plaintiffs had made an application under O. 20, r. 12, Civil Procedure Code.

1. (1930) 58 M.L.J. 497 : I.L.R. 53 Mad. 540.

.... This order rejecting the application does not fall within the definition of a 'decree' as defined in S. 2 (d) of the Code of Civil Procedure and would not therefore, as alleged by the Court-fee Examiner, amount to a decree. If the plaintiffs could not be forced to estimate the value of the relief for which they had prayed in the trial Court, they could not have been asked to do so in the appellate Court either. When the trial Court had not done what it was legally bound to do, the plaintiffs' remedy was to make the application under O. 20, r. 12 in the first instance and either appeal against the order or have it revised when this application was dismissed. It would have been a different matter if the trial Court had been found not to have given any direction for an inquiry into future mesne profits. In that case no order could have been passed for this purpose and the application under the provisions of this rule would not have been maintainable. The order passed by the first Court cannot in the circumstances be regarded to be even an order having the force of a decree.

Pedda Pulla
Reddi
v.
Chinna
Venkata
Reddi.

It would make no difference in my opinion if a final decree in regard to partition had been passed already. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs was for that reason inclined to urge that the order passed by the trial Court was in execution. But this contention is incorrect inasmuch as there was no final decree for mesne profits which could have been executed. An inquiry into future mesne profits had still to be held before the Court could have been in a position to pass a final decree. The fact that a final decree had been passed in regard to partition does not deprive the Court of the power of ordering an inquiry into future mesne profits and of a passing a second final decree. The application made by the plaintiffs under O. 20, r. 12 or an appeal from an order rejecting that application cannot be regarded as having been made in or arising from an order in execution.

In view of what has been said, I must find that the appeal, if it was competent—as to which I express no opinion, was rightly valued under Art. 11 of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act and the order passed by the learned District Judge was correct.

Transfer of Property Act (VI of 1882), S. 53—Mortgage—Nominal transaction to shield properties from creditors—If valid to the extent supported by consideration.

It was found that the suit mortgage represented only a nominal transaction. Defendants 6 and 7 were simple money decree-holders who had attached the mortgaged properties. Another mortgage in favour of the fifth defendant was also admitted by the fifth defendant to be a nominal transaction. The learned Subordinate Judge gave a mortgage decree against the first defendant and his sons defendants 2 to 4 for the sums found to have been actually advanced by the plaintiff and declared the right of the plaintiff under the suit mortgage to be subject not merely to a pre-existing mortgage in favour of the seventh defendant but also to the rights of defendants 6 and 7 under the attachment in execution. On the plaintiff's appeal, Held, it is well-established law that if a transaction offends S. 53, Transfer of Property Act, it cannot ordinarily be upheld even to the extent to which it may be found to be supported by consideration.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Varada-
chariar, J.

Varadachariar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of money due under a mortgage bond, Ex. A, executed on 5th October, 1929, by the first defendant and the second defendant in favour of the plaintiff. Defendants 1 to 4 are members of a joint Hindu family, the first defendant being the father and defendants 2 to 4 his sons. The fifth defendant was impleaded, as a document Ex. I had been executed by the first defendant in his favour on 7th October, 1929, and according to its tenor it purported to be a puisne mortgage. But the fifth defendant admitted that it was a nominal transaction and he has accordingly taken no part in the suit except that he was examined as D. W. 1 and has deposed not merely to the fact that Ex. I was a nominal transaction but also to a conversation that took place between himself and the first defendant about the time when Exs. A and I were thought of. The first defendant raised some objections in respect of certain portions of the amounts claimed by the plaintiff to be due. But, on these points, he has acquiesced in the finding of the lower Court. The real contesting defendants were defendants 6 and 7 who had obtained a money decree against the first defendant in O. S. No. 43 of 1929 and had attached the properties hypothecated under Ex. A in execution of their money decree. As attachment was effected only in 1933, the claim under Ex. A would have had precedence, if the mortgage was otherwise valid. Defendants 6 and 7 contended that Ex. A only evidenced a nominal transaction and that, in any event, it had been executed to defraud the sixth defendant and other creditors of the first defendant.

On the contention of defendants 6 and 7, the third issue in the case was raised. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Exs. A and I had been brought into existence in pursuance of a common object to help the first defendant as against his creditors including the sixth defendant, and that Ex. A was not supported by consideration even in respect of the two amounts of Rs. 1,600 said to be due from the first defendant to the plaintiff and of Rs. 2,300 said to have been advanced by the plaintiff to the first defendant contemporaneously with Ex. A. He felt no doubt that Ex. A had been brought into existence to be used as a shield against the sixth defendant in respect of the money claim he had against the first defendant and in respect of which the suit O. S. No. 43 of 1929 was instituted within a month after the date of Ex. A. In the result he gave a mortgage decree against defendants 1 to 4 for the sums that he found to have been actually advanced by him and declared the plaintiff's right under Ex. A to be subject not merely to the pre-existing mortgage under Ex. II in favour of the seventh defendant but also to the rights of defendants 6 and 7 under the attachment made by them in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 43 of 1929. It is against this part of the decree which makes the plaintiff's rights subject even to the attachment in O. S. No. 43 of 1929 that this appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff.

[His Lordship then discussed the evidence and concluded.]

In the light of these circumstances, the inference drawn by the lower Court seems to us to be the only reasonable inference, that Ex. A must be held to have represented only a nominal transaction. But it is sufficient for the purposes of this case even if it is held to be a transaction operative between the parties but voidable as against the creditors under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Even in the view that the transaction was voidable under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, Mr. Raghava Rao contended that to the extent to which Ex. A was shown to have been supported by consideration, the plaintiff was entitled to a mortgage decree not merely against defendants 1 to 4 but even against sixth and seventh defendants. As we have already stated that the item of Rs. 1,600 referred to in the mortgage bond does not represent a real debt, this argument will be of no avail to the plaintiff in respect of that sum. It will arise only in respect of the sum of Rs. 2,300 which the learned Judge has found must have been drawn by the first defendant some months after the date of Ex. A and utilised in paying off some of his debts. It is well established law that if a transaction offends S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, it cannot ordinarily be upheld even to the extent to which it may be found to be supported by consideration; because, whatever may be the importance of the question of consideration, when dealing with the question of fact, namely, whether the transaction was one that offended S. 53 or not, it has little bearing once the conclusion is reached that the transaction does offend S. 53. An exception has however been made in the transferee's favour in cases in which any part of the consideration for the document has been applied in the discharge of pre-existing secured debts, and it has been held that the transferee might in such cases be entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation. A distinction has also been suggested between sales and mortgages and it has been held that whereas a sale might have to be wholly set aside if it offends S. 53, a mortgage might be upheld as a valid security to the extent of the debt actually due on the date of the mortgage. This distinction has been based on the ground that to that extent the transaction would merely amount to a preference and as such would not fall under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. This we understand is the basis of the decision in *China Pitchiah v. Pedakotiah*¹. But no case has gone the length of holding that even when there was no pre-existing debt, the mere fact that some consideration passed under a mortgage which on the evidence has been held to be in fraud of creditors will justify the view that the mortgage can be held to constitute a valid security to the extent of the contemporaneous advance. Reliance was however placed by Mr. Raghava Rao in this connection on certain observations in *Loorithi Odayar v. Gopalasami Aiyar*¹. Some of the observations there seem to be widely expressed but the contrast which the learned Judges emphasise between the decision in *Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar*², which was affirmed by the Privy Council in *Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrigal*³ and the decisions in *Musabur Sahu v. Lala Hakim Lal*⁴ and Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhurias, makes it clear that they had in mind the distinction between a transaction in fraud of creditors and a transaction only amounting to a preference. If the learned Judges intended to lay down the law in the sense now contended for by Mr. Raghava Rao, we venture to think, with all respect, that it would be difficult to reconcile the decision with the weight of authority. Where a person lends money for the first time under a mortgage like the present, it will not be possible to regard it as a case of preferencce, merely because that money is utilised by the transferor to pay off some of his simple debts. We may add that on the facts we have above stated, the sum of Rs. 2,300 can scarcely be regarded as even amounting to a contemporaneous advance. It was in our opinion only money which the plaintiff held for the benefit of the defendants and to that extent it was a secret advantage for the debtors' benefit. The fact that subsequent to the institution of O. S. No. 43 of 1929 by defendants 6 and 7, the first defendant drew some moneys from the plaintiff and utilised the same to pay off some of his creditors cannot in our opinion improve the plaintiff's position in respect of Ex. A.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents 6 and 7.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 1, r. 10—Mortgage granted by partnership—Dissolution—Unregistered assignment of partnership property to new partnership by retiring partners—Retiring partners' interest in mortgaged property not transferred because assignment not registered—Action by new partnership to enforce mortgage security—Amendment of plaint by adding retiring partners as co-defendants with mortgagor—Whether action maintainable—Duly registered assignment of partnership property executed by retiring partners pendente lite—Whether effective to entitle new partnership to sue.

A firm consisting of nine partners in 1925 granted a mortgage of two houses. In 1926 seven of the partners retired from the firm, purporting one of them orally and the other six by a written document to assign to the remaining partners the plaintiffs, their whole interest in the partnership property. Neither the written nor the verbal assignment was registered under the Indian Registration Act and they were not effective to transfer to the plaintiffs the assigning partners' interest as mortgagees in the mortgaged property. In 1927, the new partnership, consisting of the two plaintiffs as continuing partners, brought an action against the mortgagees by way of enforcing the mortgage against the mortgaged property. The trial judge having upheld the defendants' objection that the retiring partners' interest in the mortgaged property had not passed to the plaintiffs, so that all the necessary parties had not been joined in the action, granted leave to amend by adding the seven retiring partners as co-defendants. Those partners thereupon executed a new deed of assignment in favour of the plaintiffs, which was duly registered. At the resumed hearing, the trial judge dismissed the action because the only proof of the plaintiffs' title to the mortgaged property was the unregistered document of 1926, and he refused to have regard to the subsequent registered assignment made by the retiring partners pendente lite.

Held, (1) that, while it would have been more satisfactory that the retiring partners should have been joined as co-plaintiffs, yet, when once they had been joined as co-defendants, all the necessary parties were before the Court, which could accordingly grant the plaintiffs the appropriate relief.

(2) That the effect of the second registered deed of transfer was to make the plaintiffs the persons entitled to sue although, at the beginning of the suit, the appropriate persons had been the nine partners of the old partnership Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Bombay, dated 16th March, 1937 (Beaumont, C.J. and Blackwell, J.) reversing a decree of that Court in its original civil jurisdiction dated 13th February and 30th July, 1936.

The appellant, Monghibai, and her husband since deceased, in 1925 borrowed Rs. 1,20,000 from a partnership called Cooverji Umersey & Co. The loan was secured in the first place on a quantity of cotton, with a right in the lenders to have recourse for any deficiency to certain house property of the borrowers. In November, 1926, the partnership was dissolved, six of the retiring partners executing a transfer purporting to assign their interest in the partnership property to the respondents, Cooverji Umersey and his father who were also partners. That document, not being registered under S. 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, was accordingly ineffective to transfer an interest in immovable property, and therefore did not operate to transfer the retiring partners' interest as mortgagees in the mortgaged property. An oral assignment by the seventh retiring partner of all his interest in the partnership to the respondent and his father was similarly ineffective for the same reason.

The respondent and his father continued to carry on the partnership under the same name, and in January, 1927, they brought an action against the mortgagors to recover the sum due to them and to realise the mortgaged property. The matter came before Wadia, J., who on the first hearing upheld an objection by the defendants that all the parties necessary were not before the Court, but granted the plaintiffs leave to amend by adding the retiring partners as co-defendants. On the resumed hearing, he dismissed the action on the ground that the plaintiffs' only evidence of title to the mortgaged property was the document of 1926 which was inadmissible because unregistered, and that the plaintiffs could not rely on the assignment executed between the two hearings in writing by all the retiring partners, in favour of the respondent (his father having died), and duly registered.

The plaintiff appealed from that decision to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction, and the appeal was allowed. The defendant mortgagor, Monghibai, now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

C. S. Rewcastle, K.C. and P. V. Subba Row for Appellant.—Prima facie the respondent had no right to sue to realise the mortgaged property, for he sued as the representative of the new firm. The document of 1926 because unregistered was not operative to effect any transfer of the partnership interest in immovable property away from the retiring partners. Therefore the mortgagees' interest never passed to the respondent, but remained in the nine original partners including the respondent. The necessary parties were accordingly not before the Court. Even if that defect could be cured, which, it is submitted, it could not, because the unregistered assignment was the only evidence of the plaintiffs' title to the mortgaged property and it was inadmissible for that purpose because unregistered, the retiring partners had debarred themselves from bringing any action to enforce the mortgage by virtue of the assignment in writing executed in August, 1934, which transferred their whole interest in the partnership property to the respondent. On any view, therefore, it is submitted, the action was not maintainable.

A. M. Dunne, K.C., Sir Thomas Strangman, K.C. and C. Bagram for Respondent.—It is submitted that if any defect of title resulted from the failure to register the assignments of 1926, the adding of all the retiring partners as co-defendants cured it. Its effect was to bring before the Court all the parties interested in the mortgaged property, and there was accordingly no reason why the suit should not proceed. That result accords entirely with the realities of the situation, which, it is submitted, the appellant's argument does not. The retiring partners having disclaimed all interest in the question, it is only proper for the remaining partner to be able to enforce the rights which are expressed in that disclaimer to be vested in him alone.

Further, the respondent was entitled to sue by virtue of the assignment made in August, 1934, and duly registered. Whatever effect it may have had on the interest in the subject-matter of the suit of the retiring partners, as assignors, it surely enables the respondent, as assignee, to enforce rights in respect of property which has been assigned to him. That document, therefore, was, it is submitted, in itself sufficient to entitle the respondent to maintain the suit.

2nd May, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
Porter.

LORD PORTER.—This case raises a short point for the decision of the Board. It is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Bombay in its appellate jurisdiction dated the 16th March, 1937. By its judgment the Appeal Court affirmed a decree of the High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction dated the 30th July, 1936.

Up to and after the year 1925, a firm called Cooverji Umersey & Co. were carrying on business in partnership in Bombay. In 1925 it consisted of nine partners, Cooverji Umersey, the respondent, his father Umersey Katchra, and seven others who were the defendants Nos. 4 to 10 below.

On the 30th September, 1925, one Mawji Waghji and his wife, the appellant, borrowed Rs. 1,20,000 from the firm and gave a promissory note for that sum in favour of the firm. The advance was secured by certain bales of cotton, and at the same time the title deeds of two houses belonging to the appellant and to her husband, and situated at King Lane and Borah Bazar Street, were deposited with the firm by way of equitable security and as further cover for the loan. In case of default the firm was to have recourse to the bales of cotton in the first instance and against the house property for any deficiency.

In pursuance of this arrangement the firm sold the bales of cotton, leaving, however, a large portion of the debt unpaid.

In November, 1926, seven members of the firm retired, leaving the respondent and his father the only remaining members.

Of those seven the tenth defendant, Bhulabhai Devi, pursuant to an oral agreement made on the 6th November, 1926, with the respondent and his father, retired from the firm, paid to them the sum of Rs. 17,000 for his share of the losses of the business, released all his share, right, title and interest in the assets, outstandings, property and goodwill of the partnership business in favour of the respondent and his father, and agreed to execute in their favour all such transfers as might become necessary for better and more effectively assigning and transferring his share, right, title and interests.

On the 17th November, 1926, the other six defendants—Nos. 4 to 9—executed a document purporting to assign their interest in the partnership property to the respondent and his father.

This document was not registered in accordance with the terms of S. 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908; and it was contended by the appellant, and was not disputed by the respondent, that neither the tenth defendant's oral agreement nor the written document of the 17th November were effective to transfer an interest in immovable property. The mortgage rights in the house property therefore remained in all the original partners.

After November, 1926, the respondent and his father continued to carry on business in the firm name. On the 21st January, 1927, the firm as then constituted brought the present suit in the High Court of Bombay against the appellant and her husband for a declaration that the plaintiffs were equitable mortgagees of the two houses, for an order that the defendants pay them the sum of Rs. 1,33,500 with interest on Rs. 1,20,000 at 9 per cent. per annum from the 1st January, 1927, until judgment, and that in default of payment the mortgaged properties might be sold and the proceeds applied in and towards payment of the plaintiffs' claim. In this action the respondents raised a counter-claim. No question now arises with regard to the cotton, the promissory note or the counter-claim, but it was and is contended on behalf of the appellant that the suit in respect of the equitable mortgage of the houses was not maintainable inasmuch as the proper parties to the suit had not been joined. In her submission, the houses not having passed under the unregistered assignment of the 17th November, 1926, still remained vested in the original partners and could only be recovered in an action in which they were plaintiffs or, at least, were parties.

Pending the trial of the action the respondent's father Umersey Katchra died on or about the 21st October, 1928, leaving the respondent solely entitled beneficially to all the assets, outgoings, property and goodwill of the partnership business, to the sum of Rs. 1,20,000 and to the benefit of the mortgage securing it.

The case came on for hearing before Wadia, J., on the 28th June and 9th August, 1934, and the appellant thereupon raised the contention that the transfer was ineffective as it had not been registered, and that the property had never passed from the original partners to the present respondent and his father. With this contention the learned Judge agreed, but he allowed the suit to proceed and oral evidence to be given in case the respondent could prove some oral terms of dissolution which should be admissible.

To meet the objection that all the necessary parties had not been joined, the plaintiffs applied that the seven retiring partners should be placed on the record as co-plaintiffs or as co-defendants. Upon this application the learned Judge granted leave to amend the title of the suit by adding the retiring partners as defendants and by making the necessary consequent amendments in the plaint. Following this order the seven retiring partners were added as defendants, and the appropriate amendments made.

Defendants 4 to 10 put in a joint written statement referring to the document of the 17th November, 1926, and stating that they had transferred all their interest in the assets of the firm and had no further interest in the amount due from their co-defendants.

It appears that, after the hearing before the learned Judge and before the making of the written statement, all the seven retiring partners had executed a fresh deed dated the 22nd August, 1934, transferring the assets of the firm to the respondent as sole owner of the business. This deed was duly registered and was relied upon by the respondent and defendants 4 to 10.

The case came on for hearing before the learned Judge for the second time on the 11th December, 1934, when two of the retiring partners, one of whom had, and the other of whom had not, executed the document of 17th November, 1926, gave evidence and stated that they made no claim to any of the assets of the firm. The respondent also attempted to put in evidence the documents of the 17th November, 1926, and of the 22nd August, 1934, but this evidence was rejected.

After hearing the evidence the learned Judge delivered judgment, holding that the only proof of the respondent's title was to be found in the document of the 17th November, 1926, and that as it required to be registered it could not transfer the property and was inadmissible in evidence. He also rejected the contention based on the second document since it had been executed subsequently to the institution of the suit. He accordingly held that the suit was not maintainable.

From this judgment the respondent appealed on the ground that the learned Judge should have allowed the defendants 4 to 10 to be made co-plaintiffs, but that in any case, once they had been made defendants, all parties interested were before the Court and appropriate relief could have been given.

The Appeal Court allowed the appeal on the ground that, as soon as the application to join the other seven partners was granted by the learned Judge and the amendment made, the Court had before it all persons interested in the equitable mortgage the creation of which was not in dispute.

The learned Chief Justice stated that the respondent was clearly before the Court as plaintiff, although, in his view, inaccurately described as Cooverji Umersey & Co. Moreover the Court had all the other persons interested in the equitable mortgage before it as defendants, and in those circumstances why the Court could not grant a decree enforcing the equitable mortgage he had great difficulty in understanding. In his view, with which Rangnekar, J., agreed, the action in which the plaintiffs were described as Cooverji Umersey & Co. must in the circumstances be considered to have been brought by the respondent and his father. At that time, however, the right to recover had not passed from the original nine partners since the oral and written but unregistered transfers were ineffective to bring about that result. The suit, however, could and would logically have been properly constituted if it had been amended by making the nine partners plaintiffs. But the same result could be achieved by making the seven retiring partners defendants since in that case all the parties would be before the Court. Technically the respondent's name should be substituted for that of the firm, inasmuch as the father was dead and the respondent was the sole owner of the partnership property, but such a change constituted only a formal amendment, and once it was made judgment could be entered for the respondent since he alone was beneficially entitled and the defendant partners disclaimed any interest.

The Appeal Court accordingly ordered the plaint to be amended by inserting the name of Cooverji Umersey in place of Cooverji Umersey & Co., and the suit was remitted to the lower Court for the trial of the issue raised by the counter-claim.

After hearing issues the learned Judge on the 30th July, 1936, passed the usual preliminary mortgage decree ordering payment of a sum of Rs. 1,37,287-2-8 with interest and, in default of payment, that the respondent should be entitled to apply for a decree absolute for the sale of the mortgage security. The second defendant appealed against the preliminary mortgage decree, and this appeal was dismissed with costs; and the decree passed accordingly, on the 16th March, 1937. It is from this decree that the present appeal is brought.

The only question argued before their Lordships was whether this suit was maintainable by the present respondent.

By O. 1, r. 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure:—

"(1) . . . the Court may at any stage of the suit, if satisfied that the suit has been instituted through a bona fide mistake and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as the Court thinks just.

"(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added."

It was not disputed that the bringing of the action in the names of the two remaining partners as plaintiffs was due to a genuine mistake, and in any case this order gives the Court full power to amend the parties at any time. If, as was admitted in argument and as their Lordships think, the mortgagee's interest in the two houses did not pass to the respondent and his father by reason of the unregistered document of the 17th November, 1926, and the oral agreement made by the 10th defendant, that property remained in the nine original partners. In those circumstances their Lordships agree with the Appeal Court in thinking that it would have been more satisfactory that the seven retiring partners should have been made co-plaintiffs instead of co-defendants, but it may be that they objected to being so joined, or there may be other reasons which do not appear on the record for joining them as co-defendants. In any case they were so joined, the record was amended, and no appeal from the learned Judge's order was made. The whole of the necessary parties were therefore before the Court, and there seems no reason why the appropriate relief should not have been given.

It has long been recognised that one or more of several persons jointly interested can bring an action in respect of joint property, and, if their right to sue is challenged, can amend by joining their co-contractors as plaintiffs if they will consent or as co-defendants if they will not. Such cases as *Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Company*¹ and *Cullen v. Knowles*² are examples of this principle. Nor indeed would it matter that a wrong person had originally sued though he had no cause of action. See Hughes v. The Pump House Hotel Co., Ltd., (No. 2)¹. Once all the parties are before the Court, the Court can make the appropriate order, and should give judgment in favour of all the persons interested whether they be joined as plaintiffs or defendants. Prima facie, therefore, the trial Court in the present case should have given judgment in favour of the eight of the original partners who survived, though some of them had been made defendants. (See Cullen v. Knowles.)

But it was argued that, even if this view be true, seven of the original partners had, by the transfer of the 22nd August, 1934, made pendente lite, assigned all their rights and interest in the mortgaged houses and could not thereafter maintain an action for sale in respect of them. No doubt it is true that parties who have assigned the whole of their interest pendente lite cannot ask for judgment in respect of an interest which is no longer theirs. But it does not follow that their assignees are thereby precluded from recovering. If it were so, no assignments of property during the course of a trial would be possible. Such a contention is, on the face of it, improbable, and it is now dealt with by O. 17, r. 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which states:—

"A cause or matter shall not become defective by the assignment of any estate or title pendente lite."

But apart from that rule the principle has long been established in English law, and examples will be found in such cases as *Seear v. Lawson*³ and Campbell v. Holyland. The same principle is applied in India and is now embodied in O. 22, rr. 10 (1) and 11, which provides:—

"In other cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved."

"In the application of this Order to appeals, so far as may be, the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include an appellant, the word 'defendant' a respondent, and the word 'suit' an appeal."

Therefore, though at the beginning of the suit the appropriate persons to recover were the nine original partners, once the transfer of the 22nd August, 1934, was made, the party entitled to sue was the present respondent. As their Lordships have indicated, apart from the assignment of the 22nd August, 1934, a decree should prima facie have been passed for the eight survivors of the original partnership, but all eight were before the Court, the respondent after amendment in fact alone was plaintiff, and the retired partners expressly disclaimed any interest.

In these circumstances, their Lordships think that the Appeal Court were right in looking at the substance of the matter and ordering the decree to be passed in favour of the respondent alone. But in any case once the assignment of the 22nd August, 1934, was executed, the respondent alone was entitled to recover, and the decree was rightly passed in his favour.

One further argument urged on behalf of the appellant was that to grant the relief asked for would be to make the registration law of India of no effect.

In their Lordships' view, having regard to the grounds which they have given for affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, no such objection can be sustained.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed and the order of the Appeal Court affirmed. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—I must refuse to allow the appellants to raise at this stage the contention that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to attach because of some infirmity in the notice issued on 17th February, 1932. That plea has never yet been advanced and it is too late to advance it now.

The other question is whether any attachment was in fact validly effected on 1st March, 1932. From the learned District Munsif's judgment it does not appear that this question was discussed before him. But it was discussed before the learned Subordinate Judge and it is important. Ex. A does not purport to be an order for the attachment of anything. It is apparently part of Form 5, Appendix F of the Code of Civil Procedure, translated into Tamil. Attachment of immovable property can only be made by means of prohibitory orders of which Form 24, Appendix E of the Code of Civil Procedure is a specimen. Were any such prohibitory orders ever issued in this case? The learned Subordinate Judge says they were, but that was only what he presumed. The learned advocate for appellants says they were not: the learned advocate for respondent says they were. This was a matter of evidence and not for mere presumption.

A finding will be called for from the Court of the District Munsif of Tenkasi on the question "Was the attachment said to have been effected on 1st March, 1932, made by means of prohibitory orders (O. 21, r. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure)?"

Evidence may be adduced by both sides. Time for submission of finding is six weeks from the date of receipt of this order. Time for filing of objections will be 10 days.

In pursuance of the directions contained in the above order the District Munsif of Tenkasi submitted the following findings:

* * * * *

These appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the District Munsif of Tenkasi upon the issues referred by this Court for trial on Friday, the 21st day of April, 1939, and the case having stood over for consideration, The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—That the attachment made by the Amin on the 1st of March was invalid is I think quite clear. There was no order passed by the District Munsif under O. 21, r. 54. If any such order had been passed it would have been in the records of the Court. The Amin's evidence is unreliable and also inconclusive, for at one moment he says that he affixed a copy of "the warrant" (that is, the warrant in Form 5 of Appendix F) and at another moment he says he affixed a prohibitory order in Form 24 of Appendix E. Moreover, the actual warrant issued to the Amin did not authorize him to attach anything. To effect an attachment of immovable property it is necessary (1) to pass an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and (2) to have that order proclaimed by beat of tom-tom near the property, and to have copies of the prohibitory order affixed on a conspicuous part of the property, on a conspicuous part of the Court-house, and also, in such cases as this, in the office of the Collector of the District. The prohibitory order must be passed by the Court; it is not enough for the Court to say "attach" nor am I prepared to assume, as learned Counsel for the respondent wishes me to do, that since the District Munsif said "attach" and the Amin reported "I have attached" therefore everything needful to effect a valid attachment must have been done. That would be to assume the very point in dispute.

These appeals are accordingly allowed with costs throughout but Vakil's fee in one only A. A. A. O. No. 36. The orders of the lower Courts are set aside, and the appellants' claims allowed.

Leave asked for, and refused.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 109 (2)—Question of religious rites in an important temple—If one contemplated by the section.

The question as to whether in the Tirupathi temple the Thengalais alone have the exclusive right to sing Thengalai mantrams or the Vadagalais have also the right to sing their own mantrams at the same time as the Thengalai mantrams are being sung is a matter relating to religious rights and ceremonies at a temple of national importance which cannot be reduced into terms of money and is a matter contemplated by S. 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code when the questions in issue are in themselves of great public and private importance.

Radhakrishna Aiyar v. Swaminatha Aiyar, (1920) 40 M.L.J. 229: L.R. 48 I.A. 31: I.L.R. 44 Mad. 293 (P.C.), relied on.

Petition under S. 109, cl. (c) and S. 110 and O. 45, rr. 2 and 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to the petitioner herein to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment of the High Court in Appeals Nos. 466 of 1925 and 119 of 1926 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor in O. The Chief Justice.—This is an application for a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The petitioner is the legal representative of the plaintiff who died during the pendency of the appeal. The plaintiff was the head of an important mutt and as such had the right of conducting public worship at the Tirupathi temple in the Chittoor District. Both sides are agreed that the Tirupathi temple is the most important Vaishnavite temple in the whole of India and pilgrims in large numbers visit it every year in order to worship there. The Vaishnavite community is divided into two sects, the Thengalais (Southerners) and Vadagalais (Northerners). It is also common ground that the adherents of each sect are counted by millions. The suit was filed by the plaintiff in order to establish his right to conduct public worship at the temple according to the Thengalai ritual. Before the recitation of the Tamil scriptures (Prabandam), mantras are sung. The mantras sung by the Thengalais are different from those sung by the Vadagalais. After the recitation of the scriptures, mantras are again sung. Here also the mantras sung by the Thengalais differ from the mantras sung by the Vadagalais. There are other points of difference in the worship, but it is unnecessary to pause to state them. The plaintiff's case was that the Thengalai mantras should only be sung at the worship in this temple. The contesting respondents say that the Vadagalai sect has the right of singing its own mantras at the same time as the Thengalai mantras are being sung. The trial Judge held that the plaintiff was right in his contention that only the Thengalai mantras should be sung before the recitation of the scriptures, but he considered that after the recitation of the scriptures the Vadagalais on certain occasions had the right of singing their mantras at the same time as the Thengalais sang theirs. On appeal to this Court it was held that the trial Court was wrong in holding that the Thengalai sect had the right to have their mantras sung at the commencement of the service. The Vadagalais had the same rights as the Thengalais both before and after the recitation of the scriptures.

The plaintiff valued the relief claimed in the plaint at Rs. 10,500 and in the appeal to this Court the relief was valued at a like amount. It is, however, obvious that no monetary value can be attached to the relief and the petitioner rests his case on the provisions of S. 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is said that the questions involved in the appeal are questions of great public and private importance, but the contesting respondents deny this, and maintain that on a previous occasion this Court refused leave and the Privy Council refused special leave to appeal. The case referred to by the learned Advocate for the contesting respondents is *Venkatavaratha Thathachariar v. Ananthachariar*¹. An examination of the judgment there shows that the question in issue was entirely different. The question was whether the Thengalais or the Vadagalais were entitled to an office in a certain temple. The decision therefore does not help the contesting respondents in any way. There can be no doubt that the form of ritual at the Tirupathi temple is a matter of both public and private importance and consequently we are of opinion that the case does fall within S. 109 (c). If there were any doubt, the doubt would be removed by the decision of the Privy Council in *Radhakrishna Aiyar v. Swaminatha Aiyar*², where Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of the Board said:

" it is plain that there may be certain cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute; there are questions, as for example, those relating to religious rights and ceremonies, to caste and family rights, or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject-matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money. Sub-section (c) of S. 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates that such a state of things exists, and r. 3 of O. 45 regulates the procedure."

As this case relates to religious rights and ceremonies at a temple of national importance and the questions in issue are in themselves of great public and private importance, the application will be granted on the usual conditions. Costs of the applicant will be made costs in the appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question whether the Revenue authorities of the Province have the power to impose a penalty under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, 1865, when water is taken without permission during the second crop season for the purpose of irrigating land classified as "single crop wet" and the source from which the water is taken is the source authorised for the irrigation of one crop. One Krishnammal was the pattadar of lands in the village of Sulur, Coimbatore District. The lands, which are registered as Survey Nos. 182 and 269, are single crop wet lands. For many years betel leaves have been grown on Survey No. 182 and cocoanut trees on Survey No. 269. The surrounding lands are all registered as double crop wet lands. On 1st February, 1928, Krishnammal applied to the Collector for permission to convert her lands into double crop wet lands, but she died before her application could be considered. Her daughter Venkatalakshmi Ammal then made a similar application, but she was told to present it again after the patta had been registered in her name. The lands were irrigated by water flowing through a channel constructed by the Government from a tank known as the Sular Tank. In the year 1925-26 permission had been given to Krishnammal to take water from the channel during the second crop season, but in the following year she took extra water without permission, which resulted in the Revenue authorities charging her twice the water cess ordinarily payable for a first irrigated crop under the rules framed by the Government in purported exercise of the powers conferred by the Madras Irrigation Cess Act. For the year 1927-28 water was again taken without permission by Krishnammal and on this occasion a penalty of five times the ordinary water cess was imposed. In the year 1928-29 her daughter Venkatalakshmi Ammal took water without permission during the second crop season and on this occasion the penalty imposed was ten times the ordinary water cess, amounting to Rs. 257-10-0. This resulted in Venkatalakshmi Ammal filing a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Tirupur for the recovery of the amount on the ground that the infliction of the penalty was unlawful. The District Munsif dismissed the suit and his decision was upheld by the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. Venkatalakshmi had died in the meantime and the appeal was preferred by her daughter, as her legal representative. Having lost before the Subordinate Judge the appellant appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by King, J., who concurred in the decisions of the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge, but granted a certificate permitting the present appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The decision of the appeal depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon the second proviso to S. 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act. This section, omitting the first proviso which has no bearing here, reads as follows:—

"1 (a) Whenever water is supplied or used for purposes of irrigation from any river, stream, channel, tank or work belonging to, or constructed by Government and also,

(b) whenever water by direct or indirect flow or by percolation or drainage from any such river, stream, channel, tank or work from or through adjoining land irrigates any land under cultivation or flows into a reservoir and is thereafter used for irrigating any land under cultivation, and, in the opinion of the revenue officer empowered to charge water cess, subject to the control of the Collector, the Board of Revenue and the Government such irrigation is beneficial to, and sufficient for the requirements of the crop on such land, it shall be lawful for the Government before the end of the revenue year succeeding that in which the irrigation takes place to levy at pleasure on the land so irrigated a separate cess for such water, and the Government may prescribe the rules under which, and the rates at which, such water cess as aforesaid shall be levied; and alter or amend the same from time to time:

* * * * *

Provided also that no cess shall be leviable under this Act in respect of land held under ryotwari settlement which is classified and assessed as wet, unless the same be irrigated by using without due authority water from any source herein before mentioned and such source is different from or in addition to that which has been assigned by the Revenue authorities or adjudged by a competent Civil Court as the source of irrigation of such land."

The appellant's case is that inasmuch as her mother had the right to take water for one crop from the channel from the Sular tank, no penalty could be imposed upon her for taking water during the second crop season. It is said that the Government's power to impose a penalty is limited by the proviso to a case where water is taken from a different source or a source in addition to that assigned. On behalf of the respondent it is said that if a source has been assigned for a single crop and the same source is used during the second crop season it must be deemed to be a different source within the meaning of the proviso. It is also urged that the rules framed by the Government under S. 1 govern the interpretation of the section, as there is, it is said, ambiguity in the wording. It is further contended that the Court should read the word "and" which follows the words "from any source hereinbefore mentioned" in the proviso as meaning "or".

The present rules were promulgated in 1917 and are set out at page 136 of Volume 1 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue (Fourth Edition). R. 1 says:—

"Water from a Government source or work is said to be irregularly taken to or used for the irrigation of any land—

(a) when it is taken to or used for such land without the permission of any officer authorised by Government to grant such permission, or

(b) when it is taken or used, contrary to the orders of any authority authorised to give such orders, or

(c) when it is taken or used in breach of any rule or regulation directing from what source or under what conditions water may be taken to or used for such land."

R. 2 provides for the imposition of twice the water cess ordinarily payable for the first infringement of the rules. R. 3 says that for the second infringement five times the ordinary cess shall be imposed, and r. 4 provides for a penalty of ten times the ordinary cess for an infringement on the third or any subsequent occasion. If the appellant's contention is correct these rules cannot be applied in a case like the present one, as they go beyond the section. It has been impressed upon us by the learned Advocate-General that the rules have been in force for many years and a decision adverse to the respondent would mean the discontinuation of a course of practice which has been followed in the Presidency for a long time. It has not been suggested, nor could it be, that the appellant is not entitled to raise the question now, and the Court must decide it without regard to the bearing which the decision will have in other cases.

I consider that the wording of the proviso is free from ambiguity and that its effect is this. No cess shall be leviable under the Act in respect of land held under ryotwari settlement which is classified and assessed as wet, unless the land be irrigated by using without due authority water from a source mentioned in the first part of the section and the source is different from or in addition to that which has been assigned by the Revenue authorities or adjudged by a competent Civil Court as the source of irrigation of the land. A source which is in addition to the assigned source must necessarily be a different source. To enable the Revenue authorities to impose a penalty in respect of land held under ryotwari settlement and classified and assessed as wet there must be unauthorised use of water from a source other than the authorised source. The mere taking of extra water from the authorised source does not come within the exception to the proviso. The authorised source of irrigation in this case is the Sular tank and the channel leading from it. The application of Krishnammal for the transfer of her holdings from dry to wet classification has been put in evidence. The source of irrigation is stated therein to be the Sular tank and the Revenue Inspector recommended that the application be granted. The application was granted by the Collector, whose order is in these words:—

"The transfer of the fields to single crop wet under the Sular supply channel and tank is sanctioned."

The words "from any source hereinbefore mentioned" which appear in the proviso can therefore only be read in this case as meaning the Sular tank and the channel connected therewith. To prevent any misconception I will here say that I do not suggest that if water were taken from an unauthorised channel connected with the Sular tank that this would not be a different source within the meaning of the proviso. I think that it would be a different source, but that question does not arise. The extra water taken by the appellant's mother was taken from the authorised channel. This being the case the appellant is clearly outside the mischief of the section if the words used are to be given their ordinary meaning.

In support of his contention the learned Advocate-General has referred to a statement in Craies on Statute Law (4th Edition, page 146) where it is said that where the language of an Act is ambiguous and difficult to construe, the Court may, for assistance in its construction, refer to rules made under the provisions of the Act, especially where such rules are by the statute authorising them directed to be read as part of the Act. This statement is based on the observation of Mellish, L. J., in Ex parte Wier: In re Wier, where he said:—

"We do not think that any other section of the Act throws any material light upon the proper construction of this section, and if the question had depended upon the Act alone we should have had great doubt what the proper construction was; but we are of opinion that, where the construction of the Act is ambiguous and doubtful on any point, recourse may be had to the rules which have been made by the Lord Chancellor under the authority of the Act, and if we find that in the rules any particular construction has been put on the Act, that it is our duty to adopt and follow that construction."

In this case the rules are not made part of the Act and the knowledge of the person who framed them is not a factor. What is important is that there is no ambiguity in the wording of the proviso. Therefore the Court does not need to call in aid the rules in the matter of interpretation. In fact it is clear that the rules go beyond the Act in a case where the facts are as they are here.

Neither can I see any justification for the Court changing the word 'and' into the word 'or'. It is pointed out in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (8th Edition, page 209) that to carry out the intention of the Legislature, it is occasionally found necessary to read the conjunctions 'or' and 'and' one for the other, and several instances are given. I will not pause to examine them because the law is clearly stated by Lord Halsbury in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Henderson Brothers. In that case the Court was called upon to construe the following words in a statute:—

"Vessels arriving in ballast, but trading outwards, and also vessels built within the port of Liverpool, or trading outward, shall be liable to the rates payable in respect of the most distant of all the ports to which they shall trade outwards, and vessels built within the said port on first trading outwards shall be liable to one moiety only of such rates, but shall thereafter pay full rates."

The Court of Appeal had read 'or' as 'and' and in expressing his dissent Lord Halsbury said:—

"In the first place I know no authority for such a proceeding unless the context makes the necessary meaning of 'or' 'and', as in some instances it does; but I believe it is wholly unexampled so to read it when doing so will upon one construction entirely alter the meaning of the sentence, unless some other part of the same statute or the clear intention of it requires that to be done, as in the case of *Fower v. Padget*¹, where the Act of Jac 1, c. 15, made it an act of bankruptcy for a trader to leave his dwelling house to the intent or whereby his creditors might be defeated or delayed. These words if construed literally would have made every trader commit an act of bankruptcy if he casually left his dwelling house and some creditor called for payment during his absence. It may indeed be doubted whether some of the cases of turning 'or' into 'and' and vice versa have not gone to the extreme limit of interpretation, but I think none of them would cover this case."

If the word 'and' is read as 'or' in the proviso to S. 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, it would alter entirely the effect of the proviso, and there is nothing in the Act which justifies such a reading. Moreover to give the proviso, the meaning which the words used justify would not mean that the Government would be without remedy. It would still have the rights open to all persons whose proprietary rights are infringed.

In the course of his argument the learned Advocate-General quoted three decisions of this Court on questions arising under the Act. The first decision is that in *Kopaili Krishna Row Garu v. Collector of Kistna*². There a ryot had irrigated his land from two pipes instead of the one which was authorised and it was held that he was liable to a penalty under the rules. Ayling and Tyabji, JJ., regarded the additional pipe as being an unauthorised source of supply, but the judgments which they delivered do not discuss the proviso or the rules. The decision of the learned Judges does not apply to this case because here the extra water came entirely from the authorised source of supply. In *Kannappa Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India*³, a sluice was erected to allow two and half inches of water to pass through. The sluice was forced open with the result that water two feet deep passed into the distributory channel and irrigated the plaintiff's land. Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., held that this was water from a different source from, or in addition to, that which had been assigned by the Revenue authorities as the source of irrigation. We are not called upon to decide whether a sluice is a source within the meaning of the Act, because in the present case the Government has declared the source to be the Sular tank and the channel connected therewith. The third case is *Kanakamma v. Secretary of State for India*¹, which was decided by Devadoss, J., sitting alone. The case has been cited because in the course of his judgment Devadoss, J., observed:—

"In order to bring the ryotwari tenant in possession of lands classified and assessed as wet within the meaning of the section, he must do something in order to let water into his lands or must raise or attempt to raise a crop with the help of the water from a source to which he is not entitled or at a time when he is not entitled to get water from his legitimate source."

Emphasis has been laid on the words "at a time when he is not entitled to get water from his legitimate source". There is nothing in the proviso which makes the time of the taking of the water a factor. The proviso has merely regard to the source and Devadoss, J., read into the section something which was not there.

The statute being one entailing penal consequences the Court ought not to do violence to its language to bring people within it, but ought rather to take care that no one is brought within it who is not brought within it in express language. (London County Council v. Aylesbury Dairy Company.) I consider that it would be doing violence to the wording of the proviso to hold that this case falls within the exception. The plaintiff did nothing to justify the imposition of a penalty under the Act and consequently I hold that the suit was rightly instituted.

The appeal should be allowed and a decree passed in favour of the appellant with costs here and below. From the amount claimed Rs. 20-5-6 will be deducted as the appellant is admittedly liable for this by way of land revenue.

Hindu Law—Reversioner—Suit by reversioner to set aside alienation by widow—Portion of consideration found binding but alienation held void—Decree for possession on payment of binding portion of consideration—Mesne profits—Right to claim, from date of widow's death but subject to law of limitation—Interest on consideration found binding also for period for which mesne profits awarded.

Where in a suit by a reversioner to recover possession of properties belonging to the estate from an alienee from the widow on the ground that the alienation is not binding on the reversioner it is found that the alienation is supported by consideration to a certain extent and it is decreed that the reversioner is entitled to recover possession subject to payment of the binding portion with interest on the amount up to the date of the alienee's obtaining possession, the alienee must be treated as being in possession without title from the date of the widow's death and the reversioner will be entitled to mesne profits as from that date but on account of the law of limitation, the Court can award mesne profits only for three years prior to the date of the institution of the suit. The alienees in possession are, entitled to claim interest on the amount held to be binding on the estate and payable by the reversioner and are not on that account any the less liable for mesne profits, but the interest need not be allowed for the period for which mesne profits are not awarded.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry in O. S. No. 6 of 1932.

K. Kameswara Rao and D. Narasa Raju for Appellants.

B. Somayya for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Varada-
chariar, J.

Varadachariar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by a reversioner for recovery of possession of the properties of one Lakshmayya who died in January, 1889, leaving a widow Subbamma who died in February, 1926. The first defendant is the widow of Subbamma's brother. She obtained the suit properties by a conveyance from her husband, that is, Subbamma's brother, who in turn had taken possession in execution of a foreclosure decree obtained by him against his sister Subbamma in O. S. No. 51 of 1903, on the file of the District Court, Godavari. The other defendants claim under the first defendant and their case need not be separately considered. The plaintiff contended that the document Ex. V, which was sought to be enforced in O. S. No. 51 of 1903 was not binding on the reversioner, that the decree obtained in O. S. No. 51 of 1903 was likewise not binding on him and that he was accordingly entitled to possession from the date of the widow's death. Against this claim it was alleged that the widow Subbamma was obliged to incur debts from time to time for various purposes and that Ex. V was executed to secure repayment of a consolidated amount representing these debts and that the same was binding on the plaintiff as also the decree obtained in O. S. No. 51 of 1903.

chariar, .

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree in O. S. No. 51 of 1903 was not binding on the plaintiff, that out of the consideration for Ex. V only a sum of Rs. 656-5-0 was binding on the estate and that the same with interest due thereon from the date of the widow's death could be set off against the mesne profits to which the plaintiff was held entitled for three years before the date of the institution of the suit. He also held that for the period during which the first defendant's husband and the first defendant had been in possession in pursuance of the foreclosure decree, they were not entitled to interest even on the amount found to be binding on the estate. On these findings, he gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and for mesne profits subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit. Against this decree some of the contesting defendants have filed this appeal. The plaintiff has purported to file something which is described as memorandum of objection, but it is not really in the nature of a memorandum of objections. It only suggests arguments on which the decree of the lower Court can be supported even apart from the grounds taken in the lower Court's judgment. It is therefore unnecessary to deal further with the so-called memorandum of objection.

chariar, J.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has not seriously challenged the conclusion of the lower Court that the decree in O. S. No. 51 of 1903 was not binding upon the plaintiff. The lower Court's decree for possession must therefore stand. The arguments before us have been directed mainly to the question of the terms on which the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession. On behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that the decree for possession should be made conditional on payment with interest of the amounts due as per Exs. II and III, two of the earlier documents executed by the widow, in addition to a sum of Rs. 360 borrowed by the widow at the time of Ex. IV and another sum of Rs. 195-12-0 borrowed by her at the time of Ex. V. It has also been contended that the lower Court was not justified in directing the amount that might be found payable by the plaintiff to be set off against mesne profits accrued due prior to the date of the suit, because, it was maintained, in a suit of this description the plaintiff was not entitled to claim mesne profits prior to the date of suit.

[Their Lordships here discussed the evidence and held that]

Making a rough calculation of the amounts due as per Ex. XXIII with reasonable interest thereon and of some amount which must have been spent as stated in Ex. V but deducting therefrom the costs amount of Rs. 100 realised by the father, we think that the nearest approximation to a reasonable figure will be a liability for Rs. 900 on the date of Ex. V.

* * * *

On the hypothesis we have adopted above, it must also be held that on the sum of Rs. 900, the estate was liable to pay a reasonable rate of interest. Here again, the rate stipulated for in Ex. V is clearly excessive having regard to the nature of the security offered; and when it is remembered that from 1895 onwards, the father or his son has been in management or possession of Subbamma's estate, first on her behalf and later in pursuance of the foreclosure decree obtained in O. S. No. 51 of 1903, we feel no compunction in fixing the liability for interest of a moderate rate. We think it will be reasonable to calculate interest on the sum of Rs. 900 at 12 per cent. per annum.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that in 1905, Subbamma's brother took possession of the estate in pursuance of the foreclosure decree except of a portion thereof which was outstanding with the mother-in-law under Ex. E. This last item seems to have come into his possession only in 1916. We are of opinion that after 1905, there is no justification for calculating any interest as against the estate up to the date of the widow's death. The result will be that on the date of the widow's death, the reversioner would have been entitled to demand possession subject to payment of Rs. 2,200 for principal and interest calculated as above.

It remains to deal with the plaintiff's right to mesne profits. The learned counsel for the appellants contends that as the plaintiff is entitled to possession only after payment of a certain sum of money to the defendants, the plaintiff should not be allowed any mesne profits at all till such payment is made. Alternatively, they contend that in any event, the plaintiff is not entitled to mesne profits prior to the date of the institution of the suit, because an alienation by the widow being 'voidable', the plaintiff can claim to treat the defendant in possession as not being entitled to possession, only from the time that the reversioner institutes a suit or gives notice repudiating the binding character of the widow's alienation. The learned counsel for the respondent has, however, contended that in the case of a reversioner suing for possession on the ground that an alienee from the widow has not derived a title binding on the estate, the alienee must be treated as being in possession without title from the date of the widow's death and the reversioner is entitled to mesne profits as from that date, though on account of the law of limitation, the Court can award mesne profits only for three years prior to the date of the institution of the suit. Even in cases in which the reversioner is directed to pay a certain sum of money as representing the portion of the consideration found binding on the estate, it has been contended that the persons in possession are only entitled to claim interest on the amount found payable and are not on that account any the less liable for mesne profits.

In support of their first contention, the learned counsel for the appellants has relied on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Banwari Lal v. Maheshi. In support of the alternative contention that the reversioner is not in any event entitled to mesne profits prior to the date of the institution of the suit, they have relied on the decision of the Bombay High Court in *Mohanlal v. Jagjivan*¹. On behalf of the plaintiff (respondent) reliance has been placed upon *Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu*² and it has also been pointed out that the decree of the lower Court which was confirmed by the Judicial Committee in *Deputy Commissioner of Kheri representing the Court of Wards v. Khanjan Singh*³, recognised the reversioner's right to mesne profits. It seems to us that *Deputy Commissioner of Kheri representing the Court of Wards v. Khanjan Singh*³ does not give us much help; because there is no reference to this question in the judgment of the Judicial Committee and it is not possible to gather from the report whether what was set off against the sum directed to be paid by the plaintiff represented mesne profits prior to the institution of the suit. There can, however, be no doubt that, *Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu*², supports the plaintiff's contention. Mr. Somayya tried to distinguish it on the ground that in that case, the alienee claimed to be in possession not under a title derived from the limited owner (Jilab Koer) but from another lady (Etraj Koer) who it was stated was in possession adversely to the widow. We do not think the case can be distinguished on this ground. It is true the alienees did plead in the lower Court a title derived from Etraj Koer; but the sale-deed in their favour had been executed not merely by Etraj Koer, but also by Jilab Koer and the judgment of their Lordships proceeded on the footing that the defendants were alienees from a limited owner. Dealing with the claim to mesne profits, their Lordships observed at page 430 that "As the deeds of sale are not good as such, the claim for mesne profits is well founded."

In respect of the sums found payable by the plaintiff to the defendants, their Lordships held that the defendants were, on their side, entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum. In *Banwari Lal v. Mahesh*⁴, the litigation related to an alienation by a Hindu father. When it was found that the sale was not wholly for justifiable or necessary purposes, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession on payment of a certain portion of the consideration which was found binding. Dealing with that situation, their Lordships observed at as the sales were to be set aside only upon payment of certain sums:

"The defendants must be deemed to be lawfully in possession until they are set aside and are therefore not accountable for mesne profits."

At the first blush, the observations in these two cases seem not easily reconcilable and indeed in one case, a learned Judge of the Nagpur High Court thought that they were irreconcilable. (See *Maroti v. Abhiman*¹.) In this Court, a Division Bench sought to get over *Banwar Lal v. Mahesh*², but suggesting that the case had been heard ex parte. (See *Ponnuswami Pillai v. Subramania Pillai*³.) We do not think that either of these ways of distinguishing *Banwar Lal v. Mahesh*² can be regarded as satisfactory. In the course of the arguments in the present appeal, our attention has been drawn to several other decisions by way of analogy. (Cf. *Deivachilai Aiyangar v. Venkatachariar*⁴, *Mallappa v. Anant*⁵, *Subba Goundan v. Krishnamachari*⁶, *Vadivelam v. Natesam*⁷, *Bhirgu Nath Chaube v. Narsingh Tiwari*⁸, *Ramaswami Aiyar v. Venkatarama Aiyar*⁹, *Visweswara Rao v. Surya Rao*¹⁰, *Subraya Bhatta v. Sripathi Bhatta*¹¹, *Satgur Prasad v. Mahant Har Narain Das*¹² and *Nagappa Chettiar v. Brahadambal Ammani*¹³.) Some of these decisions proceed on the footing that being in the nature of damages, mesne profits may be awarded according to the justice of the case without reference to any hard and fast rule. An examination of the other cases seems to us to suggest that it may not be right to place all cases of what are described as 'voidable' alienations on one and the same footing for the purpose of determining the right of a successful plaintiff to mesne profits. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in *Satgur Prasad v. Mahant Har Narain Das*¹², a voidable transaction does not necessarily and always imply a good title until avoided. Speaking of a widow's alienation, their Lordships explained in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi the sense in which it is to be regarded as voidable. They point out that it was not absolutely void in the sense that it could not even be ratified by the reversioner; they went on to add that the reversioner might at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court and he showed his election to do the latter, by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. They emphasised a principle which they thought had been lost sight of by the High Court when applying Art. 91 of the Limitation Act to such a transaction and they stated that in such a case there was nothing for the Court either to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir. The observations in *Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu*² have to be understood in the light of these observations. Alienations by a father in a Mitakshara joint family and by the guardian of a minor might well be placed on a different footing; and it is significant in this connection to note that while Arts. 44 and 126 of the Limitation Act describe the suits there dealt with as suits to set aside an alienation, the language of Art. 141, which applies to suits by reversioners, is very different. The article merely refers to a suit for possession and does not suggest that the reversioner has got to set aside any transaction before he becomes entitled to possession. We are accordingly of opinion that there is no necessary inconsistency between *Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu*² and *Banwari Lal v. Mahesh*³ and that in the present case the rule applicable is that laid down in Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu.

In the above view, the plaintiff will be entitled to mesne profits for three years prior to the date of the institution of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has assessed these profits at Rs. 359 per annum and found that for the three years prior to suit, plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 1,077. As we are not allowing any mesne profits in plaintiff's favour for the period of two years between the widow's death and the commencement of three years prior to the date of the institution of the suit; no interest need be allowed in defendant's favour either during that period. Against the sum of Rs. 1,077 interest at 6 per cent. per annum on Rs. 2,200 will be set off and the balance deducted from the principal amount of Rs. 2,200. The balance thus ascertained will carry interest from the date of suit at 6 per cent. per annum, but as against it, the defendants will be liable for mesne profits at the rate allowed by the lower Court for future mesne profits. The right to the amount thus found payable by the plaintiff as well as the liability for the mesne profits will be worked out as between the various sets of defendants in the proportion indicated in paragraph 30 of the lower Court's judgment.

We direct the appellants to pay one half of the costs of this appeal to be divided between the contesting defendants. In the lower Court also, the plaintiff will be entitled to one half of his costs to be apportioned in the manner indicated in its decree. So far as parties who have died during the pendency of the appeal are concerned, the decree of the lower Court will stand confirmed except in cases where legal representatives have been duly brought on record.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Bellary in O. S. No. 5 of 1934.

P. V. Rajamannar for Appellant.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal by the Board of Commissioners for Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras, from the decree of the District Judge of Bellary dated 18th February, 1935, in O. S. No. 5 of 1934, a suit by the trustee of Sri Virupakshaswaraswami, etc., temples at Hampi in Hospet taluk against the Board for cancelling or modifying a certain scheme framed by the Board on the 4th August, 1933. It was alleged in the plaint that the Board had no power to frame the scheme and that in any case there was no justification for the framing of a scheme. This formed the subject-matter of the first issue in the suit. That allegation, however, was withdrawn at the trial and the Court below has found that a scheme was necessary and the need for a scheme is not now questioned before us on behalf of the respondent.

The appeal relates to two matters, namely, the appointment of additional or associate trustees provided in the scheme and the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of certain duties to him in the scheme. As regards these two matters the learned District Judge was of opinion that the provisions in the scheme relating thereto were ultra vires of the Board and accordingly directed the deletion of those parts of the scheme which related to these matters. As regards the appointment of additional or associate trustees, though under the Act as amended by Act XII of 1935 such an appointment is allowed in terms, nevertheless, before the Act was amended, that is to say, when the scheme now under discussion was framed by the Board, no such power had been expressly conferred on the Board. On the other hand, in construing cl. 2 of S. 63 of the Act of 1927, a Bench of this Court held in *Naranna Naidu v. Venkataramayya*¹, that the Board had no power to appoint additional or associate trustees. We see no reason to differ from that decision as regards the interpretation of this particular provision of the law in question as it stood before the Act was amended. The amending Act does not say that the amendment shall have retrospective effect or that the law must be deemed to have been always as laid down in the amending Act. It was perfectly open to the legislature to have declared its intention to make the new provision retrospective if it had that intention. The amending Act does not, however, disclose any such intention and we are unable to see any reason for departing from the general rule against giving retrospective effect to legislation. The learned District Judge was therefore right in coming to the conclusion that the appointment of additional or associate trustees is ultra vires of the Board. Though he does not quote the Bench decision above referred to, it is probable he had it in mind.

As regards the second point, the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of certain important duties to him under the scheme, the provisions in the scheme are such that, if they are allowed to remain, the powers of the hereditary trustee could be practically set at naught and what could not be done directly would be allowed to be done indirectly by the appointment of a manager by the Board and entrusting all the most important duties of management to him under the scheme itself, he being removable only by the Board. These provisions would reduce the powers of the trustee to a cipher, or at least the provisions may be so worked as to produce this result; and we are of opinion that in this view the provisions in the scheme relating to the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of important duties of management to him must also be deemed to be ultra vires because they have the effect of placing the management of the institution in the hands of some one not appointed by the trustee and not responsible to him, and would thus in fact displace the trustee from the management of the affairs of the temple. Nevertheless it is but right that we should express our view that the trustee would do well to see that an efficient man is appointed as local manager to look after the actual management of the affairs of the temple as it would appear that the trustee himself is not in a position to look after the management personally throughout, and we wish to make it clear that if there is any mismanagement of the affairs of the institution in future the powers of the Board to rectify such mismanagement will remain unaffected by the result of this appeal.

It follows from what we have said that the appeal must fail as both the points raised have to be decided against the appellant. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

No appeal lies from an order under S. 23 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938). And the question decided by such an application not being one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, is inapplicable.

JUDGMENT.—We uphold the preliminary objection that no appeal lies from the order under S. 23 of the Madras Act IV of 1938. This is not a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Moreover, on the merits, the appellants have no case. They had no interest in the 8th item of property sold, either at the time of the sale or even at the time the suit was filed. They had parted with all their interest in the 8th item in 1931, at least five years before the suit was filed.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870 as amended in Madras), S. 7 (iv-A) and Sch. II, Art. 17-A—Applicability—Suit by creditor under S. 53, Transfer of Property Act, 1882—Prayer for declaration—Court-fee payable—Distinction between suits by parties to deed or decree and by third parties.

A suit by a creditor under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act for a declaration that an alienation by the debtor is void against the creditors is not a suit for cancellation of a document securing money or property falling under S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act as amended in Madras, but is one to obtain a declaration that so far as plaintiff is concerned the transfer is not binding, and it is leviable to court-fee under Art. 17-A of Sch. II of the said Act.

When the plaintiff seeks to establish a title in himself and cannot establish that title without removing an insuperable obstruction such as a decree to which he has been a party or a deed to which he has been a party, then he must get that decree or deed cancelled or declared void in toto, and his suit is in substance a suit for the cancellation of the decree or deed, even though it be framed as a suit for a declaration. But when he is seeking to establish a title and finds himself threatened by a decree or a transaction between third parties, he is not in a position to get that decree or that deed cancelled in toto. That is a thing which can only be done by parties to the decree or deed, or their representatives. His proper remedy in order to clear the way with a view to establish his title is to get a declaration that the decree or deed is invalid so far as he himself is concerned and he must in that case sue for a declaration and not for the cancellation of the decree or deed.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this appeal is whether a suit brought by a creditor under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act for a declaration that an alienation by the debtor is void against the creditors is a suit for cancellation of a document securing money or property falling under S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act as amended in Madras, or whether it is a suit to obtain a declaration where no consequential relief is prayed, falling under Art. 17-A of Sch. II of the same Act. Both the Courts below have found that the suit falls under S. 7 (iv-A). The plaint recites that the properties in suit are in the possession and enjoyment of the second defendant against whom the plaintiff got a decree on a promissory note, the suit being filed on 2nd August, 1924 and decreed on 12th November, 1924. It is alleged that on 19th June, 1924, the second defendant, collusively and with a view to cheat the plaintiff's claim, executed a sale deed in favour of his brother-in-law, the first defendant, conveying all his properties benami and for no valid consideration, there being no intention that the sale deed should be given effect to. The plaintiff therefore prays for a declaration that the properties conveyed to the first defendant are liable to be attached in realisation of the decree debt obtained by the plaintiff against the second defendant and the plaint recites that the plaintiff sues for himself and as representing the other creditors of the second defendant. The judgments of both the Courts below seems to me to have proceeded on a misunderstanding of the cases quoted, one case in particular being quoted under one reference as supporting the plaintiff and the same case under another reference as supporting the contesting defendants and both the learned Judges seem not to have grasped the difference between a suit for the cancellation of an instrument and a suit for a declaration that the instrument is not binding upon the plaintiff. Leaving aside for the moment the complication due to the fact that the plaintiff in this suit sues in a representative capacity, the distinction between the two classes of suits seems to me to be well established by the decisions. When the plaintiff seeks to establish a title in himself and cannot establish that title without removing an insuperable obstruction such as a decree to which he has been a party or a deed to which he has been a party, then quite clearly he must get that decree or deed cancelled or declared void in toto and his suit is in substance a suit for the cancellation of the decree or deed even though it be framed as a suit for a declaration. But when he is seeking to establish a title and finds himself threatened by a decree or a transaction between third parties, he is not in a position to get that decree or that deed cancelled in toto. That is a thing which can only be done by parties to the decree or deed or their representatives. His proper remedy therefore, in order to clear the way with a view to establish his title is to get a declaration that the decree or deed is invalid so far as he himself is concerned and he must therefore sue for such a declaration and not for the cancellation of the decree or deed. This distinction was made clear in Unni v. Kunchi Ammai, which is followed in *Chathu Kutty Nair v. Chathu Kutty Nair*², and the distinction is clearly observed in the cases quoted by the Court below, except that there is some obscurity arising from a decision of Ramesam, J., in *Balakrishna Nair v. Vishnu Nambudiri*³, where though the learned Judge quite clearly has this distinction in mind, he frames his formula in rather more general terms than were perhaps desirable and on those grounds has been criticised by the Bench which decided the case of *Venkatasiva Rao v. Satyanarayanamurthi*⁴. My attention has not been drawn to any decision which throws any real doubt on the general proposition that when a person seeks to establish title which cannot be established without removing a decree or an instrument to which he is himself a party, then whatever be the garb in which he dresses his suit, its substantial character must be a suit for the cancellation of the decree or instrument; but if the establishment of his title is being impeded by the effect of a transaction between other parties, he cannot legitimately ask for the cancellation of that transaction but can only ask for a declaration that so far as he is concerned, it is not binding.

Vellayya
v.

2. (1923) 19 L.W. 249.

3. (1930) M.W.N. 509.

4. (1932) 63 M.L.J. 764; I.L.R. 56 Mad. 212.

The respondent has quoted a decision of mine reported in *Venkatakrishniah v. Alli Sahib*¹, which on the facts falls clearly within the rule laid down in the decisions which I have quoted. It was a case of a minor whose lawful guardian on his behalf made an alienation, which the minor on attaining majority wished to get rid of as a preliminary to recovering possession of the properties alienated. He was through his guardian a party to the alienation and necessarily had to get the conveyance cancelled before he could get possession of the properties. The document of alienation, as I then stated, was an insuperable obstacle to the prayer for possession and it had to be declared void or cancelled. Therefore, the relief came under S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act. Now on the basis of my observations in that case, it is contended that here the alienation from the second defendant to the first defendant is an insuperable obstacle to the attachment of the property as the properties of the second defendant in execution of a decree against the second defendant and that, therefore the relief which the plaintiff prays for is in effect the relief of cancellation; more especially as the suit is filed not only in the interests of the plaintiff himself but also of the other creditors, namely, of the second defendant. It seems to me however that the same rule must be applied to suits under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The matter is made clear by taking an extreme case. Suppose that the creditors together have debts amounting to Rs. 10,000 and that in fraud of the creditors the debtor alienates properties worth Rs. 50,000, are we to take it that the creditors by their suit under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act are entitled or required to pray for the cancellation of this alienation in toto? I do not think that they are. The form of the prayer would be for a declaration that the alienation is not binding or is void so far as the creditors are concerned. Except in so far as the creditors are concerned the alienation will stand and the creditors have no power to ask for its complete cancellation. The only circumstances in which a suit under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act would in effect bring about the complete avoidance of the transfer would be in the case when the value of the properties alienated is less than the amount of debts. But as between the alienor and the alienee, the transfer stands, subject only to the right of the creditors, established by the decree, to enforce their debts by the sale of the property just as if the transfer had not been made. What the creditors therefore seek is not the cancellation of the sale, but a declaration that it is not valid so far as their claims are concerned. In other respects, it may be perfectly good; that is a matter which does not concern the creditors; and the fact that they are creditors and that this transaction was entered into with the motive of defrauding them would not give them the right to have the sale cancelled except to the extent to which they have been defrauded. From this reasoning it seems to me to follow that the proper prayer in such a suit as that now filed is a prayer for a declaration that the sale is not binding upon the creditors to the extent of their debts and not a prayer for the cancellation of the sale-deed.

In this view, I hold that the suit falls in substance under Art. 17-A (1) of the Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act and that the plaint has been wrongfully rejected by the Courts below. The appeal is therefore allowed and the suit remanded to the trial Court. Costs throughout will abide by the result of the suit. Court-fee paid here and in the lower appellate Court to be refunded.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The complainant in the case is the petitioner before me. He is a process-server and the case for the prosecution was that he and another person, namely, P. W. 2 in the case, were beaten and that they received injuries when the complainant was about to effect the arrest of the first accused in pursuance of a warrant. There appear to have been two complaints, one by the process-server and another by P. W. 2 and they were both inquired into at the same time by the Taluq Magistrate of Sivaganga who convicted the three accused under Ss. 225, 323, Indian Penal Code, two of the three accused being also convicted under S. 353, Indian Penal Code.

On appeal by the accused the Joint Magistrate of Ramnad without going into the merits of the case ordered a retrial, presumably after reversing the convictions and sentences on the ground that the offence disclosed against accused 2 and 3 was not merely an offence under S. 353, Indian Penal Code, which was within the cognisance of the Taluq Magistrate but an offence under S. 352 which is not within his cognisance. I am unable to say after going through the evidence that the view of the Joint Magistrate is wrong though it must not be understood that I concur in his opinion that the Taluq Magistrate acted without jurisdiction. I concur in his view that the facts disclose the voluntary causing of hurt to P. W. 1, a process-server while he was discharging his duty as a public servant. The Medical certificate obtained by the process-server shows that he had five abrasions and one contusion on the back. There are sufficient prima facie evidence of the causing of hurt and the circumstances do not suggest that the hurt was caused otherwise than volun-

Warrants (reciting that the accused stood charged with offences punishable under sections of the Travancore Penal Code corresponding to Ss. 409, 418, 420, 477-A, 109 and 114 of the Indian Penal Code) were issued by the Resident for the Madras States under S. 7 of the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903) to the Presidency Magistrate, Madras (the second respondent) directing him to apprehend and surrender the appellants to the Frontier police station of the Travancore State for production before the District Magistrate, Trivandrum (the first respondent). The warrants were not dated.

A petition under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for a writ of habeas corpus and, another petition asking for stay of execution of the warrant were presented by the sons of the first and second appellants to a Judge of the High Court, Madras, at his residence. Interim stay was ordered and the appellants were remanded to custody pending further orders. On the same day the Crown Prosecutor presented a petition praying that the stay order should be vacated on the ground mainly that jurisdiction under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code could not be exercised by a single Judge according to r. 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court. The Judge (Pandrang Row, J.) following In re Govindan Nair, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 396; I.L.R. 45 Mad. 922 (F.B.), held that jurisdiction to issue the common law writ existed and vested in each of the Judges of the High Court and refused to vacate the order. The Bench (Burn and Stodart, JJ.) before whom the petition under S. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code came up refused to proceed with it as Pandrang Row, J., was seized of it. Then Pandrang Row, J., heard the petition and issued a writ nisi to the second respondent on 26th October, 1938, returnable on 28th October, 1938, before himself. The first respondent presented a petition on the 26th October, 1938, under S. 561 (A) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and S. 223 of the Government of India Act praying that the orders of Pandrang Row, J., should be quashed as having been made without jurisdiction. On this petition the Bench (Burn and Stodart, JJ.) stayed further proceedings in the petition for issue of a writ of habeas corpus and referred the questions of law to a Full Bench, which held that in re Govindan Nair, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 396: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 922 (F.B.), must be overruled and "(i) the common law writ of habeas corpus does not run in British India in a case like this. Assuming that the Court formerly had the power to issue such a writ in a case like this that power has been taken away and powers conferred by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure substituted. (ii) Rr. 2 and 2-A of the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court are intra vires the Court's powers. (iii) Pandrang Row J.'s order issuing a rule nisi was passed without jurisdiction and consequently null and void. (iv) The petition under S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code, must be dealt with by the Criminal Bench. The Criminal Bench then heard and dismissed the petition under S. 491, Criminal Procedure Code.

On appeal against those judgments,

Held, (i) the first respondent being entitled to vindicate his right to obtain the custody of the appellants has a locus standi to intervene in the petition for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus and his petition to have the order nisi quashed was competently presented by him.

(ii) The High Courts Act, 1861, authorised the Legislature to take away and the Acts of the Legislature passed in 1875 and subsequent years have taken away the power to issue the prerogative writ of habeas corpus in matters contemplated by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 [Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal, (1927) I.L.R. 54 Cal. 727, approved] and the petition must be treated as an application under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(iii) "All applications for writ of habeas corpus" in r. 2-A of the Madras High Court Appellate Side Rules covers applications for directions under S. 491 of the Code and a single judge has no jurisdiction to deal with such applications.

(iv) Where the persons, against whom warrants under the Indian Extradition Act have been issued by the Agent of the Government of India suggest that the Resident did not satisfy himself by preliminary inquiry or otherwise that there is prima facie a case against the accused, it would not properly be the subject of inquiry by the Court, but should be stated to the Magistrate on an application to him to report to the Local Government under S. 8 (A) of the Extradition Act.

(v) No form of warrant is prescribed in the Act or the rules and where the warrant clearly describes the offences charged with it is sufficient. A "Police Station" is a perfectly lucid description of the authority to whom the surrender is to be made and while it will be the usual and better practices to date the warrants no provision in the Act or the rules appears to require that the warrants must be dated.

The facts appear fully from the reports of the High Court judgments 1 and 2.

6th June, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment giving their reasons for dismissing the appeal on 3rd April, 1939, was delivered by

Lord
Thankerton.

LORD THANKERTON. This is an appeal from (1) a judgment of the Full Bench of the High Court of Madras, dated the 4th November, 1938, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 1003 of 1938, which, on a reference by a Division Bench of the same Court, held that the orders of Pandrang Row, J., a single Judge of the Court, on an application for writ of habeas corpus and relative applications, and dated the 21st, 24th and 26th October, 1938, made in Criminal Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 986, 990 and 985 of 1938 respectively, were null and void; (2) a judgment and order of the said Division Bench, dated the 7th November, 1938, made in petition No. 1003 in implement of the above judgment; and (3) a judgment and order of the said Division Bench, dated the 7th November, 1938, made in petition No. 985, dismissing the application for a writ of habeas corpus.

The appellants challenge the validity of certain warrants issued by the Resident for the Madras States under S. 7 of the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903) to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras, under which they were arrested, and they ask to be discharged. The course of procedure which has been followed has raised important questions as to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras to issue a writ of habeas corpus in the present case, and as to the competency of a single Judge of the High Court to issue such a writ or the analogous writ under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (V of 1898).

This appeal is taken against (1) the judgment of the Full Bench, dated the 4th November, 1938, on the questions referred to them in petition No. 1003, (2) the judgment of the Division Bench, dated the 7th November, 1938, in petition No. 1003, and (3) the judgment of the Division Bench, dated the 7th November, 1938, dismissing petition No. 985.

Counsel for the appellants submitted four contentions, namely:—

1. That the first respondent had no locus standi in the matter raised in the appellants' petition No. 985, and that, for the same reason, his petition No. 1003 was incompetent and should not have been entertained.

2. That rr. 2 and 2 (a) of the Appellate Side Rules were ultra vires, or, in any event, were not applicable to the present case.

3. That the warrants were illegal and invalid for the following reasons, (a) that there is definite jurisdiction in the High Court to examine, on evidence, whether the conditions laid down by the Extradition Act and the rules made thereunder for issue of the warrants have been complied with, (b) that, when thus examined, it would be found that such conditions had not been complied with, (c) that, in any event, the warrants were ex facie invalid, in respect that—

(i) they did not show that the conditions had been complied with,

(ii) that they did not show sufficiently with what offences the appellants were charged, or when they were committed,

(iii) that they did not sufficiently show where and to whom the appellants were to be delivered up, and

(iv) that they were undated.

4. That jurisdiction to issue the common law writ of habeas corpus in a case such as the present still subsisted, and that Pandrang Row, J., had jurisdiction to order the issue of the writ nisi.

On the first contention, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the first respondent was entitled to intervene in the appellants' petition No. 985, and that the petition No. 1003 was competently presented by him. Counsel for the appellants referred to the rules made by the Governor-General in Council, under S. 22 of the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, as to the Procedure of Political Agents for Surrender of Accused Persons to Native States (No. 1862 I. A., dated the 13th May, 1904), and in particular r. 2, which provides as follows:—

"2. The Political Agent shall not issue a warrant under S. 7 of the said Act except on a request preferred to him in writing either by or by the authority of the person for the time being administering the Executive Government of the State for which he is a Political Agent, or by any Court within such State which has been specified in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council, or by the Governor of Madras or Bombay in Council, as the case may be, by notification in the official Gazette".

He maintained that the only parties who were entitled to take part in the proceedings relative to the warrants in the present case were (a) the appellants, (b) the second respondent, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, (c) the British Resident for the Madras States, and (d) the Government of Travancore. But their Lordships are of opinion that the terms of the warrants show that the authority to whom, in terms of S. 7 of the Act, the appellants are to be delivered, is truly the first respondent, who will control their custody, though the police of Travancore at the frontier station will receive the delivery on his behalf. R. 7 of the rules above referred to makes this sufficiently clear; it provides as follows:—

"7. In the case of an accused person made over for trial to the Court of the State, the Political Agent shall satisfy himself that the accused receives a fair trial, and that the punishment inflicted on conviction is not excessive or barbarous; and if he is not so satisfied he shall demand the restoration of the prisoner to his custody, pending the orders of the Governor-General in Council."

It is clear that, if occasion arose for such an application in the present case, it would fall to be made to the Court of the first respondent. Their Lordships are of opinion that the first respondent is entitled to vindicate his right to obtain the custody of the appellants, and that this contention of the appellants fails.

It will be convenient to dispose next of the fourth contention of the appellants. On this point their Lordships agree with the conclusions of the Full Bench in the present case which are stated in the judgment delivered by the learned Chief Justice as follows:—

"The High Courts Act of 1861 authorised the Legislature if it thought fit to take away the powers which this Court obtained as the successor of the Supreme Court, and Acts of the Legislature lawfully passed in 1875 and subsequent years leave no doubt in my mind that the Legislature has taken away the power to issue the prerogative writ of habeas corpus in matters contemplated by S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898."

Indeed counsel for the appellants stated that he found difficulty in pressing this contention, and the reasoning of the learned Chief Justice, on which he based the above conclusion, is so clear and convincing, including his narration of the legislative Acts referred to in his conclusion, that their Lordships are content to adopt it, as also to state that, like the learned Chief Justice, they are in entire agreement with the judgment of Rankin, C.J., in Girindra Nath Banerjee v. Birendra Nath Pal. Accordingly the appellants' fourth contention also fails. It follows that the appellants' petition No. 985 must be treated as an application under S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The second contention of the appellants related to the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court. S. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so far as material, provides:—

"491.—(1) Any High Court may, whenever it thinks fit, direct—

(b) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits" (i.e., the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction) "be set at liberty;

(2) The High Court may, from time to time, frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section."

The material rules of the Appellate Side Rules are as follows:—

"2. The following matters may be heard and determined by a Bench of two Judges provided that if both Judges agree that the determination involves a question of law they may order that the matter, or question of law, be referred to a Full Bench:—

(4) (c) for issue of a writ of habeas corpus.

2-A. All applications for writ of habeas corpus shall go before a Bench of Judges dealing with criminal work."

In view of their Lordships' opinion, already expressed, as to the incompetence of the issue of a common law writ in the present case, the appellants' contention, that these rules are ultra vires so far as they affect the issue of such a writ, does not arise, but the appellants maintain that, on proper construction, these rules do not apply to an application for directions under S. 491, which they maintain is not covered by the words "all applications for writ of habeas corpus." Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention, and their view is confirmed by the terms of the statutory notifications in the Fort St. George Gazette as to r. 2-A, which first appeared in a somewhat different form in the Gazette, 1925, Part II, p. 307, under date the 3rd January, 1925, in which it is expressly described as an amendment to the rules regulating proceedings under S. 491 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it was as follows, "All applications for writ of habeas corpus shall go before a Bench of three Judges, of which the Chief Justice, unless otherwise ordered, shall be one". The alteration of the rule to its present form appeared in the Gazette, 1929, Part II, p. 1309, under date the 17th August, 1929, and the description of the amendment is identical with that in the earlier notification. Accordingly, Pandrang Row, J., as a single Judge, had no jurisdiction to deal with petition No. 985.

It only remains to deal with the appellants' contentions as to the warrants:—In the first place, they maintained that the Court is entitled to examine, on evidence, whether the conditions laid down by the Extradition Act and the rules made under S. 22 of the Act have been complied with, and that the appellants were entitled to an opportunity to satisfy the Court (a) that the offences must have been committed in Madras, and (b) that, in reality, the Travancore authorities desired to get the appellants into their jurisdiction in order to charge them with political offences, which would not be extraditable offences. It must be remembered that the warrants are issued by the agent of the Government of India, and not by an agent of the Travancore State, and this executive act is safeguarded in various ways by the Act and by the rules. For instance, r. 4 provides that the Political Agent shall, in all cases before issuing a warrant under S. 7 of the Act, satisfy himself, by preliminary inquiry or otherwise, that there is, prima facie, a case against the accused person. The appellants do not suggest that the Resident did not so satisfy himself in the present case. But, if such a suggestion were to be made, their Lordships are of opinion that it would not be properly the subject of inquiry by the Court, but should be stated to the Magistrate on an application to him to report to the Local Government under S. 8-A of the Extradition Act. Their Lordships see no reason why the offences charged cannot have been committed in Travancore, and what they have stated above directly applies to the suggestion that the true object of the extradition is to enable the appellants to be charged with political offences. It may be added that a bogus trial of the offences, in respect of which the extradition is made, would appear to fall within r. 7, and to make it the duty of the Political Agent, in such an event, to demand the restoration of the prisoners to his custody.

Lastly, the appellants contend that the warrants are illegal ex facie in respect (a) that they do not sufficiently show with what offences the appellants were charged or when they were committed, (b) that they do not sufficiently identify the place where, and the person to whom, the appellants were to be delivered up, and (c) that they are undated.

As regards (a), no form of warrant is prescribed by the Extradition Act or the rules, and the warrants clearly describe the offences with which the appellants are charged, which is all that is required by the ordinary form of warrant of arrest prescribed by S. 75 and form II of schedule V of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Their Lordships may also refer to the explanation to S. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code. This objection fails. As regards (b), S. 7 (1) of the Extradition Act uses the words, "for his arrest and delivery at a place and to a person or authority indicated in the warrant", and their Lordships are of opinion that all that is required is that the place and person shall be sufficiently indicated to enable the Chief Presidency Magistrate, to whom the warrants are addressed, to act in pursuance of such warrants and to give directions accordingly. It is clear that the second respondent has no difficulty in this regard, and, if there were any doubt on the warrants taken by themselves, which their Lordships are not prepared to assume, the matter is placed beyond doubt by the Government of Madras (Home Department) Order No. 1293, 10th March, 1938, under which the Government direct that in future all persons extradited should be handed over at "the nearest frontier police station in the Travancore State". That order was addressed, among others, to the second respondent. There can be no difficulty in identifying the nearest frontier police station of the Travancore State for production before the District Magistrate, Trivandrum, and, in their Lordships' opinion, a police station is a perfectly lucid description of the authority to whom the surrender is to be made. Contention (c) as to the absence of date also fails, in their Lordships' opinion. While it undoubtedly would be the usual and better practice to date the warrants, no provision in the Act or the rules appears to require directly or implicitly that the warrants must be dated; no period is expressed as running from the date of the warrants. This disposes of all the appellants' objections to the validity of the warrants.

Their Lordships have now stated the reasons which led them on the 3rd April, 1939, humbly to advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal—Order of single Judge under S. 75 (3), Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920—Refusal to grant leave to appeal—Appealability.

There is no right of appeal from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to grant leave to appeal from an order falling within S. 75 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The Order of the Court was made by

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal against an order of King, J., refusing to grant leave to appeal from an order which admittedly falls within S. 75 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies and it is abundantly clear that this objection is well founded. There are two Bench decisions of this Court which are in point—*Madhava Aiyar v. Muthia Chettiar*¹ and *Ramanayya v. Kotayya*². The first case related to an order which fell within S. 46 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, which corresponds to S. 75 (3) of the present Act, and in the second case the Court held that there was no appeal from an order refusing to give leave to appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. There is no difference in principle, here. The law does not recognise a right of appeal from a refusal to grant leave where leave is necessary and therefore this appeal does not lie. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Arumugha Mudaliar .. Respondent (Plaintiff).

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 47, sub-S. (1)—Transferee from purchaser—Later suit—Defendants in the suit purchasing properties subject to mortgage proceedings—Application of S. 47—Suit forbidden.

In a mortgage suit against a father and two minor sons a decree was passed in favour of the mortgagee on 23rd January, 1928. On 1st May, 1931, in execution, properties were put up for sale and purchased by the second plaintiff and the sale certificate granted to him. Delivery of the properties was obtained except one item and because of obstruction from the defendant the purchaser filed an application to remove the obstruction. Subsequently the second plaintiff sold and transferred his rights in the properties to the first plaintiff and the transferee filed an application to remove the resistance of the defendant pertaining to the particular item in his possession. In the meantime another creditor of the mortgagor family obtained a decree in a later Small Cause suit and sold the properties to the defendants who were the same as defendants in the mortgage suit. On the question whether S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, would apply to the proceedings mentioned above, Held, that defendants in the Small Cause suit would have leave to treat the proceedings in the suit as an application made under O. 21, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code, and if any court-fee was necessary by reason of the direction it should be paid within the time fixed.

Parmeshari Din v. Ram Charan, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 359 (P.C.), followed.

Defendants purchased in the Court auction in the execution of Small Cause suit properties subject to the mortgage of the previous suit and which belonged to the mortgagors (defendants) and thereby became the representatives of those parties to the suit. The defendants had become within the contemplation of sub-S (1) of S. 47 the representative of a party to the suit. Therefore the present suit is forbidden by that section.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely in A. S. No. 79 of 1934 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ambasamudram in O. S. No. 99 of 1933.

B. Pocker and T. R. Abdul Ghani for Appellant.

N. Panchanatha Aiyar and R. Krishnaswami Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In the suit the claims made by the plaintiff were for a declaration that certain plots of land set out in Ex. H belonged to the plaintiff for recovery of possession of two plots 1-B and 1-D from the defendant and an injunction restraining him from interfering with the plaintiffs' possession of other plots. The first Court decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff and the appeal to the lower appellate Court was dismissed. The defendant presents this second appeal and contends (1) that a suit does not lie by reason of the provisions of S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and (2) that on account of the dismissal of an execution application filed by the first plaintiff against the defendant all remedies in the suit are barred.

The facts shortly are as follows:—An adult and two minor members of a Mudaliar family owned certain properties which they mortgaged to the second plaintiff on 26th January, 1923. The mortgagee filed a suit and a decree was passed in O. S. No. 302 of 1927 on 23rd January, 1928. On 1st May, 1931, in execution of the decree the properties were put up for sale and were purchased by the second plaintiff, the sale certificate Ex. C being granted on 26th June, 1931. Delivery of the properties was obtained except one plot 1-B. The defendant obstructed and resisted possession and in consequence the second plaintiff filed a petition to remove the resistance, which was dismissed. On 6th September, 1931, by Ex. A the second plaintiff sold all his rights in and his claim to the properties so purchased to the first plaintiff. This plaintiff filed an execution application on 17th October, 1931, to remove the resistance of the defendant in regard to plot 1-B which application was dismissed on 6th January, 1932. It is now necessary to refer to another suit S. C. S. No. 297 of 1928 filed by a stranger against the adult member only of the joint family who was one of the mortgagors in the earlier mentioned mortgage and a decree was obtained. This decree was passed on 3rd May, 1928, a date subsequent to the decree in the earlier mortgage suit. In execution of that decree, the properties belonging to the Mudaliar family were put up for sale and were purchased by the defendant on 20th January, 1930, on which date the sale certificate was granted. The proceedings in respect of the Small Cause suit and the execution for sale of the properties thereunder were subsequent to the decree in the mortgage suit and during the proceedings arising thereout.

Padalinga
v.
Arumugha
Mudaliar.

The plaintiff not having obtained possession of plots 1-B and 1-D filed the present suit on 19th February, 1932. I propose now to deal with the points of objection made under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, the relevant provisions of which are as follows:—

(1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. (2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fees.

When the suit and the appeal from the Court of first instance were before the lower appellate Court, this point having been raised, a decision was given in favour of the present respondents, namely, the plaintiffs, following the decisions, Meyyappa Chetti v. Meyyappan Servai and Basappa Budappa Halavalad v. Bhimangowda Shiddangowda Patil. Since the disposal of this matter by the lower appellate Court, the point has come before their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Parmeshari Din v. Ram Charan*¹ in which it was held that where a person obtains property by a transfer from the defendant pendente lite, he should be treated as a representative in interest of the transferor-defendant and he is bound by the result of the decree. And the mere circumstance that he got possession from the defendant in pursuance of a transfer which was invalid as against the plaintiff cannot detract from their rights under the decree. Defendant purchased in the Court auction in execution of the Small Cause decree, the property subject to the mortgage and which belonged to the defendants in the mortgage suit, namely, the members of the Mudaliar family and thereby became the representatives of those parties to the suit. In my view therefore the defendant has become, within the contemplation of sub-S. (1) of S. 47, the representative of a party to the suit. The first plaintiff has purchased from the second plaintiff that person's interest and he has therefore become his representative. The effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Parmeshari Din v. Ram Charan*¹ is dealt with in *Gopal Sattu Tippe v. Dnyanu Maruthi Khade*² in the observations of Sir Charles Beaumont, the Chief Justice, in the course of his judgment with which I may say with respect I entirely agree. There can be no doubt as to the representative character of the parties in the present suit. Their position is covered, in my opinion, by S. 47, sub-S. (1). The result must be that the present suit is forbidden by that section. The earlier application E. A. No. 715 of 1931 was made under the provisions of O. 21, r. 97 which provides the procedure when obstruction is made to a person who attempts to obtain possession of property. It was dismissed on 6th January, 1932, not on the merits but upon the grounds that the obstruction took place on 2nd August, 1931 and the previous application by the first plaintiff's predecessor-in-title had not been made within 30 days of the obstruction under the provisions of Art. 167 of the Limitation Act. Argument at some length has been addressed by learned counsel on behalf of the respondents regarding the effect of rr. 97, 98, 101 and 103 of O. 21 with which I do not consider it necessary to deal.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the respondents applies to me that in the event of my coming to the conclusion that the present suit was prohibited by the provisions of S. 47, that it should be treated as an application under O. 21, r. 95, Civil

Procedure Code by reason of the provisions of sub-S. (2) of S. 47. Learned counsel on behalf of the appellant has conceded that on 19th February, 1932, the date when this suit was filed, the plaintiffs were then entitled to have is sued an application under O. 21, r. 95 of the Civil Procedure Code. I can see no objection to such an application being filed or that there was any further obstacle by way of limitation or otherwise which would have prevented it. The objection which has been taken is one of no merits as the first plaintiff acquired from the second plaintiff properties which were sold under the mortgage decree, the defendant's claim being under a sale in execution of a decree passed against the mortgagor of the mortgage whose properties must have been subject to the charges under that mortgage. The objection relating to the procedure which is made is one of mere technicality and not on the merits. In the first instance therefore I hold that the respondents will have leave to treat the proceedings in the suit as an application made under O. 21, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code. If any additional court-fee is payable by reason of the direction that I have just given, I direct that it should be paid within 28 days from to-day.

I now come to the second point, namely, that the execution application 715 of 1931 prevents relief being granted. In my view it does not. The dismissal was one not upon the merits, the application was to prevent resistance by the obstructor and to attempt to gain possession. If the plaintiffs are entitled to possession, the continuance by the defendant in occupation of the premises is therefore a wrong of which the plaintiffs complain de die in diem. Since it is conceded that on the date when the plaintiff filed the suit, the plaintiffs were entitled then to have taken proceedings under r. 95, it must follow that the objection raised regarding the dismissal of the execution application 715 of 1931 fails.

Objection was made that on the merits and the facts, the learned Subordinate Judge had committed errors in the decision at which he had arrived. The properties, the subject of the suit are set out in the plan Exhibit H, which was filed with the plaint. The first plaintiff as plaintiff's first witness in the witness-box identified the plan as that which was filed in the suit. The plaint sets out the claims regarding the properties mentioned therein and delineated in the plan. When formally identifying the plan, that witness was also testifying that the plan was accurate. No cross-examination was directed by the defendants' learned counsel, in the Court of first instance, suggesting that the plan was inaccurate and contained omissions or additions and did not correctly set out the actual position of the properties. Learned counsel to-day before me wishes to suggest that the plan is inaccurate. In the absence of any attack being made upon it in the trial Court I cannot listen to any argument in that respect to-day. The learned District Munsiff and the learned Subordinate Judge who have examined all the documents and all the evidence have both come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he sought in the suit. It is unnecessary for me to repeat all those matters. In my view they have both come to the correct conclusion.

It was argued that so far as plot 1-D is concerned that particular matter was entirely ignored and not dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge. His judgment is quite clear that he did fully consider the matter and decided against the contentions of the defendants.

A claim was also made to an easement in regard to plot 1-C. That claim was rejected and rejected on the facts which sitting here I do not propose to question or interfere with.

The result of the above is that the appeal is dismissed, but the papers will be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that the proceedings may be regularised in accordance with the view I have expressed. The respondents are entitled to their costs in this appeal. Leave to appeal is refused.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 9—Right to lead horse during festival in temple—No corresponding obligations laid—Suit to enforce right—Whether maintainable in Civil Court.

Where a person claimed the right to lead a horse on a particular festival day in a temple whenever that festival was performed, but it appeared that the festival was performed not every year or at stated intervals but only whenever funds permitted, and it was further found that the plaintiff could not be compelled to bring the horse or to lead it if he chose not to do either,

Held, that what was claimed was not an office but merely an honour inasmuch as there was no corresponding obligation to perform the duties of the office, and that it could not be made the subject-matter of a suit in a Civil Court under S. 9, Civil Procedure Code.

Srinivasa Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (1899) 9 M.L.J. 355, referred to.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice King in S. A. No. 50 of 1933 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Salem in A. S. No. 41 of 1930 (O.S. No. 759 of 1927, District Munsif's Court, Salem).

K. S. Desikan for Respondents.

Somayya, J.—There is a Mari Amman temple in a village called Thammampatti and a Selli Amman temple in Koneripatti, a hamlet of the above village. The two plaintiffs claimed two different rights but we are concerned in this appeal only with the right claimed by the first plaintiff. The right claimed by him is the right to lead the horse on a particular festival day whenever that festival is performed. It is said that this festival is not performed every year or at stated intervals but it is performed whenever funds permit. The right that is claimed is not a right to worship but a right to an office. It is claimed that leading the horse is an office, that the plaintiff and his predecessors have been performing this office from generation to generation and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled to be protected against disturbance from the defendants. The District Munsif of Salem decreed the suit holding that the plaintiff had established his right. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Salem upheld the contention but he made a very important addition to the decree of the trial Court. He held in effect that the first plaintiff could not be compelled to perform this act of leading the horse and that if he did not bring a horse at the time of the festival and was not willing to lead it, the defendants would be entitled to make other arrangements for the conduct of the festival. The decree of the Subordinate Judge accordingly directs that in the event of the first plaintiff's failure or refusal to lead the horse, the Perithanakars and Kariakars are entitled to make other necessary arrangements for the conduct of the festival. With this modification the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decree granted by the trial Court. There was a second appeal filed in this Court and the appeal was disposed of by King, J. He confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge but granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

We are concerned in this appeal with the question whether the right that is claimed by the first plaintiff is to an office which can be made the subject-matter of a suit in a Civil Court under S. 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section says that,

"The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature except suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred."

An explanation is added that a suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies. The point that we have got to decide is whether the suit in this case is of a civil nature and whether it is for a right to an office. There are admittedly no emoluments attached to the office. As was held by this Court in *Srinivasa Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Aiyangar*¹, the conception of an office involves a corresponding obligation to perform the duties of the office. It was pointed out by the learned Officiating Chief Justice at page 358 that,

"The term, office, in the sense with which we are concerned, implies, of course, a duty in the office-holder to be discharged by him as such—see if authority were necessary, Kent's Commentaries where it is pointed out, 'offices consist in a right, and correspondent duty, to execute a public or private trust and to take the emoluments belonging to it'."

In this case on the findings of the Subordinate Judge which were accepted by King, J., there is no compellable duty on the part of the first plaintiff. He cannot be compelled to bring a horse or to lead it if he chooses not to do either. Provision is accordingly made that if he did not bring a horse or if he refused to lead it the temple authorities might make other arrangements to bring a horse or to have it led. Mr. Desikan the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondents argues that this provision is only meant as a rule of suspension in case the office-holder does not do the duty properly, but how it strikes us is that this provision has an important bearing on the question whether there is an office at all. The evidence taken as a whole leads to the conclusion that to start with there was no compellable duty at all but that if the plaintiff chose he might bring a horse and lead it. The mere circumstance that in the past a member of the plaintiff's family was allowed to do it is not a guide or a test for deciding whether what is claimed by the plaintiff is an office. The decisions relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents are all in cases where the right to perform worship in a temple or other religious institution was the subject of dispute. If the trustees or other persons in charge of a religious institution deny the right of worshipping to a member of the public who has a right to perform worship therein, then that member has got a right to have it declared that he is entitled to perform worship. These decisions are of no help in considering the question whether what is claimed in a particular case is an office or not. One test which is necessary to constitute an office is a corresponding compellable duty. That being absent in this case, we are of opinion that what is claimed is not an office but merely an honour.

The result is that this Letters Patent Appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts set aside and the suit dismissed with costs throughout. It follows that the memorandum of objections must be dismissed but we do not award costs.

All that he can establish is relationship through a female but there are nearer relations than the claimant. To prefer him to the nearer relations would be to ignore justice, equity and good conscience.

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—It would seem somewhat illogical that, while the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a permanently kept concubine is denied Sapinda relationship to the legitimate descendants of the putative father, two illegitimate sons of a prostitute or their descendants should be recognised as having such relationship between them.

The text of Yagnavalkya declaring that in the absence of Gotrajas the next class of persons who would take the heritage should be bandhus of the propositus (Yagna 11, 136) is a specific provision, which cannot be outweighed by analogical reasoning.

Leach, C. J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellant filed a suit in the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Salem for a declaration that an alienation made on the 4th February, 1918, by the fourth respondent, the mother of one Shanmugam, in favour of the father of the first, second and third respondents was not binding on the reversion. Shanmugam died in 1916 and the appellant claimed to be the nearest reversioner. The common ancestor was a Sudra woman, named Valliammal, who was a prostitute. She had two sons, Muthu Mudaliar and Palaniyandi Mudaliar, but it is not known whether they were born of the same father. There is no evidence at all with regard to their paternity. The connection between the appellant and Shanmugam will be gathered from the following geneological tree:—

Krishna
v.
Marimuthu
Mudaliar.

Leach, C. J.

It has been accepted for the purposes of this appeal that all the descendants of Muthu and Palaniyandi are legitimate. The appeal turns on the answer to the question whether Muthu, the father of the appellant, is to be regarded under the Hindu Law as an agnate of Palaniyandi, the great grandfather of Shanmugam. If he is to be so regarded, it is accepted that he will be the nearest reversioner. The alienee respondents deny that in law there was agnatic relationship between Muthu and Palaniyandi and say that the nearest reversioners are the four sons of the elder daughter of Kunjan, the son of Palaniyandi, they being the direct descendants of Palaniyandi. The District Munsif dismissed the suit. He rejected the appellant's claim to be the nearest reversioner, but as pointed out in the judgment now under appeal it is not clear whether he thought that the appellant was not an heir at all or whether he thought that the appellant must in any event be postponed to Kunjan's daughter's sons. He also held that there was no consideration for the alienation. On appeal to the District Judge of Salem it was held that the appellant was the nearest reversioner. The District Judge placed reliance on the decision in Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali. He interpreted that decision as meaning that the legitimate descendants of Muthu and Palaniyandi could claim the same rights as if the two brothers had been born of a lawful marriage. On this interpretation of the law and being of the opinion that no necessity had been proved for the alienation the District Judge decreed the suit.

The alienee respondents appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Varadachariar, J., who allowed it and restored the decree of the trial Court. The learned Judge did not accept the decision in *Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali*¹, as laying down the proposition that the sons of a prostitute are to be deemed to be in agnatic relationship, but merely declared that there was a heritable relationship between the two. He pointed out that to constitute sagotra sapindaship, there must be descent in an unbroken male line from a common male ancestor. In the case of the sons of a prostitute, where the father is unknown, it was impossible to trace the descent from a common male ancestor. Varadachariar, J., regarded Muthu and Palaniyandi as being cognates and consequently the four sons of the elder daughter of Kunjan were nearer in kin to Shanmugam than the appellant.

In *Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali*¹, it was held that the legitimate descendants of two sons of a Hindu dancing woman were under the Hindu Law entitled to succeed to each other. I agree with Varadachariar, J., that when the judgment is read in the light of the record it is clear, in spite of the general terms used, that all the Court decided was that there was heritable blood between the two sons. It is true that in their written statement the defendants in the case pleaded that there was a nearer reversioner, but this plea was not persisted in, and the Court had merely to decide whether one son could under Hindu Law succeed to the property of the other. The finding that there was heritable blood was sufficient to decide the case. There also the paternity was unknown.

The decision in *Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali*¹, was based on the judgment of this Court in *Mayna Bai v. Uttaram*², following a remand by the Privy Council. In *Mayna Bai's case*², the Court had to decide what rules of inheritance should be applied to the illegitimate sons of an Englishman by two Hindu women. One of the women was a Brahmin who had married but had separated from her husband. By her he had two sons and by the other woman he had three sons. The five sons were brought up as Hindus and lived together as a joint family. By his will the father devised his estate to them in equal shares. A suit was instituted by one of the sons of the Brahmin woman against his step-brothers for partition of the estate and for recovery of the share of his full brother who had died. It was necessary in the first instance to decide whether the brothers were to be deemed to be Hindus, and when the case was under trial the following question was submitted to the Pandit of the Court of Sudder Adawlut:—

"You are requested to state whether, upon the death of one of two illegitimate sons of a Hindu woman, the estate of the deceased by law devolves upon the surviving brother?"

The answer given was:—

"If the illegitimate sons referred to in the question were undivided, the estate of one of them would, after his death, devolve upon his surviving brother. If divided, it would go to him only on failure of the deceased's widow, daughter, or her son, or of the deceased's mother."

The Privy Council considered that question had not been properly framed as it did not embrace all the important facts proved or admitted in the suit which might affect the conclusion. The result of the appeal before the Privy Council was that the brothers were deemed to be Hindus, but the Board left the question of their rights to be solved by the determination of the class of Hindus to which they belonged and the rules of inheritance which existed in that class.

When the case came before this Court on remand it was held that the sons were to be regarded as Sudras, or as a class still lower, and that in the absence of preferable heirs they inherited the property of their mother and of one another. The Court recognised relationship merely through the mother as the following passage from page 201 of the judgment shows:—

"Certainly there are many passages of the text-writers which recognise the relationship of the son, irregularly begotten, to his mother's family. Yagnavalkya quoted in the Vivada Chintamani (page 823): 'A damsel's child is one born of an unmarried woman; he is considered as the son of his maternal grandsire'. This passage clearly recognises the mother and her son, irregularly begotten, as cognate; and the Mitakshara, quoting Manu (Chap. I, S. 11, cl. 7), points out that, if the girl is married, the child, although not begotten by the husband, becomes his son. The authorities already referred to, as to the son of concealed origin, also bear upon this point, and seem to show clearly that the Hindu law, although for obvious reasons not recognising as the husband's son one got by a man of unequal class, nevertheless gives no ground whatever for supposing that the circumstances of birth from illicit connection severs the union between the mother and her son, so as not to admit of heritable blood between them."

This opinion is emphasised in the following passage to be found at page 203 of the report:—

"Our reasoning, therefore, is that there is no authority against the existence of heritable blood between the woman and her illegitimate offspring. Tatkaram and his brother (the sons of the Brahmin mistress) are decided to be Hindus. They are the Hindu sons of a woman who was either a woman of a class lower than the fourth of Manu's classes, and in this case the sons are cognate to her and to one another, as the children of a class not twice born out of wedlock, and entitled to inherit to their mother, and only not capable of inheriting to their father, because he is not a Hindu at all. If not so, she is a mere prostitute, and of the cognation between her and her offspring there exists no doubt whatever."

The decision was that the sons of a Hindu prostitute by a non-Hindu father are cognate to the mother and to one another and therefore possess heritable blood. In the case of Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali, the father was unknown and the decision did not go beyond the question whether there was heritable blood.

In the present case, the Court is not concerned with the question whether the illegitimate sons of a Sudra father are to be regarded as agnates, and the decision must be confined to the case where a Hindu prostitute has sons but their paternity is not known. Valliammal was not a permanent concubine, but a prostitute, and there can be no presumption in such circumstances that the same man was the father of her two sons. As a person cannot be regarded as a sagotra sapinda unless he can trace his descent in an unbroken male line from a common male ancestor it is impossible to regard the appellant as a sagotra sapinda of Shanmugam. As the result of the decisions in *Mayna Bai v. Uttaram*¹ and Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali, the appellant can claim to be a cognate of Shanmugam, but this does not help him. Not being an agnate he would only be able to maintain the suit if he were the nearest male relation of Shanmugam possessing heritable blood. He is clearly not in that position. The grandsons of Kunjan stand between him and Shanmugam.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that it would be in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience to regard him as an agnate. This argument completely ignores essential factors. There is here the fundamental principle that a person cannot be regarded as a sagotra sapinda unless he can trace his descent in an unbroken male line from a common male ancestor, which the appellant cannot do. All that he can establish is relationship through a female and there are nearer relations than the appellant. To prefer him to the nearer relations would be to ignore justice, equity and good conscience.

2. (1864) 2 M.H.C.R. 196; 8 M. I. A. 400.

The appellant has asked us to hold that he should in any event be allowed to maintain the suit for the benefit of the reversion. He could only be allowed to do so on the footing that there was collusion between Kunjan's grandsons and the alienor or that the grandsons had precluded themselves from interfering. (*Rani Anund Koer v. The Court of Wards*¹.) This was not the appellant's case and he cannot be allowed at this stage to alter the character of the suit.

It follows that I consider that the case was rightly decided by Varadachariar, J., and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs in favour of the contesting respondents.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This appeal raises a somewhat novel and interesting question of Hindu law, namely, whether the son of one of two brothers born to an unmarried prostitute can claim to be the nearest presumptive reversioner of the other's great grandson in preference to the latter's paternal aun't sons who are atmabandhus according to Mitakshara. The appellant's learned Advocate contends that sapinda relationship and a consequent right to collateral succession between the sons of a Hindu prostitute and their descendants having been recognised by the Courts on the analogy of descent from a common male ancestor, the appellant must be regarded as a gotraja of the propositus and therefore a nearer presumptive reversioner than his paternal aunt's son.

In applying the general rule of succession that the nearest sapinda takes the heritage to, cases not covered by any texts, the Courts have no doubt extended the concept of sapindaship to relations outside marriage and legitimate descent relying upon the definition of a sapinda in the Mitakshara as one connected by particles of the same body. Uttaram¹, Narayan Pundlik v. Laxman Daji², Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraswami Mudali³ and Dattatraya Taty v. Matha Bala⁴.) But there are also other cases which have now established that even among Sudras illegitimate sons or their descendants have no right of collateral succession to the legitimate sons or descendants of the putative father, as no sapinda relationship as contemplated by the Hindu law texts can exist in such cases. (See *Krishnayyan v. Muttuswami⁵, Ranoji v. Kandoji⁶, Parvathi v. Thirumalai⁷, Shome Shankar Rajendra Varere v. Rajesar Swami Jangam⁸, Dharma Lakshman v. Sakham Ramji Rao⁹ and Zipru v. Bomiya¹⁰.) It would seem somewhat illogical that while the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a permanently kept concubine is denied sapinda relationship to the legitimate descendants of the putative father, two illegitimate sons of a prostitute or their descendants should be recognised as having such relationship between them. The texts of Hindu law laying down the rules as to inheritance undoubtedly refer only to relationships based upon marriage and legitimate descent and the recognition of the right of inheritance of the illegitimate son of a Sudra to his putative father is based upon special texts relating to that class of sons and do not necessarily imply the existence of sapinda relationship between them. Indeed, even within the sphere of marriage and legitimate descent the Mitakshara has limited sapinda relationship to specified degrees from the common ancestor, prohibiting its indefinite extension on mere etymological grounds which its definition of a sapinda might all too readily suggest. (See Ramchandra Martanda Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar¹¹.) It is however unnecessary in this case to examine how far these two lines of cases are reconcilable, for assuming that sapinda relationship can be postulated outside marriage, the question remains whether the appellant is also a gotraja within the meaning of the well-known text of Yagnavalkya providing for succession to a sonless Hindu, for, it is conceded that unless the appellant can bring* himself within that category he cannot claim precedence over bandhus who are mentioned as the next category in the text.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider the import of 'gotraja sapinda' in *Jadunath Kuar v. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh*¹, where after referring to an exposition of the term in *Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh*², they observed as follows:

"From this it is clear that in order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja sapinda of the propositus the plaintiff must satisfy two conditions, namely, (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common patriarchal stock and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males."

Again, in their judgment in the same case at a later stage reported in *Lal Harihar Pratap Bakhsh Singh v. Thakur Bajrang Bahadur Singh*³, their Lordships observed:

"Blood relations or sapindas may be related either through males or through females. Prima facie sapindas who are related through an unbroken line of male descent are gotraja sapindas, for by virtue of such unbroken relationship they must be of the same gotra. It will thus be seen that the two conditions which as stated in the previous judgment of the Board in *Jadunath Kuar v. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh*¹, must be satisfied by a person claiming to be a gotraja sapinda of the propositus, are not really independent but inter-related, for the first condition will ordinarily be included in the second."

It is thus quite clear that unless the appellant can show that himself and Shanmugam the last male owner are descendants of a common male ancestor, he cannot claim to succeed in preference to Shanmugam's paternal aunt's sons who as his atmabandhus will exclude any other class of bandhus.

The appellant's learned Advocate placed reliance upon the decision in *Mayna Bai v. Uttaram*⁴ in support of his contention. In that case it was held by this Court after a remand by the Privy Council that one of two sons born to a married woman living in adultery with an Englishman was entitled to succeed to the separate property of the other son on the ground that there was heritable blood between them. This decision however does not assist the appellant, for assuming that it is in consonance with the text and principles of Hindu law, it did not hold that there was gotraja sapindaship between the brothers in that case. The learned Judges observed at page 203:

"They are the Hindu sons of a woman who was either a woman of a class lower than the fourth of Manu's classes, and in this case the sons are cognates to her and to one another as to the children of a class not twice born out of wedlock and entitled to inherit to their mother, and only not capable of inheriting to their father, because he is not a Hindu at all. If not so, she is a mere prostitute, and of the cognation between her and her offspring there exists no doubt whatever."

This clearly shows the decision was based upon the existence of only cognate relationship between the two sons of the prostitute. The appellant's learned Advocate further relied upon the decision in Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali. But this decision too does not in my opinion lend any support to his contention. It merely extended the principle of *Mayna Bai's case*¹ to the legitimate descendants also of the illegitimate sons of a prostitute. In support of this extension the learned Judges invoked the principle of representation as laid down in Ramalinga Muppan v. Pavadar Goundans and reasoned thus at page 957:

"If it is once granted that Muthusami's son represents him and Muniappa's represents him, then it is difficult to understand how their sons could not represent Muthusami and Muniappa, respectively. If that is so then there is heritable blood between them and one line can succeed to the other line according to the principle of collateral succession."

It will thus be seen that the only question decided there was whether the plaintiffs were heirs at all under the Hindu law to the last male owner. No doubt, as pointed out in the judgment under appeal, it appears on a reference to the printed records of that case that the defendants, besides denying that the plaintiffs were heirs at all to the last male owner, pleaded also the existence of a nearer bandhu who would be entitled to succeed in the absence of gotraja sapindas. But the suit was dismissed by the trial Court apparently on the preliminary ground that the plaintiffs were no heirs at all under the Hindu law. On appeal, however, the appellate Court took the view that the plaintiffs were in the line of heirs and remanded the case to the trial Court for disposal on the other points raised. There was an appeal to this Court against this order of remand and this was the subject-matter of the decision in *Viswanatha Mudali v. Doraiswami Mudali*¹. It is thus clear that the question whether the plaintiffs could succeed as gotraja sapindas of the propositus in preference to persons who were his bandhus did not arise at that stage of the case and was not considered by this Court.

Sastri, J.

The appellant's learned Advocate finally placed strong reliance upon the observations in Mayne's Hindu Law (10th Edition), page 691, where the decision under appeal which is reported in *Ratna Mudaliar v. Krishna Mudaliar*¹, is noticed and criticised as follows:—

"The ground of decision was that he (plaintiff) could not be regarded as a sagotra sapinda of the last male owner as to be preferred to an atma-bandhu. But, when once it is admitted that two illegitimate brothers have heritable blood as between them and are entitled to inherit as brothers, their legitimate descendants will be governed by the ordinary rules of succession either on the grounds of analogy or on principles of justice and equity. The two illegitimate brothers cannot be said to be cognates of one another. They are therefore to be regarded as if they are agnate sapindas for the purpose of Hindu Law as between themselves, their legitimate male descendants being, of course, their gotraja sapindas."

This opinion is, no doubt, entitled to great weight as proceeding from so eminent a lawyer, but, with all due respect, I find it difficult to follow the reasoning. Almost the earliest case which decided that two illegitimate sons of a prostitute have heritable blood as between them and are entitled to inherit as brothers, that is, *Mayna Bai's case*², was expressly based, as pointed out above, upon the cognate relationship existing between them. Neither this nor any later decision based upon it, is therefore authority for the proposition that two illegitimate brothers cannot be said to be cognate of one another and that they are therefore to be regarded as if they are agnate sapindas as between themselves. As for the suggestion that grounds of analogy or the principles of justice and equity may be invoked to support the proposition, I can see no warrant for the application of the analogy of gotraja sapindaship to a case of this kind. Courts have no doubt applied analogies in deducing rules of succession in some cases, but their application can, in my opinion, be justified only where no provision is made either in the Smritis, or their recognised commentaries. It is a familiar rule of interpretation in Mimamsa that when a particular object is named as an eligible substitute for another which is not available, you cannot, on grounds of analogy, use other objects which might even better fulfil the purpose in view, for the use of the named substitute is deemed to be specifically enjoined. Here, the text of Yagnavalkya declares that in the absence of gotrajas the next class of persons to take the heritage shall be bandhus of the propositus. After enumerating the several classes of heirs, it prescribes:

"Of these, on failure of the preceding the next following shall take the estate of one who dies sonless. This is the rule for all classes." (Yagn. II, 136.)

The specific provisions of this text cannot, in my opinion, be outweighed by analogical reasoning. In the present case, there are in existence the paternal aunt's sons of the last male owner who as atmabandhus would take the estate according to the text, there being admittedly no gotrajas in the strict sense of the term. No use of analogy can therefore be permitted so as to affect this result. Nor am I able to see how it is in consonance with the principles of justice and equity to displace an atmabandhu from his prescribed rank in the scheme of inheritance, in favour of one like the appellant who, except by a fanciful extension of the term, cannot be described as a gotraja sapinda of the propositus.

I agree with my Lord that this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of the learned Judge of the City Civil Court is correct. The appellant sold the property to the respondent and S. 55 (3) of the Transfer of Property Act is clear and unambiguous. The mortgage deed, it is contended, is not a document of title, but no authority is cited in support of this proposition. Since the appellant sold the property to the respondent in the exercise of the power of sale conferred upon him by the terms of the deed of mortgage, the deed is clearly a document of title. The appellant must therefore surrender the deed to the respondent, however inconvenient it may be.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The order of the Court was made by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The petitioner in this case was a candidate at the election held on the 28th June, 1938, of members to the Tiruvallur Panchayat Board. For the sixth ward of the Board two candidates were to be elected. One of the seats was reserved for the Muhammadan community; the other was a general seat. There were two candidates for each seat and the petitioner was one of the candidates for the reserved seat. He was unsuccessful and he filed a petition in which he asked that both elections should be set aside. The successful candidates are the respondents to this petition. Before the Election Commissioner a preliminary objection was taken to the validity of the petition. It was said that in as much as the petitioner was asking that the election in respect of the reserved seat and the election in respect of the general seat be set aside he should have filed two petitions. The Election Commissioner accepted this contention and gave the petitioner the option of treating the petition as an election petition in respect of one of the two seats. The petitioner then filed an application to this Court for a writ of certiorari with a view to the order of the Election Commissioner being quashed. A writ nisi was issued, and the Court is now called upon to decide whether the rule shall be made absolute.

In holding that it was necessary for the petitioner to file a petition in respect of each election the Election Commissioner had regard to the fact that the Election Rules framed under the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, are drafted in the singular and that a deposit of Rs. 25 has to be made in respect of the costs of the respondent. It is true that there is no express provision enabling an unsuccessful candidate or a voter to challenge the election of two candidates in one petition, but it does not necessarily follow from this that the Election Commissioner was justified in refusing to treat the petition which was filed as a petition in each case. The petition averred that there had been impersonation and that the persons impersonated were the same in both the cases. Each voter was given two ballot papers. There were four ballot boxes and a voter had the right to put the ballot papers in whichever box he selected, but he was not allowed to put two ballot papers in one box. It is obvious that in this case it would have been convenient to have tried the two matters together. Under the English rules this petition would have been accepted but it would have been treated as a petition in each case. See Ss. 22 and 23 of the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, and S. 91 (3) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. We consider that there was no justification for the action which the Election Commissioner took. He could have treated the petition as a petition in each case and could have required the petitioner to make further provision with regard to costs. His decision meant that the petitioner was called upon to choose whether he would drop his charges against one of the two successful candidates, and for this there is no warrant in the rules.

We consider that the rule should be made absolute and the order of the Election Commissioner quashed. The record will be returned to the Election Commissioner to proceed with the hearing of the petition according to law. The petitioner is entitled to his costs.

In order to prevent such questions arising in future it may be desirable to effect an amendment in the rules.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The petitioner is the proprietor of the Udayarpalayam Zamindari. The respondents are the ryots of the village of Kaduvatankurichi which forms part of the Zamindari. They applied under S. 40 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, to the Deputy Collector, Ariyalur, for an order commuting the rent payable to the petitioner to a definite money rent. The respondents have for many years paid rent in cash but the amount has varied according to the nature of the crops raised. The petitioner contended that the application did not lie as S. 40 only had in view cases where rents were paid partly in kind. The Deputy Collector held that the application did not come within the section and accordingly dismissed it. An appeal followed to the Collector, who disagreed with the Deputy Collector and reversed his decision. The petitioner has now applied to this Court to reinstate the order of the Deputy Collector under the powers of revision conferred upon it by S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

S. 40 (1) of the Madras Estates Land Act reads as follows:—

"Where for any land in his holding a ryot pays rent in kind or on the estimated value of a portion of the crop, or at rates varying with the crop, whether in cash or in kind, or partly in one of these ways and partly in another, or partly in one or more of these ways and partly in cash, either the ryot or the land-holder may apply to the Collector to have the rent on the holding commuted to a definite money rent."

There are here five different categories, namely, (1) where a ryot pays rent in kind; (2) where he pays rent on the estimated value of a portion of the crop; (3) where he pays rent at rates varying with the crop, whether in cash or in kind; (4) where he pays rent partly in one of these ways and partly in another; and (5) where he pays partly in one or more of these ways and partly in cash. If the case falls within any of these categories the ryot may apply to the Collector for an order commuting the rent to a definite money rent.

Leach, C.J.

In reversing the order of the Deputy Collector and in allowing the respondents' petition the Collector was of the opinion that the case fell within the third category. It is said that he was wrong because the words "whether in cash or in kind", should be read as meaning sometimes in cash and sometimes in kind. To do so would clearly be reading into the section words which are not there and words which would alter the effect of the section. The section clearly says that a ryot who pays rent at rates varying with the crop shall have the right of applying for an order whether he pays the rent in cash or in kind. Instead of the amount varying from year to year or from crop to crop the rent should be fixed at a definite sum per annum.

On behalf of the petitioner Mr. Sitarama Rao has drawn our attention to the section as it stood before its amendment in 1934. Before the amendment the section was construed in the way he would have it construed now, but the amended section is differently worded and we can only construe it in accordance with the words used. It may not have been the intention of the Legislature to permit ryots in the position of the respondents to apply under this section. The marginal note reads "Commutation by suit of rent payable in kind". The marginal note lends some support to Mr. Sitarama Rao's argument, but the argument cannot be accepted. The intention of the Legislature can, so far as the Court is concerned, be gathered only from the words used in the section when the words are free from ambiguity. They are free from ambiguity in this case and we consider that the Collector read them correctly.

The petition consequently fails and will be dismissed with costs. We fix the Advocate's fee at Rs. 100.

Madras Estates Land Act (IX of 1908), S. 3 (11)—Rent—Government levying water cess—Landlord paying the cess—Irregular irrigation—Claim for recovery, by landlord from ryot of water cess paid to Government—Revenue Court—Jurisdiction.

It is well settled that when a Zamindar or landlord lawfully collects on behalf of the Government a payment for water supplied or taken for cultivation of land in the holding of a ryot within the estate, the charge in respect of that water forms part of the rent and a suit for recovery of that charge is one cognizable only by a Revenue Court.

Battina Appanna v. Raja Yarlagadda, (1917) 33 M.L.J. 355, followed.

Where, however, in the special circumstances of a case the charge in question was wrongly collected from the plaintiff, but there was no doubt that the real origin of the payment was the use and enjoyment of water and there was no doubt that the money was lawfully payable to the plaintiff, though the collection from the plaintiff (landlord) by the Government was irregular,

Held, that because the plaintiff bona fide paid a sum of money which was lawfully payable by the defendant (ryot) for the use of water and which was lawfully recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant, the sum recoverable should be deemed recoverable lawfully on account of the use of water supplied to defendant's land and it formed part of the rent and hence the Revenue Court had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the claim.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevelly in A. S. No. 453 of 1934 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Sub-Collector of Tuticorin in S. S. No. 175 of 1933.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question of the jurisdiction of a Revenue Court to deal with a claim by a landholder to recover under the Madras Estates Land Act a sum of money paid to the Government on account of water cess payable by the ryot to the Government. The appellant is the defendant who is a ryot. The suit was one of a large batch, in which various contentions were raised with which we are not concerned. For the purpose of the present appeal the essential facts are that the defendant had rendered himself liable to water cess for irregular irrigation of his land with water taken from a Government source. Under S. 1-A of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, the Government on 22nd April, 1914, issued a notification the effect of which is that irrigation cess due in respect of regular irrigation shall be recovered from the landlord, whereas irrigation cess due in respect of irregular irrigation shall be recovered from the ryot to whose holding water is taken irregularly. It is established that in spite of this notification the local revenue authorities continued to follow the old practice whereby all sums due on account of irrigation of lands within an estate with the help of Government water, whether the irrigation was regular or irregular, were recovered by the Tahsildar from the landholder and the landholder was left to recover from the ryot. Consequently the sums due from the present defendant though due in respect of irregular irrigation were recovered from the plaintiff and the plaintiff claimed these amounts as part of his rent, without any special pleading regarding the circumstances in which he had discharged his (ryot's) obligation.

Ponnammai
Nadathi
v.
Tinnevely
Swami Nelliappar, etc., Devasthanam.

It is argued for the appellant that though the money payable to the Government by the defendant for irregular irrigation was originally payable on account of use and enjoyment of water supplied or taken to the cultivation of his land, the money which the defendant has to pay to the plaintiff is not a payment for the use of water, but a payment in compensation for unlawful recovery from the plaintiff of a sum of money due to the Government from the defendant; that is to say, it is purely a claim falling under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act which can only be based on a proper pleading, showing the circumstances in which the payment was made and the reason for which the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant. The contention is that this being an ordinary civil claim under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act is not a matter over which a Revenue Court can exercise jurisdiction.

It must be conceded that this plea to the jurisdiction was not taken in the written statement as it should have been. But the appellant explains that the plaintiff did not set forth the circumstances in which this claim for irrigation cess was made and that as soon as the position was made clear the contention was put forward that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction

Ponnammal
Nadathi
v.
Tinnevelly
Swami Nelliappar,
etc., Devasthanam.

and a ground of appeal was taken in the lower appellate Court. In these circumstances, I think it is open to the appellant to urge this contention in second appeal.

Now the only question is whether the plaintiff's claim in respect of thirva jasti and fasli jasti which is in substance a claim to the reimbursement of the amounts collected from the plaintiff for irregular irrigation of the defendant's land, can be said to be a claim for rent within the definition in S. 3 (11) of the Madras Estates Land Act. The definition runs as follows:—

“‘Rent’ means whatever is lawfully payable in money or in kind or in both to a landholder for the use or occupation of the land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture, and includes whatever is payable on account of the use and enjoyment of waters supplied or taken for cultivation of land, where the charge for such water has not been consolidated with the rent payable for the land.”

I think it can be taken as settled by authority that in the ordinary cases where no rule is framed under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act an obligation is cast upon the landholder to pay irrigation cess with a power to recover from the ryot. Such a recovery is a collection of rent within the definition just recited. The Full Bench decision in Doraiswami Gurukkal v. Subramania Gurukkal, proceeds on the assumption that such a charge does come within the definition of rent. It is true that the question was not in issue, for it had been conceded in that case that the claim was one for rent. It is also true that Wallace, J., doubts whether a claim of this nature for water cess recovered from a landholder by Government can be treated as rent. But the only reason given for the doubt is the fact that the landholder is a mere collection agent for the Government and the learned Judge finds it difficult to see how what does not really go into the landholder's pocket is rent. With the greatest respect it seems to me that this observation overlooks the fact that the definition of rent expressly includes local tax, cess, etc., which are collected by the landholder, not for his own benefit, but under an obligation cast upon him by law. There is moreover an express decision in Battina Appanna v. Raja Yarlagadda to the effect that S. 3 (11) of the Madras Estates Land Act makes it clear that a payment for water supplied or taken from the Zamindaries rent and on the facts of that case there is no doubt that the payment in question was one for water supplied by Government in respect of which the Zamindar was a mere collection agent. I take it therefore as well settled that when a Zamindar lawfully collects on behalf of the Government a payment for water supplied or taken for cultivation of land in the holding of a ryot within his estate, the charge in respect of that water forms part of the rent and a suit for recovery of that charge is one cognisable only by a Revenue Court.

2. (1917) 33 M.L.J. 355.

Ponnammai
Nadathi
v.
Tinnevely
Swami Nelliappar,
etc., Devasthanam.

There is, however, the special circumstance in this case that the charge in question was wrongly collected from the plaintiff. It is clear that under the notification referred to above the Tahsildar should have recovered the cess due for irregular irrigation directly from the ryot and that, presumably in ignorance of this rule, the money was erroneously collected from the landholder in pursuance of a practice which was, at the time of the collection, irregular. Can it be said that this circumstance changes the character of the payment which the defendant is to make so as to render it no longer a payment for the use and enjoyment of water supplied or taken for cultivation of his land, but a mere compensation payable under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act to the plaintiff for in return for a payment made in good faith by the plaintiff under compulsion and on behalf of the defendant? I confess that the matter is not free from doubt. But on the whole I am of the opinion that the money which the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant must be deemed to be money lawfully payable on account of the use and enjoyment of water supplied or taken. There is no doubt that the real origin of this payment is the use and enjoyment of water. There is also no doubt that the money is lawfully payable to the plaintiff, for, though the collection from the plaintiff by the Government was irregular, it is clear that the plaintiff paid honestly under pressure a sum which was lawfully payable by the defendant and that the plaintiff has with reference to the terms of the Contract Act a lawful right to recover from the defendant. Seeing therefore that the plaintiff has bona fide paid a sum of money which was lawfully payable by the defendant for the use of water and which is lawfully recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant, it seems to me that the sum recoverable must be deemed to be recoverable lawfully on account of the use and enjoyment of water supplied to the defendant's land. I therefore hold that it forms part of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 4 (3) (i)—Newspaper left to trustees by will on trust to maintain its liberal policy—Surplus income to be used in improving newspaper—Carrying on newspaper in accordance with the trust—Whether an object of general public utility entitled to exemption from income-tax.

Where an assessment to income-tax was made on the income of a newspaper vested by will in trustees on trust to maintain it in an efficient condition, keeping up its liberal policy and devoting surplus income to improving it and placing it on a permanent footing,

Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that, as questions of politics and legislation were discussed only in common with many other matters in the newspaper, and as it was not made out that a political purpose was the dominant purpose of the trust, and as, further, the object of the paper might be described as the object of supplying the public with an organ of educated opinion, the carrying on of the newspaper in accordance with the trust declared in the will was an object of general public utility and as such exempt from income-tax under S. 4 (3) (i) of the Act of 1922.

Dictum of Sir Raymond West in Fatmabibi v. Advocate-General, (1881) I.L.R. 6 Bom. 42 at 50, approved.

There is no real distinction, from the point of view of "general public utility" between a school founded by a testator but charging fees to its pupils, and a paper founded by a testator and sold to its readers. While the purpose of providing the poor or the community in general with some useful thing without price or at a low price may in itself be a purpose of general public utility, yet if another object be independently in itself of general public utility the circumstance that the testator's bounty was only in respect of the initial capital assets, or had only to meet a working loss temporarily will not necessarily alter the character of the object of the trust.

Appeal under S. 66-A (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, from a decision of a Full Bench¹ of the High Court, Lahore, dated 4th June, 1935 (Young, C. J. and Addision, J.; Tek Chand, J., dissenting) on a reference from a Division Bench (Jai Lal and Skemp, JJ.), to whom a question had been referred by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, under S. 66 (2) of the Act.

A testator, Sardar Dayal Singh, died in 1898, having by his will declared as a trust that his "property in the stock and goodwill of the Tribune Press and Newspaper in Anarkali, Lahore, shall vest permanently in a committee of trustees," and that it should be "the duty of the . . . trustees to maintain the said press and newspaper in an efficient condition, keeping up the liberal policy of the said newspaper and devoting the surplus income of the said press and newspaper . . . in improving the said newspaper, and placing it on a footing of permanency."

An assessment to income-tax having been raised on the undertaking for the year 1932-33 by the Income-tax Officer, Lahore, the trustees presented a claim to the Assistant Commissioner for exemption from tax. The Assistant Commissioner having rejected that claim, the Commissioner referred to the High Court the question whether the income in question was exempt from tax under S. 4 (3) (i) of the Act. A Division Bench were divided in opinion, Jai Lal, J., holding that the appellants' income was exempt from tax, and Skemp, J., holding that it was not. The matter having been referred to a Full Bench of the High Court, that Court decided in favour of the Crown, and the trustees now appealed to His Majesty.

A. M. Latter, K.C. and H. W. Williams for Appellants.—It is submitted that the carrying on of the newspaper is an object of general public utility within the meaning of S. 4 (3) (i) of the Act of 1922. A consideration of the way in which the newspaper has been carried on in the past makes it clear that it has not been used for the propagation of a fixed policy such as might bring the case within the decision in *Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd.*² or *Bonar Law Memorial Trust v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*³. There is no question here of any dominant political purpose or of the propagation of some definite legislative measure as in *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Temperance Council*⁴. In so far as the newspaper deals with politics, it does so only incidentally in the course of supplying its public with enlightened information on all subjects of general interest.

J. M. Tucker, K. C. and E. L. Norton for Respondent.—The test of general public utility is hardly sufficient by itself under the Act of 1922 as a test of the question whether the object of a trust entitled its income to exemption from tax. But even if it were, that is a question of fact for the Commissioner, and not one of law for the Court. In any case, however, it is submitted, the declared object of the trust, as was pointed out in the Courts below, is the perpetual propagation of the political views of the founder, which cannot be considered to be a charitable purpose. Furthermore, the newspaper was and still is and will be run on ordinary commercial lines. It is submitted that, as was held below, it is not sufficient to distinguish it from other commercial newspapers that the profits were directed to be devoted to the improvement of the paper and not distributed to individuals.

13th June, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir George Rankin.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—The Trustees of the Tribune Press, Lahore, appeal from the decision given on the 4th June, 1935, by the majority of the Judges composing a Full Bench of the High Court at Lahore upon a reference made to that Court under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

On the 31st January, 1933, the Income-tax Officer, Lahore, for the year of assessment 1932-3 assessed the appellants to tax upon an income of Rs. 61,629, calculated upon the figures for the previous year. No question now arises as to the amount of the assessment or the computation of the tax. The sole question is whether the income of the appellants is not exempt from tax under the first clause of sub-S. 3 of §. 4 of the Act.

"(3) This Act shall not apply to the following classes of income:—

(i) Any income derived from property held under trust or other legal obligation wholly for religious or charitable purposes, and in the case of property so held in part only for such purposes, the income applied, or finally set apart for application thereto.

In this sub-section "charitable purpose" includes relief of the poor, education, medical relief, and the advancement of any other object of general public utility."

Sardar Dayal Singh, a Sikh inhabitant of the Punjab, died in 1898 having by his will, dated the 15th June, 1895, created three separate trusts, to be administered by three independent "committees of trustees". Two of the trusts were for the establishment and maintenance of (1) an Arts College, (2) a public library. The third trust was declared by the 20th and 21st paragraphs of the will in the following terms:—

"XX. That my property in the stock and goodwill of the Tribune

Press and Newspaper in Anarkali, Lahore, shall vest permanently in a Committee of Trustees consisting of the following members, namely:—

1. Babu Jogendra Chandra Bose, M.A., B.L., Pleader, Chief Court, Lahore.

2. Mr. Charles Golak Nath, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law.

3. Mr. Harkishen Lal, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, Lahore.

XXI. That it shall be the duty of the said Committee of Trustees to maintain the said press and newspaper in an efficient condition, keeping up the liberal policy of the said newspaper and devoting the surplus income of the said press and newspaper after defraying all current expenses in improving the said newspaper, and placing it on a footing of permanency."

By a deed of compromise dated the 1st December, 1906, whereby certain litigation as to the validity of the will was brought to an end, it was agreed between the parties thereto that "in case the Tribune newspaper should cease to exist or be impossible to exist" the property belonging to the Tribune Press should become the property of the Arts College trust.

Since the death of Sardar Dayal Singh in 1898, the trust in respect of the Tribune Press has been carried out, and the newspaper of that name has continued to be published. The profits of the press and newspaper have been assessed to Income-tax since 1918. The claim to exemption was first made by the appellants in respect of the year 1932-3—that is, in the proceedings out of which this appeal arises. The claim was made for the first time before the Assistant Commissioner, and, on his rejecting the appellants' contention, they applied to the Commissioner praying that on this point (and on another point which is not now in controversy) he would either accept their contentions or make a reference to the High Court. On the 20th January, 1934, the Commissioner referred to the High Court two questions framed in the following terms:—

"(1) Is the income of the Tribune Trust liable to be assessed in the hands of the Trustees under the provisions of the Income-tax Act?

(2) If so, is it not exempt under S. 4 (3) (i) of the Act?"

Upon the second question, which alone need now be referred to, the Commissioner having set out clauses 20 and 21 of the will gave as his opinion:—

"It will be very difficult to say whether the running of a newspaper is an object of general public utility, but the mere fact that income is used for the improvement of the paper is not enough to take it out of the category of a business concern."

The learned Judges of the Division Bench before whom the reference was first heard were of different opinions, Jai Lal, J., holding that the appellants' income was exempt from tax and Skemp, J., holding that it was not. The question was referred to a Full Bench, with the result that Young, C.J. and Addison, J., held that the income in question was not exempt, Tek Chand, J., dissenting. From this decision (4th June, 1935) the present appeal to His Majesty was brought, and at the first hearing—on the 22nd and 23rd July, 1937,—it was considered by the Board to be desirable that the powers conferred by sub-S. 4 of S. 66 of the Act should be employed to obtain further information. Accordingly by an Order in Council dated the 29th July, 1937, it was directed in accordance with the advice tendered by the Board:—

"(2) that the case ought to be remitted to the High Court of Judicature at Lahore with a direction that the said High Court shall refer the case back to the said Commissioner under S. 66 (4) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, first for the addition of such facts during the lifetime of the Testator Sardar Dayal Singh as may bear upon the proper interpretation of the expression 'keeping up the liberal policy of the said newspaper' in cl. 21 of the Will of the said Testator dated the 15th day of June, 1895 and secondly for the addition of such facts as to a compromise dated the 1st day of December, 1906, as may show whether the said compromise is binding on all parties interested in the estate of the said Testator."

There is now before their Lordships a supplementary statement made by the present Commissioner, Mr. K. C. Basak, who has carefully assembled considerable material explanatory of the direction given by the testator in the phrase "keeping up the liberal policy of the said newspaper", and showing, as their Lordships think very fairly, the nature and purpose of the trust. The first issue of the paper was dated the 2nd February, 1881, and contained an article entitled "Ourselves" which was a statement of the paper's aims and objects. Two years later (3rd February, 1883), a further article of the same character was published headed "Our Second Anniversary". Extracts from issues of the paper between 1881 and 1898 have been selected by the Commissioner and by the appellants to throw light on the character and policy of the paper in the lifetime of its founder.

The sole use which their Lordships are concerned to make of these materials is to arrive at a true construction of the trust, the testator having expressed his intentions by reference to a newspaper which had been published in his lifetime and to a policy the character and purpose of which must necessarily be collected from its previous issues. It is not necessary or relevant to inquire as to the manner in which the trust has been or is being carried out since the date of the testator's death. The question is the true nature and character of the trust.

No question here arises such as was dealt with in Brighton College v. Marriott, where it was held that the English Act as it then stood provided no exemption for profits of a trade carried on by a charity even if the carrying on of the trade was the sole and only purpose of the charity. In the letter of reference there is no suggestion that the income under assessment is not derived from property held under the trust declared in the 20th and 21st paragraphs of the will.

Their Lordships are not prepared to hold that the property referred to in these paragraphs of the will is held for the purpose of "education" in the sense of that word as it appears in S. 4 of the Act. Prima facie, therefore, the only question for decision is whether that property is held under trust wholly for the advancement of an object of general public utility. This was the view taken in the High Court by Tek Chand, J., who contrasted the wide terms of the exempting clause in the Indian Income-tax Act with the observations of Lord Lindley in the case of In re Macduffs, where after referring to a well-known passage in Lord Macnaghten's speech in Pemsel's cases, Lord Lindley held that in English law there might be some purposes of general utility which might be charitable and some which might not, the true test being the spirit or intention of the statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz. c. 4). Learned counsel for the respondent in the present case, while not apparently conceding that under the Indian statute the sole test to be applied to the object of a trust was that of general public utility, was willing that this should be assumed in the present case. He suggested that the question whether an object was of general public utility was a question of fact to be found and stated by the Commissioner, and not a question of law for the Court. Their Lordships, while unwilling to pronounce upon any matter which has not been argued before them, consider that the Courts in India might be misled if the Board appeared to cast doubt upon the view that the admissibility of a claim to exemption from Income-tax must be determined by the language of the special provision made by the Act in that behalf. They are also of opinion that the question whether a particular object is of general public utility, like the question whether a particular trust is charitable, is a question of law, though doubtless it is for the Commissioner to find and state any facts bearing thereon. [Cf. *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Temperance Council, etc.*¹] In the present case the Commissioner properly stated it as a question of law under S. 66 and answered it as such—indeed he put the point as being “whether the Trust can be deemed to be a charitable trust?” The importance of applying correct principles in such a matter is manifest by reason of the rule against perpetuity laid down as to wills in S. 114 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, and as to transfers inter vivos by S. 14 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. As to the latter, by S. 18 exception is made for transfer of property “for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety or any other object beneficial to mankind.” By a long course of judicial decisions following English authority an exception for charitable trusts has been implied or read into S. 114 of the Succession Act, and by S. 118 restrictions are imposed upon bequests for “religious or charitable uses.” And S. 2 of the Charitable Endowments Act, 1890, contains the same definition of charitable purpose as is given by the Income-tax Act, but with the addition of words excluding religious purposes.

It was considered by Jai Lal and Tek Chand, JJ., that on the question whether a particular object or purpose was of general public utility the true test is not what the Court considers to be beneficial to the public but what the testator considered to be so. In so holding they were following what was said by Chitty, J., in *In re Foveaux: Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society*². That case was on this point dissented from by Russell, J., in *In re Hummeltenberg*³ where it was held that, though the personal or private opinion of the judge is immaterial, nevertheless for a charitable gift to be valid it must be shown (1) that the gift will or may be operative for the public benefit and (2) that the trust is one the administration of which the Court itself could if necessary undertake and control:—

“If a testator by stating or indicating his view that a trust is beneficial to the public can establish that fact beyond question, trusts might be established in perpetuity for the promotion of all kinds of fantastic (thought not unlawful) objects."

Their Lordships are in agreement with this view and see nothing in the Indian Income-tax Act to discharge the Court of its responsibility in coming to a finding as to the character of the object of a trust—a matter which bears directly upon its validity. It is to be observed moreover that under the Income-tax Act the test of general public utility is not only applicable to trusts in the English sense but is to be applied to property held under trust "or other legal obligation"—a phrase which would include Moslem wakfs and Hindu endowments. The true approach to such questions in cases which arise in countries to which English ideas—let alone English technicalities—may be inapplicable was considered by the Board in *Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Ching Neo*¹, and it was well said by Sir Raymond West in an Indian case *Fatmabibi v. Advocate-General*² :—

"But useful and beneficial in what sense? The Courts have to pronounce whether any particular object of a bounty falls within the definition; but they must in general apply the standard of customary law and common opinion amongst the community to which the parties interested belong."

In the High Court stress was laid by the learned Chief Justice and by Addison, J., on the fact that the Tribune newspaper charges its readers and advertisers at ordinary commercial rates for the advantages which it affords. As against this the evidence or findings do not disclose that any profit was made by the newspaper or press before 1918, and it is at least certain that neither was founded for private profit whether to the testator or any other person. By the terms of the trust it is not to be carried on for profit to any individual. It cannot in their Lordships' opinion be regarded as an element necessarily present in any purpose of general public utility that it should provide something for nothing or for less than it costs or for less than the ordinary price. An eleemosynary element is not essential even in the strict English view of charitable uses (*Commissioners v. University College of North Wales*³). There seems to be no solid distinction to be taken under the phrase "general public utility" between a school founded by a testator but charging fees to its pupils and a paper founded by a testator and sold to its readers. The purpose of providing the poor or the community in general with some useful thing without price or at a low price may doubtless be in itself a purpose of general public utility. But if another object be independently in itself of general public utility the circumstance that the testator's bounty was only in respect of the initial capital assets, or had only to meet a working loss temporarily and not permanently, will not, necessarily at least, alter the character of the object.

The main objection now taken to the appellants' claim for exemption is on the ground that the Tribune newspaper, as its founder intended it to be carried on, would contain matter in the nature of political propaganda and would be devoted to the advocacy of particular legislative measures considered by its founder to be measures of reform. It is not suggested that the views or measures to be advocated were in any way unlawful, but even so the political character, it is said, prevents the trust from being held to be for an object of general public utility. Lord Parker said in *Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd.*¹ :—

"A trust for the attainment of political objects has always been held invalid, not because it is illegal, for everyone is at liberty to advocate or promote by any lawful means a change in the law, but because the Court has no means of judging whether a proposed change in the law will or will not be for the public benefit, and therefore cannot say that the gift to secure the change is a charitable gift"

And in *In re Tetley*², where the gift was for "patriotic" and charitable objects Russell, J., said :—

"But must every application of the fund for a patriotic purpose be beneficial to the community and therefore charitable? It seems to me that it is impossible to hold that. What is or is not patriotic is in many cases mere matter of opinion. Subsidising a newspaper for the promotion of particular political or fiscal opinions would be a patriotic purpose in the eyes of those who considered that the triumph of those opinions would be beneficial to the community. It would not be an application of funds for a charitable purpose."

Again in *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Temperance Council*³, Rowlatt, J., finding that the first purpose of the assesses was legislative temperance reform though the work was to be of a strictly non-party character, observed :—

"Any purpose of influencing legislation is a political purpose in this connection. Under these circumstances this is mainly a trust to secure a certain line of legislation, and if that is so I do not understand it to be disputed that that would not be a charitable trust. I think the authorities are clear upon it and I am not going to say anything more about it."

2. (1923) 1 Ch. 258 at 262.

3. (1926) 10 Tax Cases 748 at 752.

On the other hand it is to be observed that in this case Rowlatt, J., rejected, but only upon the facts, the argument that the purpose of the Council was temperance and that legislation came in in a subsidiary way. And in *In re Scowcroft*¹, the devise of a building known as the Conservative Club and Village Reading Room in a certain parish to be maintained "for the furtherance of Conservative principles and religious and mental improvement, etc." was held to be a gift for religious and mental improvement. Stirling, J., said:—

"It is therefore a gift in one form or another for religious and mental improvement, no doubt in combination with the advancement of Conservative principles; but that limitation it appears to me is not sufficient to prevent it from being a perfectly good charitable gift as undoubtedly it would be if it were a gift for the furtherance of religious and mental improvement alone."

Hood, *In re*² was a case where a testator had bequeathed his residuary estate for the purpose of spreading Christian principles and aiding all active steps to minimise and extinguish the drink traffic. On the view that the former was the dominant purpose and that the latter was subsidiary thereto, the gift was upheld even on the hypothesis that the latter purpose would not have been charitable in itself.

In *Bonar Law Memorial Trust v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*³, Finlay, J., had to deal with a college founded in connection with the Conservative party and after reviewing the cases above-cited held that the question was whether the dominant purpose was a good charitable purpose or not:—

"The fact that the education was entrusted to the Conservative party would not I think affect the validity of the Trust if in truth it was a trust for education; but on the other hand, if the true view is that the Trust was a trust for the promotion of Conservative principles . . . and that the education, the lectures and so forth were subsidiary to that which was the main and dominating purpose then the fact that the lectures and so forth would be educative would not be sufficient to make the Trust a trust for charitable purposes only."

Holding that the college was in effect an educational centre for the Conservative party and that this was in accordance with the trust deed, the learned judge decided that the claim for exemption from tax could not be sustained.

These English decisions are in point in so far only as they illustrate the manner in which political objects, in the wide sense which includes projects for legislation in the interests of particular causes, affect the question whether the Court can regard a trust as being one of general public utility. In the original letter of reference it was not suggested by the Commissioner that the newspaper was intended by its founder to be a mere vehicle of political propaganda, and in the case of Sardar Dayal Singh it seems unreasonable to doubt that his object was to benefit the people of Upper India by providing them with an English newspaper—the dissemination of news and the ventilation of opinion upon all matters of public interest. While not perhaps impossible, it is difficult for a newspaper to avoid having or acquiring a particular political complexion unless indeed it avoids all reference to the activities of Governments or legislatures, or treats of them in an eclectic or inconsistent manner. The circumstances of Upper India in the last decade of the nineteenth century would doubtless make any paper published for Indian readers sympathetic to various movements for social and political reform. But their Lordships, having before them material which shows the character of the newspaper as it was in fact conducted in the testator's lifetime, have arrived at the conclusion that questions of politics and legislation were discussed only as many other matters were in this paper discussed and that it is not made out that a political purpose was the dominant purpose of the trust.

They think that the object of the paper may fairly be described as "the object of supplying the Province with an organ of educated public opinion," and that it should prima facie be held to be an object of general public utility. Having regard to the particular circumstances of the time, the directions of the testator and the evidence as to the contents of the paper before 1898 their Lordships think that the present case is nearer on its facts to *In re Scowcroft*¹ than it is to the case of the *Bonar Law Memorial Trust*² or to the case put by Russell, J., in *In re Tetley*³ of a newspaper subsidised for the promotion of particular political or fiscal opinions. They do not think that in these circumstances the case can be regarded as outside the ambit of the exemption clause of the Indian Act.

It is not necessary to consider what the position would be if the trust declared by the will were for any reason to fail in the future.

For the reasons given their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and that the second of the two questions referred to the Court by the Commissioner's letter of reference dated 26th January, 1934, should be answered in the affirmative. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondent will pay the appellants' costs of the reference in the High Court and of this appeal.

S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, does not shut out statements which are admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. And the law in this respect is in no way modified by the decision of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana-swami v. The King-Emperor, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 756: L.R. 66 I.A. 66: I.L.R. 18 Pat. 234 (P.C.). Consequently an incriminating statement made by the accused to the Village Munsif which is followed up by the discovery of articles alleged to be connected with the crime at the place mentioned by the accused, is admissible in evidence.

The rule laid down in S. 1 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, "Nothing herein contained shall affect any special law now in force" is an application of the maxim "generalia specialibus non derogant". The rule contained in S. 27 of the Evidence Act is a 'special law' which is not derogated from by the general rule enacted in S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code.

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—The accused Subbiah Tevan has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Sundarammal. He has filed two petitions by way of appeal. In his statement made under S. 342 to the Sessions Judge he declared that the Sub-Inspector of Police P. W. 9 concocted the case against him because he refused to give him fodder for his bulls. In one of his appeal petitions he states that the case has been concocted against him by enemies because he was the principal witness in a murder case five years ago. In the referred trial the question for our decision is whether the sentence of death should not be confirmed.

2. There is no doubt that Sundarammal a woman of 60 was murdered in her field on the morning of Saturday, the 30th July. She was seen in the early morning when she set out for her field, by her daughter P. W. 5 who lives in the opposite house and by P. W. 6 her next door neighbour, and she was seen again by P. W. 7 in her field about 8 A.M. At midday her son P. W. 4 when he went to the field to take her her midday meal found her lying dead near the well. Her face and the front of her head had been battered in. There was blood on the ground there. It was clear that she had been murdered there. A blood-stained stone lay near the body.

3. The motive for the murder was clear. The right ear-lobe was torn and lacerated. The left ear-lobe was completely cut off. Gold mudichus—a kind of ear ornament—which her daughter P. W. 5 had lent to the deceased the previous day to wear when she went to a neighbouring village on a visit of condolence were missing. P. W. 5 and P. W. 6 say they saw these mudichus in the ears of the deceased on the morning of the crime.

4. P. W. 9 the Sub-Inspector reached the village at 7 P.M. He held the inquest early next morning. The blood-stained stones and earth from the place where the body was lying and the blood-stained stone with which the murder might have been committed were sent by him with other things to be examined by the Chemical Examiner and Imperial Serologist and were found to be stained with human blood.

5. There was no clue to the murderer. The scene of crime is 1½ miles from the village: the cholam crop in the field was high: the unfortunate woman had evidently been taken unawares and killed without the knowledge of anyone who might have been in the surrounding fields.

6. The accused is a member of a registered Criminal Tribe who was bound to report to the authorities when he intended to leave the village. He was absent and he had not made any report. For this reason and because he suspected that the accused might have had something to do with the murder, the Sub-Inspector left instructions in the village that the whereabouts of the accused should be reported to him. On the morning of the 26th August, P. W. 10 a relation of the deceased found the accused sleeping in his field and went off to the police station four miles away to tell the Sub-Inspector. The latter happened to be at Kurukkalpatti on the main road not far away and received this information at 12-30 P. M. He went to the village at once and to the place where the accused was, and arrested him. The accused then made a statement which is the principal evidence against him. He made it in the presence of the Village Munsif P. W. 11, P. W. 12 and P. W. 10. He said according to P. W. 11 and P. W. 12:

"I tore the earlobes of Sundarammal and took her mudichus. She raised an alarm I have kept the mudichus in my house. I shall produce them."

P. W. 10's recollection of this statement however is simply that the accused said:

"I have kept the concerned property in my house in a hole made for a rafter in one corner, and I shall produce it."

P. W. 11 and P. W. 12 also say that the accused stated that he had killed Sundarammal with a black stone so that she might not disclose the robbery. But that part of the statement is not admissible in evidence since it did not, within the meaning of S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, lead to the discovery of any fact. P. W. 11 the Village Munsif deposes that when the accused was making this statement he took it down in writing and the record of it is Ex. J. In Ex. J, the admissible portions are:

"On a Saturday, 26 days ago, in the morning my concubine Muthammal went out towards the south to gather cowdung. I followed her. Sundarammal was sitting at a place to the west of the well and to the north of the Kamalai pit. I suddenly cut the two mudichus from both her ears. (Then comes the inadmissible portion.) I left her at the same place, came to my village tied the two mudichus in a dirty white cloth with a green border and kept it in a hole in the southern wall in the south-eastern corner of the house in which I live. I shall take it and deliver it up. I should be protected."

Stodart, J.

Though the persons who heard the accused making this statement do not remember the whole of it, there is no reason to disbelieve the Village Munsif when he says that Ex. J is a correct record of what the accused said.

7. Following on this the Sub-Inspector and the accused and the Village Munsif and P.W. 12 and P.W. 10 and P.W. 13 a neighbour of the accused went at once to the accused's house. In their presence the accused took the jewels from their hiding place and handed them over to the Sub-Inspector.

8. That is all the evidence against the accused. It is plain, consistent and straightforward and has been believed by the learned Sessions Judge and learned Counsel who appears for the appellant has not attempted to show that there are any grounds on which it should be rejected. His appeal rests on a point of law. He contends that statements made to the police by an accused person after his arrest, though they may come within the meaning of S. 27 of the Evidence Act, are inadmissible under S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. S. 162 is:

"No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation shall be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made."

This section is clearly wide enough to include statements made to a police officer which would be admissible under S. 27 as constituting information in consequence of which some fact has been discovered. But it has been held by this High Court and by other High Courts in a long series of decisions that S. 162 does not shut out statements which are admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. That must now be regarded as settled law. Learned Counsel contends however that this settled rule has been abrogated by a recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, *Pakala Narayana-swami v. The King-Emperor*¹. We have examined that decision very carefully and we do not think that it disturbs the course of decisions of this and other Courts. In that case one of the questions at issue was the admissibility of statements made before arrest to a police officer by a person ultimately accused. The Privy Council held that such statements were shut out under S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Incidentally the Privy Council when considering the scope of S. 162 discussed a view which had been taken by some of the High Courts in India that S. 162 referred to statements made in the course of a police investigation by witnesses only and not by accused persons. And the Privy Council differing from that view—which I might observe has not been the view of this High Court—proceeded to make some observations relating to the reasons on which that view had been based. The principal reason was that if S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied to statements by accused persons it would amount to a repeal of S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. On this point the Judicial Committee observed:

"The words of S. 162 are plainly wide enough to exclude any confession made to a police officer in the course of investigation whether discovery is made or not. They may therefore pro tanto repeal the provisions of the section which would otherwise apply. If they do not, presumably, it would be on the ground that S. 27 of the Evidence Act is a special law within the meaning of S. 1 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that S. 162 is not a specific provision to the contrary. Their Lordships express no opinion on this topic."

9. The question therefore whether S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code has repealed S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act so far as statements made to a police officer are concerned has not been here decided by the Privy Council and we are not therefore debarred by this decision from following the rule laid down in previous decisions of this Court. We may observe that it has been recently held specifically by learned Judges of this Court that though S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to statements made by accused persons, nevertheless S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act is a 'special law' which is not derogated from by the general rule enacted in S. 162. See the dictum of Ramesam, J., as he then was in *Thimmappa v. Thimmappa*¹ and of Reilly and Sundaram Chetty, JJ., in Syamo Maha Patro, *In re*². The rule laid down in S. 1 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code—"Nothing herein contained shall affect any special law now in force" is an application of the maxim "generalia specialibus non derogant".

10. The statements made by the accused in this case on the 26th August being admissible in evidence we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the charge against him is proved.

He was absent from the village immediately after the crime. He was under a special obligation to intimate his absence to the police and did not do so. He stated that, at the place where the murder was committed, and at a time which is shortly after the deceased was last seen alive, he came upon her suddenly and cut her ear-lobes and took her mudichus and hid them in his house. That statement is corroborated by the condition of the ears as seen on the body of the deceased and by the accused's production of the mudichus from the place in his house where they were hidden. The man who cut the ears of the deceased that Saturday morning when the deceased was sitting near the well in her field—and the accused has admitted that he was that man—was in all human probability the man who murdered her. No motive has been proved against anyone other than the accused to murder this old woman. The only reason for her death was the need to silence her. That reason existed only for the accused. We reject his appeal and confirm his conviction for murder.

As for the sentence the extreme penalty is the only punishment appropriate for such a brutal crime. We confirm the sentence of death passed by the learned Sessions Judge.

Where a Hindu widow claimed maintenance from out of certain joint family properties and subsequently the parties referred the question of the amount to be paid to her by way of maintenance to arbitration, but the arbitrators in giving their award went beyond the terms of the reference and provided therein that she should not be entitled to an increase in the rate fixed even if circumstances changed and the widow acted on the award by drawing the maintenance amount at the rate fixed therein,

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellant is the widow of one Subbarayudu, who died in August, 1913. Subbarayudu was joint with his brothers, respondents 1 to 4. After the death of her husband the appellant went to live with her maternal grandfather and continued to live with him until his death in 1923. Shortly after her husband's death the appellant claimed the widow's right of maintenance out of the joint family property. The question of the amount to be paid to her was referred to arbitration. She was a major at the time and signed the reference, which is dated 25th April, 1914. The arbitrators gave their award on the 18th October, 1914, under which the appellant was to receive from her brothers-in-law by way of maintenance a sum of Rs. 42 per annum during her lifetime. The award also provided that the appellant should not be entitled to an increase in the rate even if circumstances changed. The rate was to be Rs. 42, no more and no less. Notwithstanding the award the appellant, after her grandfather's death, claimed to be entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 20 per mensem, to an annual payment of Rs. 25 for clothing and to a sum of Rs. 200 for residence and cooking utensils. She based her claim on two grounds:—(1). At the time of the award and until his death her maternal grandfather was helping to support her; and (2) the income from the joint family property had increased. The members of the family refused to accede to the appellant's demand. The consequence was, she filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam the suit out of which this appeal arises. The respondents pleaded the award and their plea was accepted. The appellant then appealed to the District Judge of Vizagapatam. The District Judge agreed with the decision of the District Munsif and dismissed the appeal. She then filed a second appeal which was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who considered that the decision of the lower Courts were right, but granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Venkataramana Rao, J., accepted the contention of the appellant that the award went beyond the terms of reference in that the question referred was merely the amount of maintenance to be paid without regard to the question whether the appellant would be entitled to claim an increased amount if circumstances changed, but he was of the opinion that the case fell within the decision in Brij Mohan Lal v. Shiam Singh. There the Allahabad High Court held that where an award has been accepted by the parties and one of them has received benefits under it he is not entitled at a later stage to challenge its validity. In the present case it is certainly not open to the appellant to raise any question as to the validity of the award. She knew of the provisions in the award and for fourteen years she accepted without question the amount given to her by it. That she knew of the terms of the award and accepted it as being valid is shown by Ex. III which is a receipt given by her in respect of the payment of the first annual payment of Rs. 42. The receipt reads as follows:—

"As my husband Subbarayudu, your undivided brother is dead, and as you are bound to protect me, the mediators who were chosen by you and me, have settled that a sum of Rs. 42 per annum should be given as maintenance by you to me. I consented to the said settlement. You have therefore paid me in cash this day a sum of Rs. 42 (Rupees forty-two) being the amount of maintenance for one year, from the 15th Margasira Sudda of this year to the 15th Margasira Sudda of the ensuing Rakshasa year. Hence the same has been received."

In the face of the express statement that she had consented to the award it is not possible for the appellant to contend that she did not accept it or that she did not know the terms of it. The District Judge has found as a fact that she did accept the award and this finding is conclusive on the question.

Kameswaramma
v.
Thammanna
Leach, C.J.

It was held in Mohanleswara Rao v. Durgambai, that a contract by a Hindu widow with her husband's coparceners to receive a fixed sum per annum for maintenance and not claim any increase in future even in case of change of circumstances was a valid agreement. If it were open to the appellant at this late stage to question the award—I hold that it is not—she accepted the arrangement embodied in it and this constituted an agreement between her and her husband's coparceners under which she was to be paid this sum for life without any right in either party to claim a variation, whatever change there might be in circumstances. From whatever point of view the case is considered the decision must be against the appellant. The appeal consequently fails and will be dismissed with costs.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover money alleged to be due on a mortgage executed by second defendant, the mother of the first defendant who was then a minor. Defendants 1 and 2 are Muhammadans and second defendant purported to execute the mortgage as the guardian of the first defendant. The mortgage contains a personal covenant by the second defendant, both on behalf of herself and on behalf of the minor. The property bound by the mortgage belonged originally to second defendant's husband, who in 1917 shortly before his death transferred it to the second defendant as guardian of the minor, directing her to discharge the mortgage then subsisting and waiving in favour of the minor the receipt of the balance of consideration. In substance this assignment (Ex. D) is a gift to the daughter, the mother being empowered to accept the gift on behalf of the minor daughter.

The then mortgagee and the jenmi both got decrees against the minor and to pay off these decree debts the mother (second defendant) mortgaged the suit property and another item to one Koru Panikkar purporting to act on behalf of the minor first defendant. Koru Panikkar eventually got a decree for the balance due on his mortgage and advertised the suit property for sale. It was to avert this sale that the second defendant executed the suit mortgage-deed and out of Rs. 800 which was the consideration, a sum of Rs. 746-14-7 was paid to Koru Panikkar in satisfaction of his decree.

The lower appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs cannot get a mortgage decree on the strength of a mortgage executed by the mother of a Muhammadan minor, as de facto guardian. This finding is undoubtedly correct in view of the decision of the Privy Council in the leading case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi. The learned Subordinate Judge held, however, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree on the personal covenants, not only of the second defendant herself, but also of the second defendant as guardian of her minor daughter first defendant. The first defendant appeals.

Kunhibi
Kalliani
Ammā.

The learned Subordinate Judge relies on the decision of Beasley, C. J., in K. Venkatarayudu v. A. Khasim Saheb where the learned Chief Justice held that the mother of a Muhammadan minor could bind the minor by executing a promissory note in renewal of one executed by the deceased father of the minor, for the reason that this was the proper way of meeting the emergency arising when a suit was threatened on the original bond. The correctness of this decision is doubted by Sir Dinshaw Mulla in his "Muhammadan Law", 11th Edition, page 268. The learned Chief Justice does not quote any authority in support of his decision and though he refers to the fact that the Privy Council in Mata Din v. Ahmed Ali left open the question of a de facto guardian's power of sale for necessity, his attention does not appear to have been drawn to Imambandi's case, which subsequently decided that no such power could be validly exercised over the immovable property of a Muhammadan minor.

Now the judgment of the Privy Council in Imambandi's case contains a very elaborate consideration of the authorities on the powers of a Muhammadan guardian or person acting as such. Their Lordships point out that an unauthorised person who happens to have charge of a Muhammadan minor can bind the minor only by acts falling within the second of the three categories enumerated in the Hedaya, namely:

"Acts arising from the wants of an infant, such as buying or selling for him on occasions of need, or hiring a nurse for him or the like."

Though the question of the de facto guardian's powers of borrowing was not actually before their Lordships for decision the whole question of the powers of guardians was considered and it must, I think, be taken as settled that the de facto guardian cannot bind the minor with a personal debt unless it can be brought under the category of 'acts arising from the wants of the infant'.

Can it be said that the act of the second defendant in borrowing Rs. 746-14-7 from the plaintiffs to save her minor daughter's property from the Court sale was an "act arising from the wants of the infant." My attention has been drawn to the case of *Mahmud Ali v. Chinki Shah*¹, where it was held that money advanced by a creditor to save a minor's property from imminent sale for arrears of revenue comes within the scope of "necessaries" in S. 68 of the Contract Act, the term not being restricted to the elementary requirements of the minor such as food and clothing. It seems to me that whether a borrowing to save property from sale or to prevent a suit from being filed is a borrowing for "necessaries" must always be largely a question of fact. But in the case of a Muhammadan minor, it must be remembered that the law does not contemplate the management of the minor's immovable property by any one other than the legal guardian. The mother or other relative looking after the child has a legal right to supply that child's personal wants and presumably for that purpose could pledge the child's personal credit. But when it is a question of a debt affecting immovable property, to permit the unauthorised person to bind the minor with obligations arising from a duty to save that property from danger, is in fact to impose on that unauthorised person a duty which the law does not recognise. It may be that in a sudden emergency, when there is no time to employ a more regular procedure, the mother might be justified in incurring a temporary debt binding the minor to avert a grave and unanticipated danger to his property. But I doubt whether any such obligation could be deemed one "arising from the wants of the infant" when there is time to adopt the proper procedure of calling in the aid of the legal guardian, if any, or of obtaining an order of the Court for the appointment of a legal guardian. In my opinion and on the facts of the present case, it is not established that the act of the second defendant in borrowing Rs. 746-14-7 from the plaintiffs to discharge the mortgage decree was an act done to meet a sudden emergency or that there was no time to adopt a legal procedure for binding the minor. In the absence of such circumstances, I am of opinion that a borrowing on the personal credit of the minor cannot be deemed to be an "act arising from the wants of the infant" and that such a borrowing cannot bind the minor's estate. I may add that the decree which threatened the minor's property was itself based on a mortgage executed by the second defendant as guardian of her minor daughter—a mortgage presumably subject to the same infirmities as that which forms the basis of the present suit. This is an additional reason for doubting whether the borrowing was really essential to the welfare of the minor.

Kunhibi
v.
Kalliani
· Amma.

Various contentions have been advanced on behalf of the respondent by way of showing that the minor's property can be held liable for this debt even apart from the power of the mother as de facto guardian to incur the debt. Firstly, it is argued that the mother was originally appointed as guardian by the father and charged with a duty of freeing this property from its encumbrance and that she is therefore a legal guardian. The case of Shaik Nawab Jan v. Safiur Rahmani, is cited as authority for the proposition that a Muhammadan father can delegate his functions as guardian. Assuming that this decision is correct it goes no further than to hold that a gift by a Muhammadan father to his minor child is not invalidated because the father authorises another relative to accept the gift on behalf of the minor. So much being granted, it would follow that the gift to the first defendant was validly accepted by the second defendant by reason of the authority conferred upon her for that purpose by the father. But this does not amount to the constitution of the mother as legal guardian for all purposes or after the father's death. If her authority is a delegated authority it will lapse on the death of the delegator whose legal powers pass on death to another.

Next it is argued that S. 68 of the Contract Act applies. This contention was not raised in either of the Courts below, as it should have been, depending as it does largely on matters of fact. But I think that it follows from the considerations set forth above that the materials available on the record do not justify a finding that this borrowing was necessary, though it was probably intended to be for the benefit of the minor.

Kunhbi
v.
Kalliani
Amma.

It is further contended that S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act applies and that the first defendant must surrender the benefit, if the contract is to be treated as void. With reference to this contention, it must be observed that this is not a case of a minor seeking as plaintiff to cancel a void contract. In the present case the plaintiffs are seeking to enforce a void contract or at least to use this void contract as a lever to extract from the minor defendant a refund of the benefit which she has received. The case of *Sinia Pillai v. Munisami Aiyar*¹ has been quoted as authority for the proposition that a defendant can be made to restore the benefit which he has received when resisting a suit on a contract not made with the sanction of the Court as required by S. 29 of the Guardian and Wards Act. But that was a case of a contract found to be beneficial and the decision expressly proceeds on the basis that the contract was not void but only voidable and the order to restore the benefit proceeded not on S. 41 of the Specific Relief Act but on general grounds of equity. My attention has been drawn to an obiter dictum of Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J., in *Hanumantha Rao v. Sitharamayya*², wherein the learned Judge tentatively raises the question whether S. 41, Specific Relief Act, would not equally apply when it is the defendant who seeks to cancel the instrument. It seems to me unnecessary to go into the question for the purpose of the present case where the defendant does not have to ask for the cancellation of the mortgage, but can merely plead that it is a void transaction which he is entitled to ignore. A minor whose property has been made subject to a void mortgage by an unauthorised person is entitled to ignore that mortgage and the mortgagee is entitled to claim no benefit thereunder in law, as against the minor. To hold that the minor as defendant to a suit on a void mortgage is bound to pray for its cancellation and to restore the benefit received, would be to give to the mortgagee a right to enforce his void contract by compelling the minor to pray for cancellation: that is to say, the person who has entered into a void contract with some person not authorised to bind the minor would be given a weapon whereby he could force the minor to honour the contract in part. This seems to me to be contrary to the maxim: "He who seeks equity must come with clean hands". I hold that there is no obligation upon the first defendant either under S. 41, Specific Relief Act, or on general equitable grounds.

By mistake a preliminary decree for sale instead of redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was passed and costs were ordered to be paid by all the five defendants to the plaintiff. When the decree-holder applied for execution for costs, the fifth defendant objected on the ground that the decree was preliminary and therefore inexecutable. The executing Court overruled the objection but on appeal by the fifth defendant the order was reversed on 9th July, 1926. In the meantime the costs were recovered from the fifth defendant. He therefore applied for restitution and it was ordered. But the decree-holder applied on 11th November, 1925, for amendment of the decree into one for redemption and for a temporary injunction restraining the fifth defendant from realising the costs ordered to be restored to him. An ex parte interim injunction was granted. Two days later, on 13th November, 1925, the fifth defendant in ignorance of the interim injunction, applied for restitution but the petition was returned on 18th November, 1925, on the ground that the order granting interim stay was still in force. The execution petition was not represented. On 8th March, 1928, the amendment of the decree was ordered and the interim injunction was also made absolute. A revision to the High Court against the order allowing amendment was dismissed on 23rd April, 1931. On 28th April, 1934, the fifth defendant filed a fresh petition for restitution.

Held, the petition of 1934 as a fresh execution petition was barred as made more than three years from 1924 when the High Court finally held the decree was inexecutable and his cause of action for restitution thereupon arose. The pendency of a revision against the order allowing amendment of the decree cannot save limitation under Art. 182 (5), as it was in respect of a collateral matter and not with respect to the application for restitution.

ut the petition of 1934 must be regarded as one in the nature of a reminder of as one for continuance of the petition of 1925, as no legal final order was passed on that application as required by Art. 182 (5). The order, returning the application to the defendant was clearly wrong. The fact that the application of 1925 was not physically in Court but was returned does not take the case out of the rule that when an order dismissing a prior execution petition is illegal or the prior execution petition was not properly disposed of, the execution petition must be deemed to be pending.

Held, further, that the equitable doctrine of English Courts cannot be allowed to prevail when the legal rights of a party to a proceeding come up before the Court for determination.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The main question raised by the appellant in this appeal is whether an application for restitution made on the 13th November, 1925, in consequence of an order passed on appeal on the 9th July, 1924, and returned by the Court on the ground that an order of an interim injunction restraining the applicant from recovering the amount deposited by him for costs was still in force is still undecided and should therefore be ordered to be proceeded with. Two more applications for restitution were presented by the appellant in 1928 and in 1934. They will have to be incidentally considered but as the facts which are going to be stated will show, the decision of this appeal solely depends on the effect of the order passed on the application presented on the 13th November, 1925.

A preliminary decree for sale instead of redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was passed by a mistake on the 8th November, 1922 and costs were ordered to be paid by all the defendants, who were five in number, to the plaintiff. The plaintiff (decree-holder) applied for the recovery of costs on the 11th October, 1923, but the fifth defendant who is the appellant in the present appeal objected on the ground that the decree was preliminary in character and was therefore inexecutable. This objection was overruled by the execution Court. The fifth defendant preferred an appeal against this order in which he was successful and the order of the executing Court was reversed on the 9th July, 1924. In the meantime costs which had been awarded to the plaintiff had been recovered by him from the fifth defendant who applied for restitution after his appeal had been accepted (C. M. P. No. 1257 of 1924). An order for restitution was passed by the executing Court on the 22nd January, 1925. This was appealed against but it was confirmed by the appellate Court. The plaintiff then applied on the 11th November, 1925, for an amendment of the preliminary decree and prayed that the decree for sale, which had been erroneously passed by the Court, be converted into a decree for redemption (C.M.P. No. 357 of 1925). On the same date he applied for a temporary injunction restraining the fifth defendant from realising the costs paid by him, from the plaintiff (C.M.P. No. 390 of 1925). An ex parte order was passed by the execution Court and an interim stay was ordered. The fifth defendant, apparently without any knowledge of this order, presented another application on the 13th November, 1925, asking for restitution but instead of keeping it on the file or adjourning it to a future date, a curious procedure was observed by the executing Court. The petition for restitution was returned on the 18th November, 1925, to the fifth defendant on the ground that the order granting interim stay had been passed and was in force. It is on the effect of this order that the decision of this appeal depends. The application for amendment made by the plaintiff was eventually allowed on the 8th March, 1926, and the interim stay was confirmed by another order on the same date. The fifth defendant made an application for revision against the order granting the plaintiff leave to amend but this was dismissed by the High Court on the 28th April, 1931. Before this revision was decided, the fifth defendant had filed another petition for restitution and had attached the application dated the 13th November, 1925, along with this application. This was again returned to him for compliance with certain requirements and was not re-presented. On the 28th April, 1934, a fresh petition for restitution was filed by the fifth defendant and I have to decide first whether this is within time.

Having been presented after about six years of the application made in 1928 it is apparently barred, but it has been contended that the limitation for this application started on the date on which the appellant's revision was ordered by the High Court to be dismissed. Applications for restitution have been treated in this Presidency as applications for execution and would therefore be governed by Art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. (See *Somasundaram v. Chokkalingam*¹.) The same view has prevailed in Rangoon and Patna. (*Muthukaruppan Chettiar v. Annamalai*² and *Pathak Bhaunath Singh v. Thakur Kedar Nath Singh*³.) It is true that the word 'appeal' occurring in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act has been held to include revisions, *Nagendra Nath Dey v. Suresh Chandra Dey*⁴ and if the order, in pursuance of which the application for restitution was made had been the subject of a revision in the High Court, limitation would have started from the date on which the final order was passed by this Court. This is however not the case. The first decree was held to be inexecutable by the appellate Court in July, 1924. This order was not appealed against and became final. The cause of action for making an application for refund thus accrued to the appellant on the date when the appeal was accepted in 1924. This was independent of the application made or order passed by the Court for amendment of the decree. If the order passed on appeal in July, 1924, were final and could not be affected by the subsequent amendment, the pendency of a revision petition by the plaintiff against the order allowing the decree to be amended could not possibly help him. The revision was in respect of a collateral matter with which we are not at present concerned. The contention that the starting point of the period of limitation should be the date of the order passed by this Court in 1931 on revision has therefore no force.

The question then is, if the applications made by the defendant-appellant in 1925 or 1928 are of any help to him. The application made in 1928 could not be of much use as the present application was made six years later. Moreover in view of the fact that it was returned for complying with certain

This brings me to the main question whether the application of the 13th November, 1925, should still be deemed to be pending as no final orders required by Art. 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act were passed on that application. This would depend on the effect of the order passed by the Court returning the application to the defendant-appellant in consequence of the interim stay being then in force. This was clearly a wrong order and it is therefore contended that the application should still be deemed to be undisposed of and thus held to be pending. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on a number of cases which lay down that in order to entitle a petitioner to treat an application as in continuation or one for revival of a previous application it should be found that the order dismissing the first application was wrong or that the first application was not properly disposed of. (See *Pattannayya v. Pattayya*¹, *Appavoo Nainar v. Lakshmana Reddi*², Ayisa Umma v. P.K. Abdullas, *Krishnakaminee Debee v. Gireesh-chandra Mandal*³ and Madhusudhan Kowor v. Girindra Narayan Singhab.) The principle on which these cases were decided is beyond controversy; but they have been attempted to be distinguished by the learned Counsel for the respondent on the ground that the orders passed on the applications were not only illegal but the applications were physically in Court. He contends that when the applications had been returned to the appellant either improperly in 1925 or when the application returned for compliance with certain requirements in 1928 was not re-presented by him within a reasonable time it must be considered to be non est in the eye of the law and cannot be taken advantage of by the appellant after the lapse of about 9 years. The contention is undoubtedly plausible but is there any warrant in law for me to give effect to it when I find that the Court was not justified in returning the application to appellant on the ground that an interim order for stay had been passed by it two days before? The application should have been retained in Court and any legal order that the executing Court might have considered to be proper and which it was competent to give should have been passed thereon. As it is, no final order was passed on this application as required by Art. 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act. In the absence of any legal or proper order I am constrained to come to the conclusion that the application although not physically in Court must be yet treated to be pending and undisposed of. There is no duty cast on a decree-holder to make an application to revive an execution petition and the application of 1934 must be in the absence of any such duty, taken to be a kind of reminder to the Court to take up his application for execution or restitution which has not been disposed of and to decide it according to law. I am fortified in this conclusion by a decision given by my learned brother, Madhavan Nair, J., and reported in Muhammad Abu Bakkar Maracair v. Ramakrishna Chettiari.

In the end it has been contended on behalf of the respondent that even if the application for restitution made in 1925 is considered to be pending up till now, the appellant should, nonetheless, be held to have been guilty of laches and delay and should therefore be held disentitled to make the application almost 10 years after the order was passed which entitles him to get restitution. Reliance has been placed in this connection on two cases reported in Sundaramma v. Abdul Khadar and Jagadisan Pillai v. Narayanan Chettiari. It is hardly necessary for me to examine these cases in any detail as I find that this question was not being considered in either of them. The observations in the first case were made in summing up the effect of a decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal, in which it had been held that the first petition for execution was not finally disposed of and that the subsequent application was both in substance and in form made with the object of reviving and carrying through a pending execution which was suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder. The facts in the second case were entirely different. No petition for execution was pending or undisposed of in that case and it was found that the decree-holder could have applied for execution at any time after

1. (1932) 64 M.L.J. 401.

2. (1932) 64 M.L.J. 664: I.L.R. 56 Mad. 490 (F.B.).

March, 1924, and the delay from March, 1924, to August, 1932, was:

"On account of his own negligence or laches and not to any defect in the decree or to any circumstances connected with the decree which prevented him from putting in an application for execution."

I find, on the other hand, that in the present case, the petition for execution filed by the appellant has not been finally disposed of so far and the interruption was not occasioned by any default or laches of the appellant. The interim stay was obtained by the respondent and it was in consequence of this stay that the application for restitution was illegally returned to the appellant.

Moreover, the objection as to laches or delay, based as it is on the equitable doctrine of English Courts cannot be allowed to prevail when the legal rights of a party to a proceeding come up before the Court for determination. It might have been different if the appellant were asking for an equitable relief. He is asking for a legal relief in this case and the only question is whether this is barred by the statute of limitation. There is thus no room in such cases for the application of any equitable defence such as suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondent.

In the circumstances the application made by the appellant in 1925 must be held not to have been disposed of and the application made in 1934 may be regarded either in the nature of a reminder or as one for continuance thereof.

The result is that this appeal must be accepted and the case sent back to the executing Court for disposal of the application made by the appellant in 1925.

In the peculiar circumstances of the case, however, I shall leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

The Judge or a Court carrying out the provisions of a scheme framed for the management of a temple as a result of a scheme suit, acted as a Court and not as a persona designata.

The Judge had power to appoint trustees to vacancies created in the office of trustees but no power to cancel the orders in the circumstances of a case, where certain other applicants sought review and cancellation of the orders already passed, on the ground of their having been misled by information of an entry in the B diary as to the adjournment of the hearing to some other date.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 224 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly dated 5th October, 1938 and made in O. S. No. 32 of 1913.

S. T. Srinivasagopalachari for Petitioners.

K. Bhashyam and T. R. Srinivasan for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly on 5th October, 1938, in O. S. No. 32 of 1913. The suit was a scheme suit in which a scheme was framed for the Sri Kailasanathaswami temple at Tirumanur. Under the scheme the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly is entrusted with the duty of appointing trustees to fill vacancies as they arise. The order of the lower Court shows that three vacancies arose in the office of trustee and the learned Subordinate Judge was moved to fill up the vacancies. The matter was posted for hearing to the 28th July, 1938, and on that date the learned Subordinate Judge passed an order appointing the present petitioners as trustees. The order, however, was not issued from the office. On the 1st August, 1938, an application was made by one Manikkam Pillai who had been a candidate for the office of trustee to the Subordinate Judge praying that the order of the 28th July appointing the three trustees should be set aside, that the matter should be reopened and the petition disposed of after hearing all the applicants. It was alleged in the affidavit filed in support of that application that on the morning of the 28th July Manikkam Pillai and some other applicants came to the Sub-Court, found that a Sessions case was going on and were informed (by whom it was not stated) that the petition would not be taken up that day. They were informed, he said, that the petition had been adjourned and posted to some day in August and therefore Manikkam Pillai and some other applicants left the Court at about 2 P.M. The Subordinate Judge, they learned, had taken up the matter later in the afternoon about 3-30 P.M. and had appointed the three present petitioners as trustees. On this application the learned Subordinate Judge gave notice to the present petitioners and on the 8th September, the learned Subordinate Judge decided to review his order of the 28th July and to inquire afresh into the matter of filling up the vacancies in the office of trustees. He therefore called for fresh applications and on the 5th October he passed the order against which this revision petition has been brought. In that order the learned Subordinate Judge purports to cancel the appointments of the three petitioners for reasons stated by him and to appoint the three respondents. The petitioners' case is that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to review or cancel the order which he passed on the 28th July appointing them as trustees. They therefore desire that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge should be set aside.

Lakshmana
Pillai
v.
Govindam
Pillai.

Learned Counsel for the respondents maintains that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was proper. He contends on the one hand that, if the learned Subordinate Judge was acting as a Court, he had inherent power to set aside the order which had been passed on the 28th July at a time when his clients were under a mistake or misapprehension. On the other hand, if the Subordinate Judge was acting only as a persona designata and not as a Court, learned Counsel for the respondents contends that his order is not liable to be revised. In support of his contention learned Counsel refers to the case reported in *Moharmani Kuer v. Bhankumar Chand*¹ and another case reported in *Sivarao v. Gangamma*². These cases, I think, are not parallel. The first is a case in which, owing to the omission of the Court's establishment, no notice was sent to one party and the latter case is one in which, owing to the act of the Judge himself, one party was not fully heard. In the present case it cannot, I think, be fairly alleged that there was any act of the Court by which the respondents or any other of the applicants for the office of trustee were misled. They do not say who informed them that the matter had been adjourned and would not be taken up on the 28th July. It has been stated that their Counsel looked into some rough B diary and saw therein an entry that this matter had been adjourned to the 23rd August, 1938. It is not proved who made such an entry or under what authority. If that was done by a clerk in the office on his own responsibility, that is not, in my opinion, sufficient to bring the case within the principle applied in the two cases quoted. With regard to the contention that the Subordinate Judge was acting as a persona designata, learned Counsel for the petitioners points out that in *Ranganatha Thathachariar v. Krishnaswami Thathachariar*¹, it was clearly held by a Bench of this Court that a Judge or a Court carrying out the provisions of a scheme decree acts as a Court and not as a persona designata.

The contention of the petitioners must, I think, be upheld. The learned Subordinate Judge had power to pass the orders of appointment which he passed on 28th July, 1938, but he had not, I think, power to cancel those orders in the circumstances of this case. As I have already stated, the respondents and the other applicants who went away on the 28th July were not misled or put into any disadvantageous position by reason of any act done by the learned Subordinate Judge or by anything which could be considered to be the act of the Court. When the learned Subordinate Judge appointed these three petitioners as trustees he conferred upon them, as the learned Counsel for the petitioners contends, the status of trustees and once they had got that status, they could only be removed by proceedings properly taken in the Court. It is not in my opinion possible to extend the inherent powers of the Court to cover such a case as this. Learned Counsel for the respondents contends that, since these petitioners themselves made applications to the learned Subordinate Judge for appointment after he called for such applications on the 8th September, 1938, they clearly acquiesced in his proceedings and ought not to be heard to object to them now. This, however, overlooks the principle that mere acquiescence does not confer jurisdiction which is otherwise lacking. This petition is accordingly allowed and the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 5th October, 1938, is set aside. The appointments made by the learned Subordinate Judge on the 28th July, 1938, will therefore take effect. The petitioners will recover their costs of this petition from the respondents.

I am informed that the appointment of treasurer has been filled but there is no dispute with regard to that.

Wills—Powers under—Necessity for strict observance—Authority to adopt to be exercised within 10 years by the widow—Adoption more than 11½ years after testator's death—Validity—Gift over of surplus income to charity—Validity.

A testator died having provided by his will that if he had no son by his widow, or if such a son died, she might adopt 5 sons successively (one on the death of another) the adopted son to be the owner of the estate. The adoption was to be, within ten years of the testator's death, of a son from among the sons of the testator's three brothers or of his step-brother. If it should prove impossible to adopt any such son, then, after ten years, and within the next two years, she might adopt a son from among the sons of other agnatic relations of the testator. The will then made provision for, inter alia, the maintenance of the testator's mother and widow, and for the payment of the surplus income of the estate for the establishment and maintenance of a certain charity, in the event either that the testator should have no son, or that such a son should die sonless, or that no son should be taken in adoption, or that such an adopted son should die sonless. More than 11½ years after the testator's death, the widow purported to adopt one of his nephews, and he died without issue a short time afterwards. It would have been quite possible for the widow to adopt a nephew of the testator within the ten years prescribed by the will. On a claim by the widow to be entitled to the estate as heiress of the adopted son who, according to the will, had been the "owner of the estate",

Held, (1) that it was established law in such a case that the authority to adopt given by a husband to his widow must be strictly followed; that, on the true construction of the will, the power given to the widow was to adopt within ten years after the testator's death; and that the purported adoption was accordingly invalid, it being immaterial that the will did not expressly state that an adoption of one of the testator's nephews after that period should be void, since the determining factor was, not what the will declared should be void but what was the power of adoption conferred by it, and since that power was expressly limited and must, as laid down by the authorities, and in accordance with the general principles applicable to powers, be strictly observed.

the testator's death, the gift over in the event of there being no adoption being severable from the gift over in the event of an adopted son's dying sonless.

Quære, whether, if there had been a valid adoption, the gift over in the event of the adopted son's dying sonless would have failed for remoteness.

(3) That, inasmuch as the right to receive the surplus income of the estate, after fulfilment of the requirements of the will, vested in the widow, and as the gift to the charity was contingent and could not carry that income until it had become absolute, the widow was entitled to the surplus income which had accrued during the ten years before the gift to the charity became absolute, and was entitled to an account accordingly.

7th July, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
Romer.

LORD ROMER.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal dated the 20th May, 1935, reversing the judgment and decree of the First Additional Subordinate Judge of Dacca dated the 17th June, 1932, whereby he had dismissed with costs a suit brought by the first respondent Srimati Purna Sashi Debi (hereinafter called the respondent) against the appellants and others.

The respondent is the widow of one Bhabendra Mohan Roy (hereinafter called the testator) who died on the 11th January, 1915, having made his will on the day preceding his death. He left a daughter surviving him but no son. He also left him surviving his three brothers (who are the appellants) and a step-brother, one Rajendra Mohan Roy.

Inasmuch as the questions to be determined upon this appeal are concerned with the proper construction and effect of the will, the material portions of it must be set out in full. They are as follows:—

"2. If no son be born to me of my loins or if such a son dies after birth, my wife Srimati Purnasashi Debi will be permitted, for the purpose of performing the Sradh, funeral rites and for offering water and funeral cakes to my ancestors, to take five sons successively (one on the death of the other) and that adopted son will be the owner of the estate, and will be, on attaining majority, entitled to take the estate from the hands of the Executors; and I grant her permission to take son in adoption as aforesaid. Before I gave her oral permission to take son in adoption in that manner.

"3 Within ten years after my death my aforesaid wife, in accordance with the provision mentioned in paragraph 2, will take a son in adoption from amongst the sons of my three full brothers or from amongst those of my step-brother Srijut Rajendra Mohan Roy. If it be impossible to take in adoption a son from amongst the sons of any one of them, then, after the expiry of ten years and within the next two years, she will take, at her own choice, a son in adoption from amongst the sons of my other agnatic relatives. In the absence of that or if that is not possible, she will take a son in adoption from one of my own Gotra or from a different Gotra. She will take the first son in adoption within twelve years as aforesaid. If the said son dies sonless, she will be entitled to take a second son in adoption even after the said period of twelve years. My aforesaid wife will be entitled to adopt five sons in succession, one on the death of the other, in the aforesaid manner.

"4. My full brothers, mentioned in paragraph 1, are my well-wishers and faithful objects of my love; and I have been living with them in Ejmali and in the same mess. My two elder brothers have been properly looking after and managing the estate even during my lifetime. Accordingly, I appoint my full brothers Srijut Bhupendra Mohan Roy, Srijut Prithwindra Mohan Roy and Sriman Hiranya Mohan Roy, Executors to the estate, after my death till my son or my adopted son or, if they die during their minority, till their sons attain majority. They will together, or in the event of the death, inability or absence of the one the others will manage and look after the estate. For the welfare or for the necessity of the estate they will be able to settle permanently, or in Putni or in Ijara the whole or any portion of my immovable property. They shall not be able to do any act detrimental to the estate; or to transfer or encumber the same. The Executors will perform the religious rites and duties of my ancestors and other festivities, according to their consideration and the custom of my family, the expenses of which will be borne by the estate left by me. They will maintain my mother, wife, daughter and others mentioned in paragraph 5, and pay their monthly allowance from the estate left by me. The Executors and their representatives will be bound to act according to the provisions of the Will of my deceased father Sudhendu Mohan Roy. Nobody will be able at any time to demand or take any accounts of income and expenditure from the Executors.

"5 My mother Srijukta Harakamini Debi, of whom I was born, will be entitled to maintenance out of my estate according to share, in accordance with my father's Will, and a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,000 should be spent out of my estate for her Sradh ceremony. My wife, Srimati Purnasashi Debi, will be under the care of my Executors and under the care of my son or adopted son when he would attain majority. She will be entitled to maintenance and all expenses for religious rites, pilgrimage, etc., out of the estate according to the circumstances of the estate and directions of the Executors. If my aforesaid wife be not on good terms with them, she will be entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 20 during her life and to a sum of Rs. 1,000 at a time out of my estate for the expenses of her pilgrimage, and she will further be entitled to live in a proper house in my residential homestead. My only daughter Srimati Binapani Debi is at present minor and unmarried. All the expenses of her marriage will have to be paid out of my estate in accordance with the custom of my family, and my estate will bear the cost of her maintenance till her marriage. If she lives at her husband's house after her marriage, she will receive Rs. 5 per month during her life out of my estate, and if she lives at my own house she will be entitled to maintenance out of my estate. If she be not on good terms with my heirs or successors in interest and if she wants to live in my own village, then my heirs and successors-in-interest should be bound to give her separate lands and houses according to the circumstances of the estate, and she will be entitled to a monthly allowance of Rs. 20 during her lifetime on account of her maintenance out of my estate; and she will be entitled to get proper sum of money out of my estate on the said accounts. If any other daughter is born to me, then she also will be entitled to maintenance, monthly allowance, marriage expenses, homestead and houses, etc., just like the aforesaid Srimati Binapani.

"6. My three brothers executors, will together or two of them or one of them will take the probate of this Will and will administer and manage the estate left by me till my son or grandson attain majority, being vested with all the responsibilities and power as mentioned in this Will and by paying off all the debts.

"7. If there be no son born of my loins, or if such a son die sonless after birth, or if perchance, no son be taken in adoption, or if the son taken in adoption die sonless, then the Executors or any of them or, in the event of their disagreement the Collector of Dacca will establish at my own native village Rawail, the place of my residence, a school or a charitable dispensary named after me and will spend the whole amount of surplus of my estate for its maintenance. To the above effect, being in full possession of my senses and in tranquil state of mind, I execute to-day this Will, being in Calcutta at 19, Hara Chandra Mallick Lane. Finis. Dated 26th Pous, 1321 B.S."

As already stated, the testator died on the 11th January, 1915. Ten years then passed without the respondent's taking any steps to adopt any one of the sons of the testator's brothers or step-brother. This was in no way due to any difficulty in finding such a son. It seems to have been a deliberate omission on her part. The learned Subordinate Judge has examined the evidence about this in some detail and has summed it up in these words:—

"So there is not only no evidence that the plaintiff even made any genuine endeavour to take any of her husband's brothers' sons in adoption within 10 years and failed, but there is evidence in the contrary direction that defendants 1 and 2 (i.e., two of the appellants) offered their sons for adoption to the plaintiff but she did not adopt."

On the 13th August, 1926, however, the respondent purported to adopt an infant son of one of the appellants. That the adoption took place in fact is not now in dispute. The only question about it is whether it was a valid adoption seeing that it was not made within 10 years of the testator's death. On the 24th November, 1926, the adopted son died sonless.

It was in these circumstances that the respondent instituted the present suit on the 20th January, 1928, claiming that the appellants as executors of her husband's will should put her in possession of the properties to which she was entitled at his death. She also claimed to have an account taken of the income of such properties. Her contention was that the adopted son had become by virtue of the express words in cl. 2 of the will "the owner of the estate," and that upon his death she became entitled to the estate as his heiress. As to cl. 7 of the will which contains a gift over in favour of charitable purposes in the event (amongst others) of the son taken in adoption dying sonless, she contended that the gift over was void on the ground that it was repugnant to the absolute gift to the adopted son contained in cl. 2. This was, of course, on the assumption that the adoption was valid. If that assumption proved to be ill-founded, she claimed to be entitled to the properties as heiress of her husband, alleging that the gift over in the event of no son's being taken in adoption was void on the grounds of remoteness and uncertainty.

The suit came on for hearing before the Additional Subordinate Judge at Dacca on the 17th June, 1932. He held that the adoption was invalid as not having been made within the 10 years limited by the will. He thought, in view of certain authorities, to which their Lordships will refer later, that the power to adopt given to the respondent was one that had to be strictly followed. He held further that the gift over in cl. 7, in the event which had happened of no son's having been taken in adoption, was valid in every respect. The result, as already stated, was that the respondent's suit was dismissed with costs.

The respondent then appealed to the High Court. The appeal was successful. It was held that the adoption was valid. Mitter, J., in whose judgment Rau, J., concurred, agreed with the Subordinate Judge that under the Bengal School of Hindu Law an authority to adopt given by a husband to his widow must be strictly followed. "No one", he said, "would quarrel with this proposition of law". But he thought that according to the true construction of the testator's will the authority given to the widow to adopt a son of one of his four brothers could be exercised at any time within 12 years from the testator's death. He said:—

"In our opinion on a reasonable construction of the will, even on a literal construction of it, the proper way to read it is to hold that there was no prohibition with reference to the taking in adoption of the nephews of her husband beyond the period of 10 years and within 12 years of the testator's death and by the adoption of the nephew within 12 years the wishes of the testator were complied with."

And a little later he said:—

"We have to see on the authorities whether there is an intention within the four corners of the will as expressing that the nephews are to be excluded beyond the period of 10 years. As we have already said that seems to us to be an unreasonable construction to put upon the will."

The adoption having been in their opinion validly made and the adopted son having died sonless, it necessarily followed that the respondent had power at any time thereafter to take four more sons in adoption successively. In order, therefore, to determine whether the gift over contained in cl. 7 of the will had taken effect by reason that the son taken in adoption had died sonless, it might be necessary to wait until the death of the respondent. What, then, was to happen in the meantime to the testator's estate which had vested in the son whose adoption had been held to be good? This question was answered by the High Court in the respondent's favour. They held that the estate had vested in her as heiress of the adopted son, and that she was entitled forthwith to be put into possession of it and to administer it. They considered that any other conclusion would be inconsistent with the Hindu law that the succession to an estate can never remain in abeyance.

It is, in their Lordships' opinion, established law that in such a case as the present the authority to adopt given by a husband to his widow must be strictly followed. In the case of Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal, the law upon the subject was stated by the Privy Council to be as follows:—

"All the schools of Hindu law recognise the right of the widow to adopt a son to her husband 'with the assent of her lord'. It is equally well established that this assent may be given either orally or in writing; that, when given, it must be strictly pursued; that she cannot be compelled to act upon it unless and until she chooses to do so; and that in the absence of express direction to the contrary, there is no limit to the time within which she may exercise the power conferred upon her."

Much to the same effect was said by Lord Buckmaster when delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Sitabai v. Bapu Anna Patil:—

1. (1906) 16 M.L.J. 174; L.R. 33 I.A. 55; I.L.R. 28 All. 377 (P.C.).
 2. (1920) 39 M.L.J. 106; L.R. 47 I.A. 202; I.L.R. 47 Cal. 1012 (P.C.).

"According to the Bombay School of Law the duty of a Hindu widow to obey her husband's command compels her to act upon any mandatory direction that he may give by will as to the way in which her power of adoption should be exercised."

Their Lordships so far are in complete agreement with the High Court. But, with all respect to that Court, they are unable to agree that in making the adoption of her husband's nephew more than 11 years after his death the respondent was acting in strict conformity with the authority given to her by the will. It is true that the will does not in terms state that an adoption of one of the sons of her husband's brothers or step-brother after the expiration of 10 years from his death should be void. That, however, is not the point. The question is not what the will says shall be void, but what is the power of adopting such a son that is given to the respondent. In their Lordships' opinion the answer to this question is plain. It is the power set forth in the first paragraph of cl. 3 of the will, namely: a power to adopt within 10 years after the testator's death. Their Lordships are unable to find anything in the will either preceding or succeeding this paragraph that can be regarded as in any way enlarging this power.

The power is expressly limited, and in accordance with the authorities and in accordance with the general principles applicable to powers the express limitation must be strictly observed.

For these reasons their Lordships agree with the decision of the Subordinate Judge that the adoption was invalid.

They also agree with him that the gift over contained in cl. 7 of the will in the case of no son's being taken in adoption was valid in the events which happened, and took effect upon the expiration of 10 years from the death of the testator. Their Lordships express no opinion upon the question whether, if there had been a valid adoption, the gift over in the event of "the son taken in adoption" dying sonless would or would not have failed for remoteness. For the gift over in the event of no son's being taken in adoption is clearly severable from the gift over in the other event just mentioned, and necessarily would take effect, if it took effect at all, at the latest upon the expiration of the period of 12 years from the death of the testator or the earlier death of his widow. In the events that happened it took effect upon the expiration of 10 years from the testator's death inasmuch as it was not impossible for the respondent within that time to take in adoption one of the sons of his brothers or step-brother.

It was, however, contended on behalf of the respondent that, even so, the gift over was invalid on the ground that, between the death of the testator and the expiration of the 10 years, the succession to the estate would be in abeyance, and that this was contrary to Hindu law. Their Lordships do not desire in any way to question this principle of the Hindu Law of succession. But it has no conceivable application to the present case. Upon the death of the testator any interest in his estate not effectually disposed of by his will would vest at once in the respondent as his heiress. There could not therefore be any abeyance of the succession. If the surplus income from his estate after making the provisions detailed in cls. 4 and 5 of the will had not been effectually disposed of, the right to receive such surplus income vested in the respondent. In truth it was not so disposed of, for the gift over of the residuary estate of the testator in favour of the charitable purposes mentioned in cl. 7 of the will was a contingent gift and would not therefore carry the income accruing before the gift vested. In these circumstances the respondent is entitled to have an account taken of that income and to be paid what shall be found due upon taking that account, and her suit ought not to have been dismissed altogether. It ought, however, to be stated in justice to the learned Subordinate Judge that this aspect of the matter does not appear to have been called to his attention.

In their Lordships' opinion the right course to take in all the circumstances is to discharge the decree of the Subordinate Judge and also the decree of the High Court except in so far as it directs payment of the court-fees out of the estate; to direct that an account be taken of the surplus income of the testator's estate accruing during the 10 years immediately succeeding the death of the testator; and to direct payment by the appellants to the respondent of what shall be found due on taking such account. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Their Lordships think that this is a proper case for directing that the costs of the appellants and the respondent both in the Courts below and of this appeal should be raised and paid by the appellants out of the estate of the testator.

Held, that the whole of the statement was not admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. The sole evidence relevant under S. 364 was that of the deceased's mother who stated that the appellant had accompanied the deceased before the alleged murder. Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Madura Division in Case No. 149 of the Calendar for 1937.

A. S. Sivakaminathan for The Public Prosecutor for the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Madura for offences under Ss. 364, Indian Penal Code; 201 and 202, Indian Penal Code. He was tried along with two others for the murder of one Mayalagan on or about the 5th of May, 1937. Mayalagan left his home on the morning of that day with the intention of going to Vellaikundram. His mother P. W. 4 says that the appellant came at the time that her son was starting and accompanied him. Mayalagan did not come back home and after some days his mother went to Vellaikundram and made enquiries about him and when it was found that he had not been to Vellaikundram she questioned the first accused, the present appellant. He told her that her son had gone to Madura. Search in Madura proved fruitless and when P. W. 4 again questioned the appellant he said that he had gone to Melakottai. She could not find him there and when she questioned the appellant a third time he said that Mayalagan had gone to Ayyankottai. These varying statements of the appellant made P. W. 4 suspect him and on the 29th of May, she made a complaint to the Village Munsif that her son was missing and that this appellant who had gone with him had given discrepant accounts of the places to which he had gone. The appellant was arrested on the 31st of May, and when questioned by the Sub-Inspector of Police, P. W. 11, he made a long confession in the course of which he described where the dead body of Mayalagan had been concealed. He took the Sub-Inspector and other witnesses to the place near Alagarkoil where there were borehole latrines and there he showed two borehole latrines in one of which a headless trunk and in the other a human head were found. It was impossible to identify the corpse since putrefaction had set in in every part, but along with it were found articles of clothing which were identified by the mother and sister of Mayalagan. It was also proved that Mayalagan had had his left tibia fractured in March, 1936, and that the left tibia of the corpse had been broken. It was therefore clear without the possibility of reasonable doubt that the corpse was that of Mayalagan.

Veerana
Kone,
In re.

Against the second and third accused, there was no evidence except the statement made by this appellant who alleged that he at their instance had persuaded the deceased to go towards the hills in order that they might kill him. He alleged that the murder had been committed by the second and third accused. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted the second and third accused but convicted the first accused of abducting Mayalagan in order that he might be murdered and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment for that offence. He convicted him also under S. 201 for assisting in concealing the body of Mayalagan and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. He convicted him also under S. 202 for intentionally omitting to give information of an offence of which he was legally bound to give information and sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The conviction under S. 364, Indian Penal Code, cannot be supported. There is no evidence of the commission of this offence except the statement Ex. K made by the appellant to the Sub-Inspector of Police. I cannot agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the whole of this statement was admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act. The preamble in which the appellant alleges that the second and third accused instigated him to take the deceased to the hills in order that he might be murdered cannot be said to have any relation to the discovery of the corpse in the borehole latrines. The sole evidence relevant under S. 364 is that of P. W. 4 who merely says that the appellant accompanied her son when he was going to Vellai-kundram. I therefore set aside the conviction under S. 364, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment. It is quite possible—indeed highly probable—that the accused did kidnap the deceased, but there is no legal evidence of it and therefore this appeal must be allowed in regard to that offence. The convictions under Ss. 201 and 202, Indian Penal Code, are correct. The sentences are not excessive; they are confirmed.

S. 69 (2) of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, should be read as being subordinate to S. 74 and therefore a suit filed by a firm to enforce rights which had accrued before the commencement of the Act could be maintained in spite of the non-registration of the firm. Before the Act came into force there was no register and a firm therefore had the right to file a suit without any formalities other than those required by the Civil Procedure Code and the Stamp Act and that right is saved by S. 74.

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The question which arises in this appeal is whether S. 74 of the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, which saves rights and remedies which existed before the Act came into force, should be read as being subordinate to S. 69 (2), which requires a firm to be registered before instituting a suit to enforce rights, or whether S. 74 should prevail. The facts are simple. The appellant firm filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Vellore claiming from the respondent a sum of Rs. 846-13-2 with interest. The respondent was in the employ of the appellant firm and was given charge of a branch office. It was said that he had withdrawn his account to the extent of the amount claimed. The defence was that the respondent was entitled to a share in the profits of the firm and that if the profits were taken into account there was no indebtedness. The firm had not been registered under the provisions of S. 58 of the Partnership Act when the suit was filed, but during its pendency registration was effected. When the respondent discovered that the appellant firm had not been registered before the institution of the suit he applied for leave to amend his written statement and include a plea that the suit could not be maintained by reason of the non-compliance with the Act. The amendment was allowed and an additional issue was framed. The District Munsif found that the respondent was indebted to the appellant firm in the amount claimed, but refused to grant a decree on the ground that the firm had not been registered before the plaint was filed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The appellant firm appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Vellore, who concurred in the decision of the District Munsif. The appellant firm then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Stodart, J., who also accepted the contention of the respondent that the suit was bad on account of the failure to register the firm before the suit was launched. The learned Judge, however, granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and the question now comes before this Court for decision.

S. 69 (2) of the Partnership Act states that no suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of a firm against a third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of Firms as partners in the firm. S. 74, however, states that nothing in the Act or any repeal effected thereby shall affect or be deemed to affect inter alia:

"(a) any right, title, interest, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act, or (b) any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, title, interest, obligation or liability or anything done or suffered before the commencement of this Act."

The question now under discussion arose in the case of *Girdharilal Son & Co. v. Kappini Gowder*¹, which came in the first instance before Pandrang Row and Venkataramana Row, JJ. Pandrang Row, J., having in mind the fundamental principle that existing rights are not to be taken away except by an express enactment or by an enactment which clearly expresses this intention, held that S. 69 (2) does not prevail over S. 74 and that a suit filed by a firm to enforce rights which had accrued before the commencement of the Act could be maintained in spite of the non-registration of the firm. On the other hand Venkataramana Rao, J., considered that S. 69 (2) must prevail and was apparently of the opinion that S. 74 was merely inserted in order to save a suit which was pending at the time the Act came into force. As the result of the disagreement the case was re-argued before Varadachariar, J., who agreed with Pandrang Row, J.

The opinion of Pandrang Row, J. and Varadachariar, J., is supported by the decision of Sulaiman, C. J., in *Danmal Parshotamdas v. Baburam Chhotelal*², the decision of the Bombay High Court in *Revappa Nandappa Hattarki v. Babu Sidappa Erandoles*³ and the decision of the Rangoon High Court in *In re Sooniram Ramniranjandass v. Junjilal*⁴. In his judgment in Revappa Nandappa Hattarki v. Babu Sidappa Erandoles, Beaumont, C. J., referred to *Girdharilal Son & Co. v. C. J., in the Allahabad case. In the last mentioned case Bennet, J., was not in agreement with Sulaiman, C. J. He preferred the decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Surendranath De v. Manohar De*¹, where it was held that S. 69 (2) would apply to suits for enforcement of claims which accrued before the commencement of the Act, if such suits were started after S. 69 (2) had come into operation. The Calcutta High Court laid great stress on the provision in the Act that S. 69 (2) should not come into operation until twelve months after the rest of the Act had come into force. The Calcutta decision has been followed by the Patna High Court in Shasad Khan v. Darbar Babu Kuchhi, and by the Lahore High Court in *Krishan Lal Ram Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan*², but the judgments in those cases do not carry the matter any further. The majority decision of this Court in *Girdharilal Son & Co. v. Kappin Gowder*³ is binding on us and the matter could be left there, but as it has been suggested that we should refer the question to a Full Bench I will set out our reasons for agreeing with it.

There is no ambiguity in the wording of S. 74. It says definitely that nothing in the Act shall affect or be deemed to affect any right, title, interest, obligation or liability acquired or accrued before the commencement of the Act and that the Act shall not affect any legal proceeding in respect of any such right, title, interest, obligation or liability or any thing done or suffered before the commencement of the Act. Therefore the rights and remedies which accrued before the commencement of the Act are left entirely untouched. Before the Act came into force there was no register and a firm therefore had the right to file a suit without any formalities other than those required by the Code of Civil Procedure and the Stamp Act. In the Calcutta case *Surendranath De v. Manohar De*¹, it was suggested that the words "before the commencement of this Act" should be read in conjunction with the words "any legal proceeding or remedy", but in our opinion to do this would be doing violence to the wording of the section. The section is a saving section and if effect is to be given to the words used S. 69 (2) cannot apply in a case like the one before us.

Having indicated our opinion on the question of law the learned Advocate for the respondent suggested that we should send the case back to the Subordinate Judge for his finding on the issue as to the amount due to the appellant firm. This suggestion cannot be accepted. The District Munsif's findings of fact were not challenged before the Subordinate Judge. The appeal was confined to the question of law, and the respondent must therefore be deemed to have accepted the findings of the District Munsif. The Subordinate Judge has stated in his judgment that the respondent did not seem to have any real case on the merits and had not attacked the findings of the District Munsif. It is now too late to do so. The District Munsif has found that the appellant firm was entitled to a sum of Rs. 846-13-2 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the 7th March, 1934. Therefore there will be a decree in favour of the appellant firm for this amount with interest at the agreed rate from the date just mentioned to the date of the judgment of the District Munsif, namely, 27th March, 1935, with further interest at the Court rate on the decretal amount from that date until payment or realisation. The appellant firm will also be entitled to costs throughout on the principal amount.

hands, then that money may cease to be a part of the unpaid purchase price and may become a debt payable only to the creditor in respect of which there can be no occasion for a lien in favour of the vendor. But when there is no privity between the vendee and the creditor who is to be paid off, the money in the hands of the vendee, whatever be the purpose for which it is retained, remains in fact money at the disposition of the vendor who can presumably countermand the instructions given to the vendee as to the disposal of that fund. It is therefore the vendor's money in respect of which he is entitled to the statutory lien and he can enforce that right as against a purchaser of the property with notice.

K. Sanjiva Kamath and K. P. Sarvothama Rao for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order making absolute an attachment of a vendor's lien in execution of a mortgage decree. The appellant is the transferee from the original vendee. There were three items sold two of which were covered by a mortgage. The vendee retained with himself a sum of money sufficient to discharge the mortgage and the interest thereon. He did not discharge the mortgage but sold the three properties to the present appellant, the transfer also reciting the fact that money had been retained for the discharge of the mortgage. The appellant also did not discharge the mortgage. Consequently the mortgagee has sued thereon and in execution of his mortgage decree the two items actually covered by the mortgage have been sold. The mortgagee is now seeking to recover the balance due under the mortgage decree by attachment and sale of the original mortgagor's lien as vendor over the third item which was no part of the mortgaged property.

It is contended that when a vendee retains in his hands part of the purchase price for payment to a mortgagee of a portion of the property sold, the vendor's lien does not exist. The only authority quoted in support of this proposition is an Oudh case which relies on the decision in Abdulla Beary v.

Mammah Beary, which itself has been overruled by the Full Bench in Sivasubramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyars. It seems to me a self-evident proposition that the statutory lien created under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act must operate to the extent to which there is any portion of the purchase money lying unpaid in the hands of the vendee or his transferee with notice. If there is a novation or a direct undertaking between the vendee and the creditor for the payment to the latter of the money retained in the vendee's hands, then that money may cease to be a part of the unpaid purchase price and may become a debt payable only to the creditor in respect of which there can obviously be no occasion for a lien in favour of the vendor. But when there is no privity between the vendee and the creditor who is to be paid off, the money in the hands of the vendee, whatever be the purpose for which it is retained, remains in fact money at the disposition of the vendor who can presumably countermand the instructions given to the vendee as to the disposal of that fund. It is therefore the vendor's money in respect of which he is entitled to the statutory lien.

krishna
v.
Narasimha Kamath.

There can be no doubt that in the present case the appellant purchased the property with full notice of the liability undertaken by the original vendee. He cannot therefore resist the attachment of the vendor's right.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

A reading of S. 20 of the Act IV of 1938 by itself indicates clearly that the only question which arises under that section is a question between the executing Court and the applicant and not a question between the parties to the decree.

A Court to which an application under S. 20 is made is perfectly competent to stay execution proceedings without notice to the decree-holder, if it is satisfied prima facie that the applicant is a person entitled to the benefits of the Act. This is indicated by the proviso to S. 20, which is that, if the judgment-debtor does not make an application under S. 19 within sixty days or if his application is made and rejected, the Court proceeds with the execution of the decree.

An order passed therefore refusing stay of execution is not an appealable order under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where it was shown beyond possibility of dispute that the applicant under the Act had not within the two years immediately preceding 1st October, 1937, been assessed to property or house-tax under the Madras District Municipalities Act on a property of the annual rental value of not less than Rs. 600 but it was shown on the other hand that he was only assessed to property-tax on property of annual rental value much less than Rs. 600, and never had been assessed to property-tax on any property within the jurisdiction of the Court entertaining his present application.

Held, that the proviso to S. 3 of the Act does not exclude those, who, though liable to property-tax, have for some reason or other escaped assessment.

A person cannot be 'assessed' unless the assessment is made in his name.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur dated the 6th day of October, 1938, and made in E. A. No. 188 of 1938 in O. S. No. 30 of 1924 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore and petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur dated the 6th day of October, 1938, and made in E. A. No. 188 of 1938 in O. S. No. 30 of 1924 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore.

Burn, J.—This appeal and this revision petition are both preferred from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur passed on E. A. No. 188 of 1938 in O. S. No. 30 of 1924 on the file of the Tanjore Sub-Court. The application was made to the learned Subordinate Judge by the appellant, who was the second defendant in the suit, under S. 20 of Madras Act IV of 1938, for stay of execution of the decree. S. 20 of Madras Act IV of 1938 says that:

"Every Court executing a decree passed against a person entitled to the benefits of this Act shall, on application, stay the proceedings until the Court which passed the decree has passed orders on an application made or to be made under S. 19."

S. 19 provides for an application by a judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist to the Court which passed the decree for scaling down the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has held an inquiry in order to ascertain whether the second defendant who made the application under S. 20 was "a person entitled to the benefits of this Act" and after taking evidence on the point he has decided this question unfavourably to the second defendant. He therefore dismissed the application to stay the proceedings. The second defendant has appealed from this decision and has also put in a revision petition.

With regard to the appeal, we are clearly of opinion that no appeal lies in this case. The question which is raised in an application under S. 20 of Madras Act IV of 1938, according to Mr. Venkatachari who appears for the appellant, must be considered to be a question under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, since it relates to stay of execution, and there are many decisions that questions regarding stay of execution are questions regarding execution. We find ourselves unable to accept this view. The question raised under S. 20 is, we think, not a question between the parties to the decree at all. As we have already indicated, S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938 provides for the application of the judgment-debtor for the scaling down of the decree and S. 20 we consider to be a provision merely ancillary to S. 19. It was intended, we think, to make it possible for the judgment-debtor against whom execution was proceeding in a Court different from that which passed the decree to get the execution proceedings stayed until the Court which passed the decree could decide upon his application under S. 19. We see no reason to differ from our learned brother Wadsworth, J., who held in his decision of C.R.P. No. 1520 of 1938 that the Court to which an application is made under S. 20 must decide whether the person making the application is a person entitled to the benefits of the Act or not. But we think that the inquiry contemplated by S. 20 is an inquiry of a summary kind and that all that is necessary is that the applicant should show the Court that prima facie he is entitled to the benefits of the Act. A reading of S. 20 by itself seems to us to indicate clearly that the only question which
